"During my stay I visited Harlem . . .; it is one of the pleasantest suburbs of the capital, from which it is separated by the Harlem River. . . . I crossed the river by the fine, modern stone bridge, of many arches, the design of which does great credit to its architect. . . ."—Pairpoint, Uncle Sam and his Country (London, 1857), 25–35, 122–25.

". . . Hardly one of the landmarks of fifteen years ago [in Broadway] remains; the Hospital, with its greenery, St. Paul's and the Astor, with the Museum, the City Hall, the Stuyvesant Institute, and one or two more such cumbrous bits of antiquity remain to matronize the young new comers, . . . —

". . . Eight years ago [see My 21, 1846] Trinity Church was finished, and in spite of all its defects, it was a valuable gift to the city. It took the place of a meagre, ugly structure, far inferior in its proportions and attractiveness to its two chapels, 'St. Paul's' and 'St. John's,' whose spires have never been surpassed by any structures of the kind in the country. (The Park Street Church, in Boston, Mass., has a very beautiful spire, well worthy of distinguished mention.) It has cost a very large sum of money, and if it had only been allowed to cost a little more, so that the whole interior could have been constructed of stone, instead of plaster, it would have effected infinitely more good for the community. . . .

"Below Prince Street, there is now scarcely a single private residence. Many of the buildings that were formerly dwelling-houses remain, with their lower stories converted into shops and the upper rooms devoted to lodgers, or occupied by the owners of the establishments below; but every year removes many of these buildings and fills their places with new and fashionable structures of stone or marble.

"As a general rule, the finest buildings are on the west side of the street, called the dollar side, in contradistinction to the eastern, which is called the shilling side. . . .

"Above Prince street, the dwelling houses are not entirely rooted out, although there are but a few elegant residences left by the hand of improvement. But the waves are rising in that quarter also, and stately shops have begun to appear quite thickly, even between Waverly Place and Tenth street. Sometime ago, they showed themselves between Tenth street and Union Square, and it cannot be doubted, that in ten years, a dwelling-house will be as

1854 rare a sight in Broadway, as a wholesale grocer's shop in Fifth — Avenue.

". . . If the back of the City Hall is cheap freestone, because unimaginative Aldermen thought it never would be seen [It was so constructed as a measure of economy, and for no other reason.—See summary of 1803 et seq.], so also the side of [the] Metropolitan Hotel is brick, because nobody ever goes into Prince Street; and Mr. Renwick puts a wooden cornice, and wooden ornaments painted white, on his La Farge Hotel, because no one will ever find it out, and a wooden spire on Grace Church because it saves a little money, and a fresh coat of paint makes marble of it any day. . . ." —The U. S. Illustrated (n. d.), by Chas. A. Dana, the volume describing "The East; or, The Seaboard States," pp. 156–57, 159. (The Lib. of Cong. catalogue assigns the date 1853 to this work, with query; but the reference, supra, to the completion of Trinity Church "eight years ago" would place the date of Dana's text in 1854.)

— "From 1854 to 1856 the Board [N. Y. Stock and Exchange Board] occupied the top floor of the old Corn Exchange Bank building, which stood on the corner of William and Beaver Streets, on the site of the present [1894] building of the same name."—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 37.

— In this year, the Five Points House of Industry was incorporated, on the application of 30 prominent citizens of New York. —Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, 633; King's Handbook (1893), 422–23.

— In this year, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor continued its studies in behalf of better tenements (see Je 13, 1853), comparing the number of deaths in each ward with the wealth, population, character of the dwellings, and proportion of foreign to native element. It made a minute economic and statistical examination of the Eleventh Ward—the first scientific sociological study of conditions in New York City. It also organized "The Workmen's Home Association" for the purpose of "erecting one or more model tenement houses for the laboring classes in order to solve the problem of providing commodious and well ventilated apartments supplied with most modern conveniences at a price within the means of the poorer classes, which should, if practicable, defray the expenses of the outlay, repairs, insurance, and keep good the capital invested."—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 84–85.

— About 1854–55, Samuel P. Townsend, who had been a contractor, but who made his fortune in the manufacture and sale of a sarsaparilla syrup, which he advertised extensively (see Belden, N. Y. Past, Present & Future, 1849, etc.; and Pl. 133-a, Vol. III), built, on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 34th St., a tall brown-stone mansion, said to have cost about $100,000, which, for the time, was one of the wonders of New York. It is remembered by old residents as it appeared at the beginning of the Civil War.

Townsend sold it in 1862 to Dr. Gorham D. Abbott (uncle of the late Dr. Lyman Abbott of The Outlook), and into this house Dr. Abbott, who was principal of the Springler Institute on Union Square (see Pl. 136, Vol. III), moved his school, and conducted it there until the site was sold to A. T. Stewart (see L. M. R. K., III: 952). For views of the Townsend residence, and of the mansion Stewart built on the site, see Fifth Avenue (pub. by the Fifth Ave. Bank, 1915), 30.

— In this year, Henry C. Atwood (see 1847) began the construction of a St. John's Masonic Hall at Delancey St. and The Bowery, using the corner-stone of Oct. 13, 1802 (q. v.), which had reposed until 1847 (q. v.) in the foundation of the Frankfort St. hall. In Jan., 1908, when workmen were digging for the subway, this stone was unearthed, 100 ft. east of The Bowery, on Delancey St.—Proc. of the Grand Lodge of N. Y. (1908), 74–75.

— Two years after the fire which almost completely destroyed Fraunces Tavern (see Je 15, 1852), Valentine's Manual showed a view of the building, which had at that time "three and a half stories below the roof line," and "with an attic beneath the roof." The roof is "an ordinary gabled roof, with the gable end on Pearl street. This is the first complete and authentic contemporaneous picture of the building known to exist,—St. Mémin's drawing of 1798 showing only the roof." Later changes are thus described:

"At some time between 1854 and 1879, the attic story was squared up all around, thus making three full stories and two half stories, with a flat roof, as shown in an illustration opposite page 144 of volume VIII of the Magazine of American History. Alterations were also made in the number of doors and windows of the first story. 1854 —

"An illustration on page 90 of Bryant and Gay's Popular History of the United States, published in 1883, shows further alterations in the first story. This excellent engraving shows clearly the line of demarkation between the work on the first three stories and that of the fourth and fifth half-stories."—12th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1907), 71–72. See, further, Jl, 1890.

In this year, Wall St. was widened, from Broadway to Nassau — St., at a total cost of $5,651.38.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 540.

In this year, Bloomingdale Square was opened.—Man. Com. — Coun. (1857), 541.

By this time, 125th St., from Eighth Ave. to the Bloomingdale — Road, had been opened.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 540. See Ap 5, 1837.

In this year, Alfred Tallis began to issue a series of views en- — titled Tallis's New-York Pictorial Directory, And Street Views of All The Principal Cities And Towns In the United States & Canada, etc. For an account of these, see the descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719 (note). See, further, 1863.

In this year, a set of four lithographic views, entitled "The Life — of a Fireman," drawn by L. Maurer and printed by N. Currier, lithographer, was published. Two of these are reproduced as Pls. 143-a and b, Vol. III. The former shows a race down Park Row, with the cupola and fire-bell on the city hall in the background; and the latter an engine-house and residence, probably on Henry St.

In this year, a view, lithographed and printed by F. Heppen- — heimer, entitled "View of Warren Street New York from Broadway to Church Street North Side," was published by W. Stephenson & Co., New York.—See Pyne sales cat., item No. 382.

The Perris insurance map of this year, Vol. VI, Pl. 83, shows, — on the block-front on the west side of Fourth Ave., between 32d and 33d Sts., the "Locomotive House" (round-house), "Smith shop," and "Machinist's Shop;" also a "Wood Yard" which occupies the western half of this block on the Madison Ave. side. These are designated the shops and yards of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. A view of Fourth Ave. showing the round-house and a small station at the north-west corner of 32d St., horse-drawn cars, with the words "New York, Springfield and Boston Express" on one of them, and the entrance to the tunnel at 34th St. in the distance (centre), is reproduced in the N. Y. Eve. Post Supp., F 1, 1913. This block front on Fourth Ave. is now occupied by the Park Ave. Hotel. Opposite it, on the east side of Fourth Ave., in 1854 (see Perris map, Vol. VI, Pl. 82), were the stables of the Harlem R. R.

A map of New York City and adjacent islands was made by — J. F. Harrison and published by M. F. Dripps in this year; a copy is filed as Map No. 1571, in bureau of topography, borough president's office.

In Valentine's Manual for 1854, were published a map of the — city, 1854; view of the Jumel mansion (Morris house), 362; residence of the late Col. Marinus Willett (mayor, 1807–8), 420; former Gov. Clinton's residence in Pearl St. (opp. Cedar St.), 446; the Abraham Van Nest residence (on Bleecker St., bet. Charles and Perry Sts.), 528; the residence of the late Bishop Moore (bet. Ninth and Tenth Aves., 22d and 23d Sts.), 536; the Beekman mansion (near East River and 52d St.), 554.

Mayor Jacob A. Westervelt, in a message to the common coun- Jan. cil, states that "The pavement of Messrs. Russ & Reid as laid in 2 Broadway, from the South ferry to Union square, is undeniably the best, the most durable and the most serviceable of any ever tested in our city. . . . In a portion of the Bowery, a species of pavement, claimed to be of Belgian invention, has been laid down about a year, and has proved, thus far, adequate to sustain the travel on that thoroughfare. A contract has recently been entered into, with Messrs. Cook & Co., to pave Grand Street, from Broadway to the East River, and the entire length of Fulton Street, with this species of pavement."—Annual Message from the Mayor, Ja 2, 1854, p. 9.

A record of the city's "vital statistics" begins with the annual 6 report of the city inspector to the common council. For the first time this report includes a record of births and marriages (see Ap 15, 1853), as well as of deaths; the former are reported for the last six months of the year 1853, viz., 10,157 births, 3,203 marriages.—Ann. Report of City Inspector (1854), 155–57.

1854 Jan. 8 Metropolitan (formerly Tripler) Hall and the new Lafarge House (about to be opened on Broadway between Bleecker and Amity Sts.) are destroyed by fire. The loss is about $1,000,000.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 9, 1854; L. M. R. K., III: 986. The theatre and the hotel were at once rebuilt (see Ag 5 and S 18, 1854, and Je 16, 1856).

9 The Astor Library (see F 19, 1853) is opened in Lafayette Place.—Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1854; Lydenberg, Hist. N. Y. Pub. Library (1923), 17, 21–22; L. M. R. K., III: 956. See also Mrs. Lamb's account of the library in Mag. Am. Hist. (1886), XVI: 19–21, and Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 544–45. The interior and exterior of the building are shown in Gleason's Pictorial, VI: 124. The library also appears on the border of Pl. 138, Vol. III. The building was enlarged in 1859 (q.v., S 1) and 1881 (q.v.).

" Trinity vestry appoints a committee to oppose the measure, passed by the board of aldermen (see D, 1853), which aimed to extend Albany St. through Trinity churchyard. This committee was directed to call to its aid "any persons whose co-operation they may deem useful in carrying out the objects of their appointment." This repeated attempt to desecrate this ancient burial-ground was a subject of general discussion. Indignant comments were made upon the motives of the aldermen. On Sunday, Feb. 5, the Rev. Sullivan H. Weston preached a sermon in Trinity Church on the "Sanctity of the Grave," which was repeated by request, on Feb. 12, in St. Paul's Chapel, and afterwards printed.

A hearing before the street committee of the board of aldermen was held in February, and adjourned from time to time, while arguments were made in favour of the alleged improvement by the Hon. Edward Sandford, and against it by Mr. Peter Y. Cuyler. The execution of the resolution was then deferred. In January, 1855, a new board of aldermen at its first meeting passed an ordinance "to stay all proceedings in the matter." This was fortified by an order of the supreme court that all proceedings be discontinued. It had been a "resolute and bitter conflict."—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 388–89. Another, final, attempt to join Albany and Pine Sts. was begun on Dec. 31, 1857 (q.v.).

19 The almshouse erected in the Park in 1795, subsequently known as the "New York Institution," and at this time called the "New City Hall" and used for courts and public offices, is destroyed by fire. The public documents, however, as well as most of the books in the law library, are saved. The loss is estimated at more than $100,000.—Eve. Post, Ja 20; N. Y. Herald, Ja 20; Com. Adv., Ja 20, 1854; Docs., Bd. of Councilmen, I: 496–98; II: Doc. No. 4, p. 27. See also L. M. R. K., III: 973, and descrip. of Pl. 95-b, III: 585. See Ja 25 and F 28.

26 The "Freedom of the City in a gold box" is formally presented to Capt. Robert Creighton, of the British ship "Three Bells," by a joint committee of the common council, at the Astor House, for rescuing the passengers and crew of the steamship "San Francisco," which was wrecked in the Gulf Stream, while bound from New York to San Francisco in the month of January, 1854.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 27, 1854. See also N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 427–29, 558–61.

" "Real estate in this City is experiencing a decided advance in value. After a few months of quiet, in which few transactions have taken place, the fever of speculation seems to have revived. . . .

"The natural result of this excitement is obvious. As property in the lower section of the City, the purely business locality, increases in value, in consequence of the demand for enlarged accommodations, the value of real estate upon the Island must eventually rise with it. The minimum of prices for dwelling house sites is probably existing at the present moment. The demand for all species of down-town property, indicates a general desire among our merchants to secure eligible localities for trade, and a determination to defer the purchase of more sumptuous dwellings. Hence the present disparity of prices in property on the upper and lower extremities of the City. Good dwellings can be obtained within two or three miles of the City Hall, for sums scarcely one-fourth of the amount required for the purchase of an ordinary store lot below Canal-street. Lots of 100 feet by 28, situated on Fifth avenue, have lately sold for $10,000 to $20,000. Others, on the Eighth-avenue, 26 by 100 feet, were disposed of a few days since, at $1,450. . . .

"The moment, however, that we look below the line of Canal and Walker streets . . . we find an amazing difference. . . . The house and lease of lot No. 188 Broadway, sold last week for the very considerable sum of $36,350. Property in Chambers-street rendered valuable by the improvements now in progress in that thoroughfare, is held at rates which a few years since would have been deemed exorbitant. A lot of considerable depth, held upon a lease, with a modern-built freestone store is held at $35,000. . . . Jan. 26

"Of Broadway, it is needless that anything be said. The indomitable enterprise of the wealthy merchants, whose stately establishments lend it an air . . . of richness and profuse expenditure that tells wonders of the amounts of capital yearly expended there, will always make that avenue an ornament to the City."—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 26, 1854.

The supreme and superior courts are assigned quarters in "the stone building lately erected in the Park, for the use of the courts."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 30, 31. Feb. 18

The common council (as permitted by the new charter of April 12, 1853, q.v.) celebrates Washington's birthday by giving a collation to the "Veterans of 1812." Comptroller Flagg refused to pay James Taylor's bill of $541.42 for this collation, and suit was brought against the city to recover the amount.—Comptroller's Report (1854), 1066–67. 22

The comptroller answered the request of the board of aldermen for information regarding the suit as follows:

"The amount of costs in the case where segars and champagne were purchased and consumed in the City Hall, in giving a collation to the Veterans of 1812, without giving them a taste of the champagne or a whiff at the segars, was taxed and paid at seventeen dollars and sixty-eight cents. It is proper to add, that the champagne, brandy and segars were duly expended in the public and patriotic service of celebrating Washington's birthday, from forty to sixty days. It did not appear, from the evidence, that the Veterans of 1812 had any share of the three thousand segars, the five gallons of brandy, and the twenty baskets of champagne."—Doc. No. 62, Bd. of Ald., 1854.

The board of councilmen considers a resolution that, as the "former flagroom in the City Hall" is now occupied by "telegraphic signals," a suitable place be fitted up in the city hall "to be used as a flag room;" also that two national flags and one city flag for the city hall be procured, as those heretofore used are worn out.—Proc., Bd. of Councilmen, LIII: 456–57. A joint resolution to this effect was approved by the mayor on April 13.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 77. 27

"Mr. Waddell's residence [see Ap 27, 1844], at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-eighth-street, may be called a suburban villa, and is remarkable for being enclosed in its own garden ground, which is as high as the original level of the island, and descends by sloping grass banks to the grade of the street. . . . The general composition and effect is picturesque and commendable, notwithstanding an occasional want of character and correctness in the details. It is built of brick stuccoed, with brown sand-stone dressings, the color of which does not quite harmonize with the yellowish gray of the walls. . . . A conservatory, and various offices extend to the left; there is also a Gothic cottage lodge on the north side of the garden, of which, and of the whole ground, a fine view is obtained from the terrace of the Croton Reservoir; while two or three old trees still standing in the garden on that side add to the semi-rural character of the edifice."—Putnam's Monthly, Mr, 1854. See also Ellet, The Queens of Am. Society. The house is shown on Pl. 129-a, Vol. III. The property was sold in 1855 (q.v., Ap 12). Mar. —

19 The first Clinton Hall, at the south-west corner of Nassau and Beekman St. (see N 2, 1830), having been sold, and the Opera House, at the intersection of Astor Place and 8th St., having been purchased April 16, 1853 (q. v.), by the Clinton Hall Assn., and remodelled, it is named Clinton Hall, and opened on this day by the Mercantile Library Assn.—33d Ann. Rep., Merc. Library Assn. (1854); Brown, Hist. N. Y. Stage, I: 413, 422. Cf. N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 8 and 10, 1854. At this time, the books of this library numbered 43,000.—N. Y. Times, N 7, 1920. The building was demolished in 1890 (q. v., My).

" "The improvement of property in Barclay-street is not inferior to that of any other thoroughfare in town. . . .

"The aspect of Beekman-street is totally changed. The iron railing of Dr. Springs [the Brick] Church is set back to the new line of the Street, leaving a clear space of fifteen feet to be thrown into the carriage-way uninterruptedly from Park-row to Pearl-street. The fine old button-woods which formerly stood at the corners of the Church-yard, on Beekman-street, have completely disappeared. Workmen were busily engaged yesterday in laying the new sidewalk, removing the gas lamp posts from the old lines, and regrading where the improvement has taken place. The vaults at the corner of Nassau and Beekman are going forward as rapidly as weather will permit. The new range of stores between Nassau and William are nearly finished."—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 19, 1854.

25 A fire occurs at No. 231 Broadway a few doors above the Astor House. About 13 men are killed and 21 injured, and property to the amount of $143,000 is destroyed.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 26 et seq., 1854.

27 A tornado causes much damage in and about New York. The caloric ship "Ericsson" sinks in the Hudson about 300 yards from the Jersey shore.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 28 et seq., 1854. See My 11.

May — Licenses for 33 two-horse omnibus lines have been issued since July, 1853. The large number is evidently due to the Crystal Palace exhibition, and the demands of sight-seers. Each line operates from one to 36 stages.—Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 336–40.

There were in this year, seven "city railroads" or street-car lines.—Ibid., 341.

5 The demolition of old Clinton Hall at Nassau and Beekman Sts. is begun. The Nassau Bank building is to be erected on the site.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 6, 1854; L. M. R. K., III: 956.

6 The corner-stone of St. Luke's Hospital is laid on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 54th St. It was founded by Rev. Wm. Augustus Muhlenberg, D.D.—*N. Y. May 6 The "Ericsson" (see Ap 27) is successfully raised.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 12, 1854.

11 A mass meeting of about 5,000 people is held in City Hall Park to protest against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and the proposed repeal of the Missouri Compromise. Joseph Simpson, Benjamin F. Butler, Thos. F. Fessenden, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 15, 1854. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 651–54. The bill, however, was passed by the house of representatives on May 22, and by the senate on May 25, and was signed by Pres. Pierce on May 30.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., I: 480–90.

13 Mayor Westervelt approves a resolution of the common council to advertise for plans for a new city hall (see Ap 4), to be of iron, stone, and brick, 300 by 150 feet, and to cost $600,000. It is to be erected 25 feet from the new building now known as the new court house.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 109. Later the time for receiving plans was extended to July 10.—Ibid., XXII: 142. A plan was chosen on Dec. 18 (q. v.).

" The "United States Inebriate Asylum" is organized, after its incorporation on April 15 (Laws of N. Y., 1854, chap. 243).—The Hist. of the First Inebriate Asylum in the World, by its founder, J. E. Turner (1888).

15 Upon the invitation of the common council, ex-Pres. Fillmore arrives on a visit to New York. During his stay, he dined with the city officials at the St. Nicholas Hotel, attended the exhibition at the Crystal Palace, and visited the public institutions. At his request, there were no popular demonstrations.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 18–20, 1854.

17 Niblo's Garden and the grounds around it "have just undergone a thorough repair and are vastly improved thereby. The dimensions of the house have been so increased, by the addition of a new tier of upper boxes, that thirty-two hundred persons can now be accommodated with seats."—Gleason's Pictorial, VI: 333.

27 A commercial reciprocity treaty with Great Britain is signed at Washington. It provides for the use of the sea fisheries of the British provinces by Americans, by enlarging the rights accorded them under the convention of Oct. 20, 1818, and grants to British subjects fishery rights along the coast southward to 36° N. L. It establishes a free interchange between the British provinces and the U. S. of flour, breadstuffs, fruit, fish, animals, lumber, and manufactured articles. Ratifications were exchanged on Sept. 9, and the treaty was proclaimed on Sept. 11.—U. S. Treaties, etc. (Washington, 1910), I: 668–72.

June 5 Cholera having appeared in the city, the first cholera hospital is opened at No. 105 Franklin St. On July 24, another hospital was opened in Mott St.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ja 1, 1855.

24 A new Christ Church, built by the Anthony St. congregation (see Je 29, 1848) on the north side of 18th St., west of Fifth Ave., is consecrated, the congregation worshipping some time previously in the chapel of the N. Y. University on Washington Square.—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 1, 1854; Mag. of Am. Hist. (1888), XIX: 60–62; L. M. R. K., III: 932. See Ap 6 and S 26, 1858.

30 The bill presented to the comptroller by Timothy Garrick throws an interesting light on the celebration of the Fourth by the common council, as authorised in the charter of April 12, 1853 (q. v.):

July 4 "To Timothy Garrick, Dr.

To 15 baskets Heidsick wine, at $25	$225 00
10 gallons Otard brandy, at 6	60 00
1 barrel lemonade	40 00
	$325 00"

—Comptroller's Report (1854), 1068.

6 The Presbyterian congregation which formerly worshipped in Bleecker St. lays the corner-stone of a new church at Fourth Ave. and 22d St. The stone is the one used in the Bleecker St. church.—N. Y. Times, Jl 8, 1854. See also L. M. R. K., III: 930 and 931.

Aug. 5 "The new theatre in New York, on the site of Metropolitan Hall [see Ja 8], when completed, will have cost one hundred thousand dollars. It will comfortably hold four thousand persons. There will be three rows of boxes, as well as the parquette. The main entrance will be next the Bond street House, and there will be eight other means of exit in Mercer street, six for the public and two for the stage. There are to be twenty-eight private boxes, each holding ten persons, in front of the first and second tiers. The proscenium will be twenty-eight feet in width, and on either side will 1854 Aug. 5 have ten private boxes, each containing seats for ten persons. The stage itself will be fifty-five feet deep and ninety-six feet wide. . . . The season will probably commence in September."—Gleason's Pictorial, VII: 79. See S 18.

7 The common council resolves that the remains of Maj.-Gen. Wm. J. Worth be interred in the ground bounded by Broadway, Fifth Ave., and 25th St., and that a monument to his memory be erected there. The clerk is directed to advertise for plans for a granite monument.—Reports on the Erection of a Monument to the Memory of Wm. J. Worth, late Major-General of the U. S. Army, by the Special Committees appointed by the Common Council of the City of N. Y. (N. Y., 1857) 10. See also descrip. of Pl. 148-a, III: 720. See, further, D 5.

9 The Central Presbyterian Church in Broome St., erected in 1821 (q. v., S 19), is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ag 10, 1854. It was rebuilt on the same site. The new church was opened on May 6, 1855.—Ibid., My 7, 1855.

19 "There are now in New York city 33 lines of omnibuses, with 521 vehicles; also five city railroads, with 164 cars."—Gleason's Pictorial, VII: 111.

21 By two deeds, dated Aug. 21 and Aug. 22, the Bank of the State of New York and the Bank of Commerce sell to the U. S. for an assay office their building at 30–32 Wall St., which was erected in 1822–1824 (see Mr 23, 1822) for the Branch Bank of the United States.—Liber Deeds, DCLXXIII: 363, 365; Statutes at Large, X: 561; L. M. R. K., III: 975. See also Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1875), 19, and descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848.

" The corner-stone of Firemen's Hall at 127 Mercer St. is laid.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 202; N. Y. Daily Times, Ag 22, 1854. For description and view of the building, see Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 179. This building became the headquarters of the fire department when the paid organization was established in 1865 (q. v., N 3).

26 "Operations on the floating battery for harbor defence, at Hoboken, opposite New York, have been resumed."—Gleason's Pictorial, VII: 125.

Sept. 18 The theatre built on the site of Metropolitan Hall (see Ja 8 and Ag 5) is opened as the "Great Metropolitan Theatre and New York Opera House."—N. Y. Herald, S 19, 1854. See also L. M. R. K., III: 986. See, further, D 27, 1855.

20 The comptroller, in his report for the year ending June 30, 1854, compares the carriage hire (see Ag 27, 1853) of the old board of aldermen for the six months to Jan. 1, 1854, with that of the new "reform" board for six months to July 1, 1854.

In the old board 8 did not ride, in the new, 13. In the old board average hire was $72 per member, with Tweed high man at $194.50, in the new, the average is $20.50 (Tweed was not a member of this board).

Twenty-six of the sixty members of the new board of 60 councilmen put in no bills for carriage hire.—Comptroller's Report (1854), 1019–20. While the "friends of frugal government may take courage" at this retrenchment, the comptroller expresses concern over "the lavish expenditures which prevail generally in the use of stationery." He observes that this expenditure for the 128 members of the state assembly, in 1843 (Mr. Flagg was state comptroller then), was only $1,192, while the city board of aldermen in the past 12 months has spent $4,379.90. The purchases in a single month included 287 reams paper, 12,300 envelopes, 82 boxes quill pens, 82 pieces "patent rubber," and the same number of "pieces silk braid," "bottles Hart's carmine ink," "pints Hadley's fluid," "Turkey leather portfolios" with lettering on the side—"three lines each," "tin diaries" with lettering on the side—"one line each," "Congress holders," and "ivory letter stamps."

In the board of councilmen, the comptroller adds, "they have an inkstand at twelve dollars; seven and a half dozen at $78.75, and three dozen at $41.50, and other articles equally extravagant." He is satisfied these expenditures for stationery "might be retrenched one half, without detriment to the public service."—Ibid., 1023–24, 1082.

Oct. 2 The Academy of Music on the corner of 14th St. and Irving Place is opened.—N. Y. Daily Times, O 3, 1854. See also Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, II: 24–25, 55, 102; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 683; and L. M. R. K., III: 982. It was destroyed by fire on May 21, 1866 (q. v.).

11 The Collegiate Dutch Church on the north-west corner of 29th St. and Fifth Ave., now known as "The Marble Church," is opened for worship.—Year Book of the Collegiate Ch. (1893), 27; Corwin's Manual, 998. See also N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 24, 1855, and L. M. R. K., III: 935.

Oct. 11 England and France begin the siege of Sebastopol, the chief naval station and arsenal of the Russians in Crimea.—Cross, Hist. of Eng. & Greater Brit., 961–62.

17 The U. S. ministers to England, France, and Spain (James Buchanan, J. Y. Mason, and Pierre Soulé) issue the "Ostend Manifesto" urging the U. S. to purchase Cuba.—Macdonald, Select Docs. Illus. of the Hist. of U. S., 1776–1861, 405–12.

18 The corner-stone of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, at the south-east corner of 35th St., is laid.—N. Y. Daily Times, O 20, 1854. It was dedicated on June 8, 1856 (q. v.).

19 The Russians under Menschikoff are defeated at Balaclava in the Crimea. The battle is famous for the charge of the Light Brigade.—Innes, Eng. and the Brit. Empire, IV: 260–61.

25 Columbia College celebrates the centennial of its founding as King's College.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 1, 1854.

31 The "Exhibition of the Industry of All Nations" comes to an end, and the Crystal Palace closes.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 1, 1854.

" Fernando Wood, "Soft" Democrat, is elected mayor of New York City. The election was a close one, and for several days there was doubt as to which candidate had been successful. The election was attended by frauds and followed by such serious disturbances that the military had to be called out.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 10–13, 1854. Wood followed Jacob A. Westervelt (see N 2, 1852) and, after being succeeded by Daniel Tieman in 1857 (q. v., D 1), he was again elected mayor in 1859 (q. v., D 6).

20 The New York Historical Society celebrates its semi-centennial anniversary. In the afternoon a large audience assembled at Niblo's Garden, where George Bancroft delivered the anniversary address, and in the evening there was a dinner at the Astor House.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 21, 1854.

24 The new house of refuge on Randall's Island is dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 25, 1854.

Dec. 5 The common council appropriates the ground at Broadway and Fifth Ave. between 24th and 25th Sts. for the monument to the memory of Gen. Worth (see Ag 7) and adopts the plans and drawings made by James G. Batterson. Estimates for a 50 foot monument are to be solicited.—Reports on the Erection of a Monument to the Memory of Wm. J. Worth, etc. (N. Y., 1857), 10–11; descrip. of Pl. 148-a, III: 720. See also Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIII: 268–75, 283, 299, 335.

18 The board of aldermen adopts the plan of Martin E. Thompson for a "new city hall" (see My 13). This contemplates the erection of two buildings in the rear of the present hall, at equal distances apart and connected by wide passages.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 19, 1854. See, however, F 17, 1855.

" The R. C. Church of the Holy Cross in 42d St. between Eighth and Ninth Aves. is dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 19, 1854.

20 The city assembly rooms on the east side of Broadway between Howard and Grand Sts. and Wood's Minstrel Hall are destroyed by fire. The loss is about $200,000.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 21, 1854. See also L. M. R. K., III: 983.

24 The Madison Square Presbyterian Church (see Jl 12, 1853) is opened and dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 25, 1854. See also L. M. R. K., III: 931.

27 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. is required by ordinance to discontinue the use of steam in Fourth Ave. south of 42d St., after Jan. 27, 1856.—From chronology supplied by the company.

29 Park Place is opened through the grounds of Columbia College to College Place.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 375.

30 The name of Orange St. is changed to Baxter St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXII: 385.

31 Expenditures by the city in 1854 include $24,972 for the Battery enlargement; $7,202.53 for rebuilding Essex Market; $3,718.19 for the extension of the new city hall; $[illegible],000 for the south wing of the workhouse on Blackwell's Is.; $36,979 for rebuilding Catharine Market; $10,278 for rebuilding Union Market; and $27,043.05 for building Firemen's Hall (see Ag 21).—Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 199, 200, 206, 213.

The Free Soil party is formed in the U. S.—Winsor, VII: 288.

In this year, Henry Bessemer invented his process for the direct conversion of molten cast iron into steel by blowing air into the molten mass.—Scientific American, Je 5, 1915.

1855 — In this year, when the shaft of the Washington Monument at Washington, D. C. (see Ja 31, Jl 4, 1848) had attained a height of 152 ft., work on it had to be suspended for lack of funds. The advent of the Civil War later interfered with the public interest in the enterprise, and the funds of the society were but little augmented. In 1876 (q.v., Ag 2), congress appropriated money for the continuation of the work.—Harvey, Monograph of the Washington Nat'l Monument (1885), 11; Harvey, Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 56 et seq. See also Ap 20, 1871.

— In this year, 161,490 immigrants arrived at New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (1891), table 7.

— In this year, the first "model" tenement-house in New York City was erected, by the Workmen's Home Association (see 1854), on Elizabeth and Mott Sts. It was six storeys high, contained 87 three-room apartments, and was supplied with Croton water and lighted with gas. The ground plan of the building, however, was very defective, two-thirds of the rooms being dark and unventilated. In a few years, the house degenerated into one of the worst in the city.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 85–87.

— In this year, the U. S. assay office first occupied the old U. S. Bank building at 30–32 Wall St., which the government had purchased in 1854 (q.v., Ag 21). The sub-treasury was in the same building.—N. Y. City directories. The sub-treasury moved in 1863 (q.v.), but the assay office remained here until 1912, when it moved to the new building on Pine St.—Ann. Rep., supervising archt., U. S. treas. dept. (1912), 119; ibid. (1913), 270. The old building on Wall St. was demolished in 1915, but the historic façade was carefully taken down and is now preserved in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The present building was erected on the site as a wing of the Pine St. office.—Verplanck, The Site of the Assay Office (1921); descrips. of Pl. 57, I: 430 (footnote) and Pl. 166, III: 848; L. M. R. K., III: 924, 975.

— In this year, the College of Physicians and Surgeons (see Mr 12, 1807) began the erection of a new building at the north-east cor. of Fourth Ave. and 23d St.; when it was ready for occupancy in 1856, the college moved from the old building in Crosby St. (see 1836). The new building was completed in 1858.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 565; L. M. R. K., III: 940. See Je 1860 and 1886.

— From 1855 to 1876 (q.v.), Delmonico's restaurant was on the north-west corner of Broadway and Chambers St.—City Directories; L. M. R. K., III: 978. In 1861 (q.v.), he secured another site.

— In this year, the Fourth Universalist Church (Dr. Chapin's) occupied the second site of the Church of the Divine Unity (Dr. Bellows'), at 548 Broadway.—L. M. R. K., III: 937; Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 635.

— In this year, the N. Y. Juvenile Asylum (see Ja 1, 1853) erected its main building between Amsterdam and Eleventh Ave., 175th to 178th Sts. It was occupied in the following spring.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 429; L. M. R. K., III: 955. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 687–89. See My, 1905.

— In this year, George Higgins erected, opposite the Croton reservoir on Fifth Ave., a row of dwellings known as "The House of Mansions" or "The Spanish Row." The project, however, was not a success, and in 1860 (q.v., Je 18) the Rutgers Female College moved to the neglected buildings.—Maurice, Fifth Ave., 251. See also Pl. 148-b, Vol. III.

— The New Bowery is being cut through and, part of the old Jewish burying-ground (near Oliver St.) being taken for the street, permission is given to remove some of the bodies buried here.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIII: 284. The bodies were removed to the Jewish cemetery on 21st St., and the New Bowery was opened in 1856.—Pubs., Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., No. 6, p. 133 and 137; L. M. R. K., III: 1006. See Ag 3, 1728.

— In this year, Canal St. was extended from Centre St. across Baxter to Mulberry St.; Park Place and Duane St. were also widened, and the Bowery and Chambers St. extended.—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 529.

— In this year, Wm. Perris published an interesting map of New York City below 50th St., containing a vignette view of the Crystal Palace and a key to the most important public buildings, markets, hotels, places of amusement, etc.—Descrip. of Pl. 138, III: 707.

— In this year, a view of the city, entitled "New York, 1855. From the Latting Observatory," looking south, drawn by B. F. Smith, Jr., and engraved by W. Wellstood, was published. It is reproduced as Pl. 145, Vol. III. 1855 — In this year, F. Heppenheimer made a lithographic "View of Broadway, New York from Exchange Alley to Morris Street, West Side." It is reproduced as A. Pl. 27-a, Vol. III.

— In this year, Egbert C. Viele made, for the commissioners appointed on Nov. 17, 1853 (q.v.), a map of the lands included in Central Park. It is reproduced as Pl. 149A-a, Vol. III.

— Topographical maps in 42 sheets bearing this date and showing Central Park laid out into building lots are filed as map No. 1653 in topographical bureau, borough president's office.

A coloured lithograph giving a bird's eye view of the Park in this year and containing eight inset views was sold with the Pyne collection.—Pyne sales catalogue (1917), item 187.

— In this year, Th. Benecke made a coloured lithograph depicting a characteristic winter scene in Broadway, opposite Barnum's and St. Paul's, and showing a large six-horse sleigh. A similar sleighing scene in New York was painted in 1857 by H. Sebron and engraved by P. Girardet.—Pyne sales catalogue (1917), items 164 and 177.

— A crude, unsigned, but very interesting, oil painting of "Claremont" was made, it is said, about this time by a tramp artist in return for hospitality. It includes pleasure vehicles and equestrians; and the Church of St. Mary's, Manhattanville, and the Convent of the Sacred Heart are shown.—Pyne sales catalogue (1917), item 231.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1855 were published, besides the articles and references cited elsewhere in the Chronology, the following historical data:

A list of the public markets and their locations at this time, 217.

A list of the paintings and busts in various rooms of the city hall, 347–49.

A list of the members of the city government, from its incorporation (1653) to 1855, alphabetically arranged, with the offices held by them in the common council, 391–429; also the names of recorders, sheriffs, and corporation counsel, 431–32.

An account of the origin and changes in the names of streets, 499–516. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 992–1012.

An account of the notable women of the Dutch period in New York, 517–38.

The value of certain town lots in early colonial times, 545–46.

A description and history of the currency of New Amsterdam, 547–48.

The Manual for 1855 also contains a view of the Apthorpe mansion (owned by Col. Thorn), 392; and one of an old house, on the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt Sts., 593.

For census map of New York State, 1855, see ibid. (1858), 12.

For the first time the city inspector includes in his annual report to the common council vital statistics (see Ja 6, 1854) for a full calendar year. Deaths in 1854, 28,568; births, 17,979; marriages, 5,595.—Ann. Report of City Inspector (1855), 168–71. Jan. 1

The mayor and common council again resolve to build a new city hall (see Ap 4 and My 13, 1854).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIII: 52. See Ap 8. Feb. 17

Verdi's "Rigoletto" is performed for the first time in America, at the Academy of Music.—N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 895. 19

The common council passes a resolution recommending the elimination from Central Park (see Jl 21, 1853) of the area south of 72d St. and the reduction of the remainder by 400 feet on each side. This was emphatically vetoed by Mayor Wood on March 23.—1st Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1857), 130–34; 16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 459–460. Mar. 15

A large mass meeting is held at the Broadway Tabernacle to protest against the bill now before the legislature proposing to take the appointment of policemen out of the hands of the mayor, the recorder, and the city judge, and to put it into the hands of four commissioners to be elected by the people. Robert B. Minturn and J. W. Gerard make the principal addresses.—N. Y. Daily Times, Mr 22, 1855. 21

The Children's Aid Society, in appealing for aid in establishing an industrial school in the section of the city called "Dutch Hill," thus describes conditions there: "It is a droll-looking hamlet, that at the foot of Forty-first and Forty-second streets, near East River. The houses are little board or mud shanties, scattered around like the wigwams of an Indian village, with most perplexing paths winding among them. . . . "

1855 Mar. 21 "Some are of the primitive block form, with a hole in the roof for a chimney; others are arched, others with a sharp Gothic gable. Occasionally, something entirely new in architectural style will meet you in the shape of a rectangular box with diamond lattice work, which, on nearer approach, you discover to be a Railroad car banked in, and made into a house. . . . Each house has a retinue of large dogs and goats and pigs. . . . All the inhabitants of these buildings are squatters—they have found a plot of ground and have built their log-cabin on it, to remain until the rightful owner turns them away. When they move they sell their house to some new comer for $5 or $10. They are all Irish and German laborers; many working in the quarries near by, and others especially the German women, living on the sale of the rags and bones which they and their children gather all the day long through the streets of the City.

"The village called 'Dutch Hill,' which with the neighbouring shanties must contain thousands of people, is almost precisely like the poorest Irish villages; and poorer than most German peasant hamlets."—N. Y. Daily Times, Mr 21, 1855.

29 The legislature passes an act for the election of five fire commissioners.—Laws of N. Y. (1855), chap. 112. See also Costello, Our Firemen.

Apr. — In this month a new building (the present one) for the Society Library was commenced on the east side of University Pl., bet. 12th and 13th Sts. (see My, 1853).—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 547. The new building was opened in 1856.—Ibid.; Keep, Hist. of N. Y. Soc. Library, 445.

8 It is resolved by the board of councilmen that, if the board of aldermen concur, the plans and specifications for a new city hall (see F 17), presented by Albert Gilbert, Thomas R. Jackson, and Henry L. Stuart, be approved, and the commissioner of repairs and supplies be instructed to advertise for proposals for the erection of the building. The specifications are printed with the Report of the Committee on Repairs and Supplies, Doc. No. 30, Bd. of Councilmen, Ap 8, 1855. See Ap 16.

13 The city is authorised to remove so much of the old bridge, commonly known as the Hadley bridge, as forms an obstruction to the navigation of the Harlem River; and is directed, upon "the removal of said old bridge, to erect and construct a new bridge on said Harlem River, of a width not less than that of the old bridge, and upon its present site, to connect the county of New York with the county of Westchester; said new bridge to be constructed with a suitable draw of not less than 36 feet in width."—Laws of N. Y. (1855), chap. 423.

16 The special committee to whom was referred so much of the mayor's message as relates to the building of a new city hall, together with numerous petitions asking that it be built at Madison Square, etc., make their report in favour of the Madison Square site; the other site considered is the Park, where the old almshouse stood.—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1855), No. 19; N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 17, 1855. On May 16, however, a majority of this committee reported in favour of the Park site in the rear of the present city hall.—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1855), No. 23. See, further, F 18, 1857.

17 Trinity Chapel on the north side of West 25th St. near Fifth Ave. is consecrated.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 19 and 20, 1855.

20 "The extension of Park-place through the grounds of Columbia College, is proceeded with rapidly. Large bodies of workmen are digging, grading and carting, every clear day."—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 20, 1855. See also ibid., Ap 27, 1855.

25 The Union Club (see S 20, 1850) opens its new building at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 21st St.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ap 26, 1855; Club Book (1912); L. M. R. K., III: 939.

May 1 "The old Tontine Building [see 1843], on the corner of Wall and Water-streets, at present occupied by stores and offices, is to be torn down, to make way for a larger and finer structure."—N. Y. Daily Times, My 1, 1855. The old coffee house was demolished in this month, and "the ground leased to Mr. William H. Aspinwall, with the condition that he should pay to the Tontine Association, as rent, the sum of $5,500 per annum, and should pay all taxes and assessments levied by the city upon the ground, and upon such buildings as should be upon it; also, that the said lease should expire and all the buildings upon the ground should revert to the association when by death the nominees should be reduced to seven. Mr. Aspinwall caused the erection of the present [1872] building soon after he obtained the lease.

"The walls are of Massachusetts yellow free-stone, the keystones in the arches of the windows and doors being of the same material. On the left of the picture [see view accompanying the description] on the Wall Street front, is seen the narrow alley mentioned in the title deeds, showing that the heirs of Francis Clark had the right of way in 1791.

"The interior is cut up into offices, a large shaft near the rear of the hall-way giving room for the main staircase and the facilities for ventilation. . . ."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City (1872), citing Jour. of Com., Jl 25, 1871. See also De Peyster, Hist. of the Tontine Bldg. (N. Y., 1855) and L. M. R. K., III: 981.

"Il Trovatore" is produced for the first time in New York, at the Academy of Music.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 3, 1855.

The commissioners of immigration take possession of Castle Garden on a lease for four years; the historic garden is to be used as an immigrant landing-place.—N. Y. Daily Times, My 8, 1855; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See Jl 14 and Ag 3.

The Woman's Hospital, the first of its kind in New York, is formally inaugurated as a charity at 83 Madison Ave. It has been open for about a month.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 2 and 4, 1855. See Ap 18, 1857.

A great "Know-Nothing" demonstration is held in City Hall Park. About 20,000 people are present.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 19, 1855.

The Battery is lighted with gas for the first time.—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 9, 1855.

Progress has been made in fitting up Castle Garden as an immigrant depot (see My 7). "About 1,000 feet of fencing has been put up round the building, with the exception of that portion of it which faces the water. . . .

"Internally, the galleries and permanent seating remain as heretofore. Under the dome, the fountain which formerly existed has been restored. . . .

"A quadrangular range of enclosed desks is in process of erection almost in the center, where it is intended to station clerks to elicit information from all passengers as to their destination and their means of supporting themselves. They there will receive such information as they may need in regard to routes and the cost of passage, as well as the freights of extra baggage. The old refreshment rooms to the right and left of the main entrance have been converted into bath rooms. . . .

"The buildings, formerly used as residences, near the gate, have been converted into offices. Ticket offices for sale of passage tickets, cashier's office for the receipt of freight money; an office for the examining physician; a police station; suitable accommodation for the United States Revenue officers and offices for the use of the Commissioners."—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 14, 1855. See Ag 3.

The first immigrants to land at Castle Garden (see My 7 and Jl 14) arrive on this day.—N. Y. Times, Ag 4, 1855.

"Never before have there been so many improvements under way in our City as at present. There is scarcely a street in which one or more new and substantial buildings are not being erected in the place of others too old or too small to meet the requirements of advancing trade; and many downtown streets are being widened and straightened to accommodate their constantly increasing commerce. . . .

"The greatest and most extended of these improvements is the extension of Canal and the widening of Walker street . . .

"The work is progressing with great rapidity. The cost will be $480,000. Nearly all the houses beyond the line have been cut or removed back, and many new buildings are being erected.

"When completed, Walker-street, or (as it will then be called) Canal-street, will be one of the finest avenues in the City—100 feet broad from the Hudson to Centre, and 75 feet for the remaining distance—extending almost in a straight line from the west to the east. . . .

"Considerable improvements are just now being made in the 1855 Aug. 11 upper part of the City, between Thirty-eighth and Fifty-fourth streets, both by the Corporation and by private individuals. Fifty-third street is being extended from the Seventh-avenue to the East River. . . .

"The four lower streets [38th to 42d St.?] are yet open on the west side only to the Seventh-avenue. It will take immense labor to extend them through the rocky barriers to the east of this. . . .

"The extension of Forty-ninth street, from the Seventh-avenue eastward, is also progressing pretty rapidly, considering the formidable impediments to be overcome. Forty-eighth street has only been opened to the Sixth-avenue on the Hudson side—Forty-seventh street only to the Seventh-avenue. . . .

"The several rocky 'lots' east of Sixth-avenue, between Forty-second and Fifty-fourth streets, are being cleared away to make room for various kinds of buildings. . . .

"On Forty-second and Forty-third streets, between the Sixth and Seventh avenues, several new buildings are in progress of erection—some of them nearly finished. Others are about being commenced on the east side of Sixth-avenue, in the vicinity of the Crystal Palace. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Times, Ag 11, 1855.

22 Mlle. Rachel, the French tragedienne, arrives at New York on a visit to the United States.—N. Y. Daily Times, Ag 23, 1855. See S 3.

Sept. 3 Rachel (see Ag 22) makes her first appearance in America, at the Metropolitan Theatre (see S 18, 1853). The play is Corneille's tragedy "Horace."—N. Y. Daily Times, S 3–5, 1855. See also Rachel and the New World, 117. The Metropolitan later became Laura Keene's Varieties (see D 27).

1 "A new iron shot tower is going up in the Sixth Ward. It has already reached its ninth story, and two more will finish the structure—each story in height is eleven feet and six inches, making the tower, when completed, over one hundred and seventy feet high. One story, not included in the eleven, is entirely under ground—this also is of solid iron. The tower runs through the rear of a building which faces on Centre, between Duane and Elm streets. Mr. Bogardus adds new credit to his high reputation by the design and character of this novel and unique structure. It was commenced on Aug. 15."—N. Y. Daily Times, O 1, 1855. The shot-tower, originally owned by Richard McCollough, was at 63–65 Centre St., and was erected by Bogardus & Co., who had previously built the Bogardus Building on Duane St., off Centre St., the first building with iron front in New York. The shot-tower was the first building having an iron frame-work enclosing and partly supporting its floors and walls. It was octagonal in shape, and supported on iron columns bolted together end to end at the angles of the structure. The panels between columns (which inclined inward) and the tie-bars (which were horizontal) were filled with the brick of the walls. The width at the base of the tower was 24 feet and at the top 12 feet, the height being 175 feet. It was demolished in 1908 (q.v.).—Data supplied by Mr. Christopher C. Tracy, of Bellerose, L. I., supt. of the tower for over 35 years, and Mr. Wm. W. Tracy, of Brooklyn, his brother. See also descrip. of Pl. 155-a, III: 777. Another tower was built in 1856 (q.v., D 18).

6 "The old Dutch Church, which Government thrift has converted into a Post-Office, is experiencing extensive repairs. Not long ago it was resolved to dislodge the swallows and owls from the antique tower and throw in a detachment of clerks to occupy it; and accordingly a corps of sappers and miners might have been observed creating a breach in the wall where now the words 'Registered Letters,' indicate that there is the entrance to that funny Assurance Office where the Department, for a handsome premium, insures letters against itself on condition of paying for no losses. To the east of the tower, and to strengthen the position, a large structure of brick ascends slowly, designed to enlarge facilities for the receipt and dispatch of mail-bags. . . ."—*N. Y. — As a result of the disclosures made by the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor in regard to tenement-houses in New York City, the state legislature in this year appointed a com-

1856 — mittee of its own members to make an examination. This first legislative commission on tenement-houses consisted of A. J. H. Duganne, John M. Reed, Eli Curtis, Wm. J. Shea, and Samuel Brevoort, and they visited the city in March, spending seven days in a personal inspection of the tenement-house districts. In their report, on April 4, they stated that their brief examination showed that some of the tenements were occupied by as many as 112 families, that often eight or ten people lived in one room, and that the rooms were dark, damp, and unventilated. These conditions, in their opinion, resulted in the spread of disease, a high death rate, and the large criminal and pauper population now supported by the state. They asked that their committee be continued throughout the summer in order that it might make a more thorough investigation and recommend legislative action. The legislature failed to continue the work, but the members of the committee were so interested in the subject that they proceeded with the investigation at their own expense, and submitted their report on March 9, 1857 (q.v.).—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 87–90.

— In this year, the grist-mill built at Kingsbridge by Alexander Macomb shortly after 1800 (q.v., D 22) was blown down during a severe wind storm.—Descrip. of Pl. 137-b, III: 706.

— The N. Y. Gas Light Co. with works situated between 21st and 22d Sts., 1st Ave. to East River, furnished gas for all portions of the city south of Grand St., supplying about 3,000 public lights. The Manhattan Gaslight Co. supplied the region north of Grand St., which had 7,300 public gas-lights. Its headquarters were at the foot of 7th St. near North River, and at the foot of 14th St., East River.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 335–36. See also views of Manhattan Gas Works in *Illus. In a message to the common council, Mayor Wood describes the city's growth thus: "The laying out of the Central Park—the almost entire union of Harlaem and Manhattanville—the rapid increase of Yorkville—the connection made by actual settling of the City proper, and what was once the village of Bloomingdale—have left, indeed, but few rural spots untouched by city life, in resident population. The complete and entire consolidation of the people of New York into one compact community, which will, in its habitations, stretch from the Battery, on the south, to Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvel, on the north, and from river to river on the east and west, is not as far distant in the future as the day is in the past which contemplated the mighty growth and power of this metropolis, by laying out and preparing the streets and avenues for its reception and provision." Feb. 4

The mayor in this message also presents an account of the increased expense for street opening from 1807 to 1855; also of the expense of maintaining public markets, and he recommends that the market system be abolished, and a better and more profitable one be substituted.—Communication from Mayor Wood, F 4, 1856.

The city having advertised for bids for a bell for the tower already voted to be built at Mount Morris Square, the mayor approves a resolution awarding the contract to Jones & Hitchcock of Troy to furnish a bell weighing 10,000 lbs., "at 35 cents per pound, and 25 cents per pound to be allowed for old bell."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIV: 47. 19

The mayor approves an ordinance to raise funds to buy the ground which is hereafter to be known as "The Central Park."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIV: 66. See My 21. 29

"There can be no doubt of the wisdom of choosing the grounds which have been finally set apart for the [Central] Park, in preference to any that could be obtained elsewhere on the island. The scenery is in some portions exceedingly bold and majestic; the inequalities of surface at different points vary by as much as two hundred feet; the Croton reservoir will be an ornamental feature in the landscape; and when the Commissioners—who, we hope, will be speedily appointed—shall have laid out an immense Park, with serpentine roads winding along the sides of the hills, and overhanging in some places deep ravines and very respectable precipices, with a new and ever-changing view at every turn; when they shall have planted and transplanted into the soil fine old trees of every variety; when they have created artificial lakes, and cascades, and fountains, all copiously supplied from the unfailing springs of Croton River; when all the resources of art, assisted by nature, shall have been applied in making this spot an oasis in the desert of brick and mortar that will very shortly surround it on every side—then our citizens will honor and gratefully acknowledge the enterprise which has projected, and the energy which, as we trust, will have successfully prosecuted, this noble and vast undertaking."—*N. The Board remained here throughout the war, and until its removal to Broad Street in 1865."—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 38. "The Board Room in Lord's Court was about sixty feet long by forty feet wide, and was approached by such intricate passages that a stranger required a guide to reach it."—Ibid., 43. A view of the board in session is given in Harper's Weekly, I: 577. Summer

A preliminary plan for the improvement of Central Park, drawn by Egbert L. Viele, engineer-in-chief, is adopted by the commissioners (see My 21). On June 17, a map of the lands included in the park was made by Viele from a topographical survey. These are both published in the 1st Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1857). See also Pl. 149 A-a, Vol. III, and descrip., III: 723–24. Viele's plan was never carried out, for the new commissioners appointed in 1857 (q.v., Ap 17) soon after advertised for new ones and chose the one submitted by Vaux and Olmsted (see Ap 28, 1858).—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 466–67. June 3

The news that Buchanan and Breckinridge have been nominated for president and vice-president respectively by the Democratic national convention at Cincinnati is celebrated by the Tammany Society with bon-fires, illuminations, and the firing of guns.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 7, 1856. The nominations were ratified by a Democratic mass meeting held in City Hall Park on June 11.—Ibid., Je 12 and 13, 1856. 6

The new Baptist church at the s.e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 35th St. (see O 19, 1854) is dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 7, 1856. This was later purchased by Christ P. E. Church (see Ap 6, 1858). 8

A mass meeting is held at the Broadway Tabernacle to take measures for aiding the anti-slavery settlers of Kansas to defend themselves against the "lawless outrages of the invading Missouri mob" of pro-slavery men. The sum of $2,715 is subscribed, and a committee is appointed to solicit further contributions.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 10, 1856. 9

The new Lafarge House, erected on Broadway on the site of the one destroyed by fire in 1854 (q.v., Ja 8), is opened for the reception of guests.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 18, 1856. See Mr 23, 1867. 16

Diamond Reef, which lies at the north end of Governor's Island and extends about 200 rods into the Channel which connects the North and East Rivers, is being removed.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 20, 1856. 20

Delmonico's old hotel in Broadway at Bowling Green has been re-opened as the Stevens House.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 21, 1856; L. M. R. K., III: 978, 980. See Ap 13, 1854. 21

Millard Fillmore, ex-president and present nominee of the "Know-Nothing" party, arrives at New York from a European tour and is welcomed by a committee of the common council and escorted to the St. Nicholas Hotel. On June 23, he received visitors at the hotel and was daguerreotyped by all the photographic establishments on Broadway. On June 24, he was officially received at the city hall by Mayor Wood and presented with an engrossed copy of the complimentary resolutions adopted by the common council. After visiting Brooklyn, he left for Albany.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 23–26, 1856. 22

Trinity M. E. Church on 34th St. between Seventh and Eighth Aves. is dedicated.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 30, 1856. Its cornerstone was laid on July 12, 1855.—Ibid., Jl 13, 1855. 29

The bronze equestrian statue of Washington, by Henry Kirke Brown and J. Q. A. Ward, is unveiled in Union Square (see My 9).—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 5 and 9, 1856. See also Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 138; Francis's New Guide to the Cities of N. Y. and Brooklyn (1857), 84–85; and L. M. R. K., III: 965. The statue is shown on A. Pl. 27B-a, Vol. III. July 4

By this time, Seventh Ave. from 42d St. to the Harlem River had been completed at a total cost of $9,005.61.—Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 541. Aug. 1

The mayor approves a joint resolution awarding a contract for building a monument to the memory of Maj.-Gen. Worth.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIV: 311. 13

Congress appropriates $261,585 for the purchase of a post-office site in New York.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1876), 18; descrip. of Pl. 163, III: 845. See also Senate Ex. Doc., 34th cong., 1st sess., Vol. XVI, No. 106. See Mr 10, 1857. 18

Sept. — The Worcester Hussar Co., organized in 1850, is conducting diving operations at Hell Gate in the hope of recovering treasure lost on the British frigate "Hussar," which was sunk there during the Revolution (see N 23, 1780).—N. Y. Daily Times, S 8, 1856.

9 "A large building is going up on the ground formerly occupied by the famous Hippodrome (see Mr 14). It is to be ninety feet high, and six stories, and the first story, at least, is to have a white marble front."—N. Y. Daily Times, S 9, 1856. This building was the Fifth Avenue Hotel (see Ag 23, 1859).—L. M. R. K., III: 978, 984.

10 The corner-stone of the present Bank of New York is laid at the north-east corner of Wall and William Sts., on the site of the bank erected in 1797. The new building was opened in 1858.—Domett, Hist. of the Bank of N. Y. (1884), 93–94; L. M. R. K., III: 924. It is shown on Pl. 147, Vol. III.

15 The trustees of the Brick Church (see My 14) purchase from Uriah Hendricks, for $58,000, property on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 37th St. The ground, which is part of the Waddell mansion property (see Ap 27, 1844), measures 98 feet 9 inches on the avenue and 145 feet on the street.—Knapp, Hist. of the Brick Presby. Ch., 281, 286; N. Y. Daily Times, S 29, 1856. The deed was dated O 8, 1856.—Liber Deeds, DCCXVI: 322; descrip. of Pl. 129-a, III: 694. Hendricks had purchased the property, on March 10, 1856, from Thos. McElrath, who had bought it from Isaac C. Delaplaine, the original purchaser from Waddell and his wife.—Liber Deeds, DCLXXXII: 287; DCLXXXVII: 116; DCXCVI: 562. The old villa was demolished, and the present Brick Church erected on the site (see O 31, 1858).

23 "St. John's Chapel, in Varick-street, has been undergoing thorough repair and renovation this Summer. The unsightly old perch of a pulpit has been reduced to the ordinary level, the reading-desk has been remodeled, the seats improved and rendered more comfortable, and the appearance of things generally is greatly changed for the better."—N. Y. Daily Times, S 23, 1856.

Nov. 4 James Buchanan and John C. Breckinridge, Democrats, are elected president and vice-president. The Republican nominees were John C. Frémont and Wm. L. Dayton.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 87–105.

" Fernando Wood is re-elected mayor.—N. Y. Daily Times, N 5, 1856.

10 Thalberg, "the most eminent Pianist of the present day," gives his first concert in New York, at Niblo's Garden.—N. Y. Daily Times, O 31, N 10 and 11, 1856.

18 Laura Keene's new theatre or "Varieties," erected by J. M. Trimble on the east side of Broadway near Houston St., is opened with "As You Like It."—N. Y. Daily Times, N 19, 1856. See L. M. R. K., III: 984. There is a handbill of this theatre in the Emmet collection, item 11868.

29 The question of the removal of the Crystal Palace is under discussion by the committee on lands and places of the board of aldermen.—N. Y. Times, N 29, 1856; and see L. M. R. K., III: 983.

Dec. 1 Donald G. Mitchell ("Ik Marvel") is delivering a course of lectures before the Mercantile Library Association.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 2 and 8, 1856.

" The St. Andrews' Society celebrates its centennial anniversary.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 2, 1856.

3 "La Traviata" is performed for the first time in New York, at the Academy of Music.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 4, 1856.

4 The new building of the N. Y. Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, on Washington Heights (see N 22, 1853), is opened with 315 pupils. The grounds, which originally embraced 37½ acres, were subsequently reduced to about 11 acres by the extension of streets and boulevards. The buildings then included a main building, a hospital, power house and laundry, trade schools, and an academic building.—N. Y. Daily Times, D 5, 1856; Hist. of N. Y. Inst. for Instruction of Deaf and Dumb (1893); Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 631; L. M. R. K., III: 955.

18 "The attention of all who cross the Fulton Ferry is arrested to the new shot tower that Messrs. Tatham & Brothers are building on the lot adjoining St. George's Church, Fulton street, to the west. The tower will be 217 feet to peak from the foundation, which is laid on a level with Ferry-street. It is octagon in form, and composed of sections of iron columns, fluted on the outside—the space between filled in with brick laid in cement. Each of these columns rests upon a massive brick foundation, and is anchored to a weight of thirty tons, each weight connected, by inverted arches, with its fellows. The columns of each section are joined by iron girders, bolted with 1⅜-inch bolts. The total weight of iron employed in the construction of the tower is 237,000 pounds."—N. Y. Daily Times, D 18, 1856. The tower was at the rear of 82 Beekman St. and was similar to the one built in Centre St. in 1855 (q.v., O 1). The first five tiers of columns were perpendicular, the width of the interior of this section being 15 feet, and around this part was erected the building of the shot factory. Above rose the tower, narrowing to a width of 9 feet at the top.—Data supplied by Edwin Tatham of Tatham & Bros. who, in 1912, owned the original ledger and journal of this company. The tower was a conspicuous landmark in the lower section of the city for 50 years. It was demolished in 1907 (q.v., My 25). See also descrip. of Pl. 155-a, III: 777, where it is erroneously stated that it was erected in 1858–59. Dec. 18

31 The common council contracts with Theodore Hunt to build a new three-storey iron market building, from the plans of Bogardus & Lafferty, on the site of the old Tompkins Market. The old building was immediately torn down and the new one begun (see S 17, 1857). Temporary stands were put up around "Hell Square" in front of Cooper Union for the accommodation of the butchers until the new market was finished (see Ag 8, 1860).—Laws of N. Y. (1856) chap. 159; De Voe, Market Book, 555–56; L. M. R. K., III: 959.

— In this year, the famous "Sepoy Mutiny" broke out in India, and was finally crushed by the English.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 520–22.

— In this year, the "American Institute of Architects," the third architectural association in New York, and successor to the "Institution" of 1836 (q.v., D 6), was formed. It was a purely local organization.—See the Proceedings of the Institute; also King's Handbook (1893), 834. In 1867, the Institute was reorganized into a national body with chapters in various cities. The first chapter was organized at New York on March 19, 1867 (q.v.).

— In this year, the Historical Magazine began publication.—Winsor, VIII: 480; North, 117.

— In this year, Albert Bierstadt, the landscape painter, returned to America after several years of study abroad. In 1858, he accompanied Gen. Lander's exploring expedition to the West and gathered the material for his Rocky Mountain paintings upon which his fame principally rests.—Tuckerman, Book of the Artists, 387–97. See also Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting, 251–52.

— About this time, John Quincy Adams Ward, a pupil of Henry Kirke Brown, began to be known as a prominent sculptor. After spending a few years in Washington, D. C., Georgia, and Ohio, he finally settled in New York in 1861, and opened a studio here. His best known works are his Indian studies and his statues of Shakespeare and other famous men, several of which are in Central Park.—Tuckerman, Book of the Artists, 580–82.

— In this year, the N. Y. & New Haven R. R. erected a passenger station on the north half of the block between 26th and 27th Sts., on the west side of Fourth Ave., the south half being already occupied by the station of the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. These two stations, side by side, formed the nucleus of the Union Station idea in the United States. A view of them in this year was reproduced in the Eve. Post (Supp.), F 1, 1913, in a history of the N. Y. Central and allied lines. On July 15, the station of the New Haven line, at Canal St., was abandoned.—From chronology supplied by the company; L. M. R. K., III: 975, and authorities there cited.

— In this year, St. Vincent's Hospital was erected on Seventh Ave. from 11th to 12th St.—King's Handbook, 474; L. M. R. K., III: 955.

— In this year, the Orchard Street Friends' meeting-house was removed to its present site at 144 E. 20th St.—Cox, Cat. of Quaker Records (MS.). See also L. M. R. K., III: 928.

— A brief account of the trans-Atlantic, coastal, and inland steamship navigation of New York and vicinity, also of the railroad lines connecting with New York, and of the canal system, the telegraph, and the city ferries, in this year, was published in the Man. Com. Coun. (1857), 432–33. See also account of hotels, private residences, 1857 — theatres, etc. in ibid. (1857), 436 et seq. The following views are also found in this Manual: Mayor Fernando Wood's summer residence, Broadway and 77th St., 53; Burnham's Hotel, Bloomingdale Road, 336; Keating's store, cor. 5 Mayor Fernando Wood sends a communication to the council on the subject of official corruption and the need of a revision of the charter.—Communication of Mayor Wood, Ja 5, 1857.

Feb. 7 Wm. Allen Butler is author of a satirical poem, "Nothing to Wear." It immortalized "Miss Flora M'Flimsey, of Madison Square." It was first published in Harper's Weekly (q.v., I: 84). Later in the year, it was issued in book form by the firm of Rudd & Carleton, with illustrations by Augustus Hoppin. The satire at once became popular, and had a large and continued sale.

"A curious claim was made by a Miss Peck, a daughter of an Episcopal clergyman, of Greenwich, Conn., as to the authorship. She asserted in the public prints and elsewhere that she herself was the authoress of the then celebrated poem, that she lost it during one of her shopping excursions in a Madison Avenue stage, where it was probably found by Mr. Butler. [See ibid., I: 498.] A controversy ensued, which of course increased the sale of the book. In order to add fuel to the flame Mr. Carleton offered Mortimer M. Thomson, who had become a very popular writer under the nom de plume of 'Doesticks,' one dollar a line for a humorous poem on the subject in question; the offer was accepted, and in less than a week the author received from the publisher a check for eight hundred dollars, for eight hundred lines, making four times as much material as the poem in question, having as its title 'Nothing to Say,' which was something of a misnomer. The book was illustrated by John McLenan, who, at that time, was one of our most popular comic artists. It is hardly necessary to add that this book also had an immense sale."—Derby, Fifty Years Among Authors, 236–28.

13 The legislature authorises the city to raise a sum not exceeding $500,000 by the creation of stock to be called "the water stock of the city of New-York," and also to borrow an additional sum of $1,408,000 "for purchasing land and constructing the new reservoir."—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 24.

17 Peter Cooper founds the educational establishment named "The Peter Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art," and conveys to trustees the ground and building (with its equipment) bounded by Astor Place, Third and Fourth Aves., and 7th St. —Laws of N. Y. (1857), chaps. 31 and 149. See also ibid. (1859), chap. 279; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 670; and L. M. R. K., III: 956.

18 To relieve the pressure of traffic in Broadway, Mayor Wood recommends in a message to the council that an avenue parallel to Broadway be built, and that Broadway be widened "by withdrawing the permission granted to the owners of property to occupy a portion of the highway with areas, steps, porticoes, &c." "By removing all obstructions of these or any other kinds," he explains, "and flagging the sidewalks flush up to the line of the street, even with the houses, an average of upward of six feet would be gained on either side of the street—the curbs could then be set that distance further from the center of the street, and thus give twelve feet additional width." He also says: "The condition of the Russ pavement is also a subject of frequent complaint; this pavement should be grooved or removed altogether. The iron pavement opposite the Post Office in Nassau Street, meets general public approval, and I suggest that it be considered whether it would not be advantageously laid in Broadway."

Mayor Wood also urges the need of a new city hall. The possibility of building a court-house in "Madison Park" (see Ap 16, 1855) is being considered, as it is believed that Chambers St. is too far down town.—Communication of Mayor Wood, F 18, 1857. A law for the erection of a new city hall was passed on April 15 (q.v.).

Feb. 25 The Broadway Tabernacle has been sold to John J. Phelps for $125,000. It is to be replaced by business buildings.—N. Y. Daily Times, F 25, 1857. The last service was held in the Tabernacle on April 26.—Ibid., Ap 27, 1857. See also L. M. R. K., III: 928. A new Tabernacle was erected at 34th St. and Sixth Ave. (see D 25).

Mar. 2 The New York Arcade, in Broadway just above the Metropolitan Hotel and running through to Crosby St., is opened. It is "something of a novelty in New-York," and is "fitted into 32 stores or stalls, each of which will be occupied by a retailer in a different line of trade."—N. Y. Eve. Times, Mr 3, 1857.

4 James Buchanan is inaugurated president and John C. Breckinridge vice-president.—N. Y. Eve. Times, Mr 5, 1857.

6 The Dred Scott decision is handed down by the supreme court. —Macdonald, Select Docs. Illus. of the Hist. of U. S., 1776–1861, 416–35. For a discussion of the case and public opinion on the decision, see Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., II: 250 et seq.

" Bloomingdale Square (see D 10, 1850), laid out on the Commissioners' Map between 53d and 57th Sts., Eighth and Ninth Aves., is discontinued, and 54th, 55th, and 56th Sts. are extended through this land.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 73; L. M. R. K., III: 968.

7 "A New Yorker proposes to purchase milk in large quantities of farmers living near railroads, and condensing it at the time and place of receipt, by a mode known to him, in such manner that he takes from it the eighty-eight parts of water it contains, and retains only the nutritious portions. This residuum, which will, of course, occupy but about one-eighth the space of the original milk, he proposes then placing in large air-tight cans, in which it can be transported to any part of the world, and kept for any length of time perfectly sweet and pure. By a peculiar contrivance of the vent, the condensed milk can be drawn off from the cans in any quantity desired, without injury to the remainder. To use the condensed milk it is only necessary to add eight parts of water to it. If this plan proves practicable, it would seem easy thus to furnish for the use of cities a plentiful supply of pure milk—a great desideratum; while at the same time, farmers, and especially dairymen, would realize a far greater profit than heretofore from their cows."—Harper's Weekly, I: 158. The New Yorker here referred to was probably Gail Borden, who had obtained, on Aug. 19, 1856, a patent for condensing milk. In 1858, he and the other owners of the patent formed the "New-York Condensed Milk Company."—Gail Borden, Inventor and Manufacturer.

9 The first legislative commission on tenement-houses, appointed in 1856 (q.v.), makes a detailed report concerning the wretched conditions in New York and the magnitude of the evils arising therefrom. Accompanying this, they submit a bill providing for a board of three commissioners who shall have power to inspect tenement-houses at any time, to compel landlords to remedy unsanitary or dangerous conditions, and to keep a record of all tenement-houses and the number, age, sex, etc. of occupants, making an annual report of the work accomplished by them. The plan of a separate tenement-house department, here suggested for the first time, was unfortunately not adopted by the legislature.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 90–92, 117.

"The appointment of the first tenement house commission in New York, in the winter of 1856–57, which was followed by the creation of the metropolitan board of health in 1866, marks the beginning of serious interest in the housing of city wage earners in this country." There were three subsequent commissions, one in 1884, one in 1887, and one which completed its labours at the end of 1894.—E. R. L. Gould, "The Housing of the Working People," in 8th Special Rep., Com'r of Labor (Wash., 1895).

10 "A very striking map has been prepared and printed illustrating the proposed location of the City Post-Office on the lower angle of the Park. It marks the extension of Beekman-street across the Park, and shows that the angle thus cut off would have an area of 35,974 square feet—while the Brick Church plot, on which the President once decided to locate the Post-Office, contains but 18,845. Its sides would measure 186 feet on Park-row, 247 across from Park-row to Broadway, 195 feet on Broadway, and 119 feet across its lower point.

"The extension of Beekman-street across the Park will very speedily be demanded by the exigencies of trade; and then this area thus cut off, unless devoted to some such public purpose, will be almost wholly useless."—N. Y. Eve. Times, Mr 10, 1857. See D 29. Mail St. received its name in recent years.

1857 Mar. 14 The demolition of the old Brick Church in Beekman St. (see My 14, 1856) is begun.—N. Y. Daily Times, Mr 16, 1857. See also ibid., Mr 19, Ap 2 and 13, 1857, and Harper's Weekly, I: 262. There are views showing the demolition, in ibid., I: 292–93, and Emmet coll., No. 11585. The new Brick Church was dedicated on Oct. 31, 1858 (q.v.). The Times building was erected on the site of the old church (see My 12).

28 "People living in the West, in New England, in Pennsylvania, and the South may not be aware that this city of New York is about to undergo the penalty which, in monarchical countries, has been often inflicted on revolted districts or conquered places. We are about to be deprived of that right of self-government which is generally, though it seems erroneously, supposed to be the essential ingredient of all political institutions in the United States. . . .

"Our crime is to have held different opinions on political matters from the rural constituencies of the State. We have had the misfortune to give Buchanan a round majority when the State was overwhelmingly carried by Frémont. It has been our unhappiness to disapprove and nullify a liquor prohibition act which was much esteemed in the rural districts. . . .

"For these manifest sins, it is proposed to punish us in this wise:

"Our city charter, and our municipal institutions generally, are to be recast and transformed. We are to have an independent comptroller, elected for a longer term than the mayor, not responsible to him, and holding the city purse in his hand. . . . We are to have an independent counsel, also elected by the people, and not responsible to the mayor. . . . Thus the mayor—who usually belongs to the party opposed to the politicians of the rural district—will not be able to enforce a single prosecution, or to pay a single dollar of the city money.

"But this is only the beginning. The appointment of the police has usually been vested in functionaries elected by the people of the city. . . . This is now to be altered, and the appointment of the police of the city is to be taken from the commissioners and vested in a new board, of which the majority will be appointed by the Governor, and elected by the counties of Kings, Westchester, and Richmond. . . .

"Within the next few years several millions of money will be spent in this city on the construction of a City Hall, and on laying out the Central Park. That money will come out of our pockets or be borrowed on our credit. Not a dollar will be obtained from the State. How many millions will be spent can not yet be safely stated; perhaps twenty—all our money. It is the design of our masters to use this money in future elections, and they therefore propose to place it in such hands that the Citizens of New York shall have no control over any portion of it. It is to be intrusted to and expended by commissioners appointed by the Governor. . . .

"This is our punishment. Our masters from the rural districts cripple our mayor . . . secure for themselves the patronage of our police force . . . and lay hands on twenty millions of our money as sinews of war for the next ten years' elections. We submit that the scheme is equally ingenious, oppressive and unprincipled."—Harper's Weekly, I: 194. See My 2. The police law was passed on April 15 (q.v.).

31 The N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. is required before Dec. 31 to remove from Harlem River the old railroad bridge or as much of it as obstructs the river. The building of the new bridge of this company, from Mott Haven to Harlem, is legalized.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 207.

Apr. 4 "A bill is now before the Legislature to throw a suspension bridge over the East River from New York to Brooklyn, with a span higher than the sky sail of the tallest clipper, with one terminus near the Park on the New York side, and the other far enough back in Brooklyn to secure an easy grade of ascent. The plan is pronounced feasible and within the cost of a profitable investment, by Mr. Roebling, the architect of the Niagara suspension bridge."—Harper's Weekly, I: 214. The Brooklyn Bridge was not begun until 1870.—L. M. R. K., III: 925.

9 A resolution passed by the board of councilmen to increase the compensation of the members of both chambers of the common council from $4 to $8 per meeting does not meet the concurrence of the board of aldermen. They declare that the members, when elected, "understood the salary which they would receive for their services; no change has been made, either in the mode or time of meeting; the sessions of both Boards are the same, in every respect, as heretofore, and no additional labor has been imposed upon the members by law, which would warrant or justify an increase in their pay."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXVI: 37–38. A newspaper comment reads: "The unanimity with which the report was adopted reflects credit upon the aldermen. When the measure passed the Board of Councilmen it received only sixteen votes, although that body consists of sixty members; and the presumption therefore is, that the scheme was hurried through at a meeting but thinly attended, and that it does not represent the sentiment of the majority."—Eve. Post, Ap 10, 1857. Apr. 9

10 The assembly appoints a committee "to enquire into the practicability and propriety of constructing a wrought iron tunnel under the east river between New-York and Brooklyn for the accommodation of travel, upon the plan and principle proposed by John W. Cochrane."—Laws of N. Y. (1857), II: 795–96.

" A committee of the aldermen reports that "the public necessities imperatively demand" the immediate erection of "a new City Hall," and they advise Madison Square as a central location. It is further recommended that negotiations be opened with the federal government for the sale of the present buildings in City Hall Park together with such land there as may be wanted by that government.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXVI: 30–37.

13 A contract is awarded to Jones & Hitchcock, at 40 cents per pound, for a bell to be placed in the Mt. Morris bell-tower (see F 19, 1856).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXV: 20, 93. See Ap 25, 1860, and S 28, 1864.

14 Important amendments to the city charter are adopted by the state legislature:

1. The aldermen are reduced in number from 22 to 17 and are to be elected from "aldermanic districts" instead of wards, and these new districts are defined (they are made identical with assembly districts—see Legislative Manual, 1858, 317). Aldermen first elected under this act from districts with "an odd numerical designation" shall serve for one year, those from districts with even number, for two years. Subsequently all shall have two-year terms.

2. The number of councilmen is reduced from 60 to 24, six from each of the four senatorial districts, with one-year terms.

3. The election day for mayor and members of both boards is changed from the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November to the first Tuesday in December.

4. Whereas previously measures involving the appropriation of money had to originate in the board of councilmen (see Ap 12, 1853), now any ordinance may originate in either board.

5. The numerous executive offices that were established, and, in general, made elective by charter amendments eight years earlier (see Ap 26, 1849) are reduced in number and made appointive, with the exception of the mayor, comptroller, and corporation counsel. The comptroller's office is given added importance in that he is to be "voted for on a separate ballot" and given a four-year term (the mayor continuing to be elected biennally). All three officers may be "removed by the governor for cause." In addition to the department of finance and the law department, headed respectively by the comptroller and the corporation counsel, there are to be only four other departments, namely, the street department, the almshouse department, the city inspector's department, and the Croton aqueduct board, heads of the same to be appointed by the mayor "with the advice and consent of the board of aldermen." The term for these appointees is to be two years except in the case of the aqueduct board, and, with the same exception, they are removable by a two thirds vote of the board of aldermen; they may also be removed by the mayor with the consent of the aldermen, and they may be suspended by him "during any recess of the common council." These amendments were to take effect on May 1, and were not subject to a referendum, as was the amended charter of 1853 (q.v., April 12).—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 446. It is to be observed that the control of the police department passed to the state at this time (see Ap 15). At the time when the officers elected under this amended charter assumed office the editor of the Herald expressed the hope that the city might some day have a charter "framed for the public interest, and not for political adventurers." He pleaded for a machine to which the mayor alone "would possess the key," and declared that, "with the imperium in imperio created by the new charter, in the independent powers granted to the Comptroller and the Corporation Counsel, it is evident that the present system must work unsatisfactorily both for the public and the Mayor."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 4, 1858. For the first city election under the amended charter, see D 1.

1857 Apr. 14 The demolition of old Columbia College on Church St. is begun, the buildings having been sold in January.—N. Y. Eve. Times, Ap 15 and My 9, 1857; Hist. of Columbia Univ., 130. The old college was entirely demolished by May 11.—Eve. Post, My 11, 1857. See also L. M. R. K., III: 940, and descrip. of Pl. 142-b, III: 712. See, further, My 9 and 12.

The treasurer of the board, selected by the members from their own number, shall receive an annual salary of $3,000, and each other commissioner shall receive $8 "for each day of actual service." The expenses of the board are to be met by local taxation for this special purpose, and the fund derived therefrom "shall be styled the police fund" and be paid into the state treasury to be disbursed by the treasurer of the police board.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 569. This law encountered much opposition in New York and caused dissentions between the new and old police departments.—Harper's Weekly, I: 65, 289. See Ap 20.

" The legislature creates a separate board of 12 supervisors for the county of New York (the common council of the city had served as supervisors of the county since 1813, q.v., Ap 5). These officers are to be voted for annually "upon a separate general ticket, but only six names for supervisors shall be upon one ticket." The six having "the highest number of votes" are elected, but subsequently the six having the next highest number of votes shall be appointed as supervisors by the mayor. A board as thus created is dominated by no one political party. Acts of this board are subject to the mayor's veto, but, after a lapse of ten days, a majority vote may override the veto. Supervisors are to render service without compensation.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 590. Inasmuch as this board was subordinate to the state legislature in the levying of taxes, and subject to the city comptroller in its expenditures, "Tweed Ring" politicians cooperated under such an arrangement subsequently to fleece the city. Six Republican supervisors were elected, on Dec. 1 (q.v.), but the six defeated Democrats were appointed supervisors in accordance with this new law and Wm. M. Tweed was one of them.

" The legislature directs the commissioners of the land office to sell the state arsenal, in Central Park opposite E. 64th St., and to purchase other land in the city for a new arsenal. If the mayor and aldermen, or the Central Park commissioners, desire to buy the arsenal property for incorporation with the park, they are authorised to do so for $275,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 630. See also ibid. (1859), chap. 205 and L. M. R. K., III: 923. See Je 9.

16 An act is passed to establish regulations for the port of New York; and, on April 17, another to establish bulkhead and pier lines for this port.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chaps. 672 and 763. The law regarding pier and bulkhead lines was amended on April 24, 1862.—Ibid. (1862), chap. 481.

17 The legislature appoints five commissioners for erecting a new city hall (see F 18) "upon that portion of the park lying on the rear of the present city hall, bounded by Broadway, Chambers and Centre streets, or so much thereof as may be found necessary." Before deciding upon the plans or specifications the commissioners are to offer "to conform any portion of the interior plans of said building to the purpose of a post office, and the accommodation of the courts of the United States, and to convey to the United States government the portion of ground covered by said building so occupied." The mayor and aldermen are authorised to raise, by creation of public stock, a sum not exceeding $10,000,000 for the erection of the city hall.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 770; N. Y. Eve. Times, Ap 24, 1857. The common council opposed this law and sought to have it repealed.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXV: 77, 149; XXVI: 38. See also My 2 and 9. It was repealed on April 17, 1858 (q.v.), and another law for the purpose passed. Apr. 17

" Central Park (see My 21, 1856) is placed under the exclusive control of a board of 11 members, to be known as "The Commissioners of the Central Park," and the city is authorised to issue corporate stock to provide funds for building the park.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 771; 16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 465; descrip. of Pl. 149A-a, III: 724. The new commissioners advertised for plans for the improvement of the park, and out of the 33 submitted, chose the one by Olmsted and Vaux (see Ap 28, 1858). See illustration in this volume.

" The legislature passes an act providing that on April 1, 1858, "the present toll bridge, built by John B. Coles, and his assigns, over the Harlem river at the terminus of the Third avenue, in the county of New-York, connecting it with the county of Westchester" shall become the property of the state and "forever thereafter be a free bridge and public highway." The counties of New York and Westchester are to appoint bridge tenders to make any necessary repairs and to open the draw, and the counties are to bear all expenses. The mayor and street commissioner of New York City and the county judge and chairman of the board of supervisors of Westchester are constituted "the commissioners of the Harlem bridge," and are authorised to determine when the bridge requires rebuilding.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 774. On April 17, 1861, other commissioners were appointed, and it was ordered that "no plan for the rebuilding and reconstruction of said bridge shall be adopted which, in the opinion of the majority of the commissioners, shall obstruct the proper navigation of the Harlem river, provided that nothing herein contained shall authorize the construction of a high bridge or any bridge which will require a change in the grade of Third avenue and the streets and avenues adjacent thereto."—Ibid. (1861), chap. 291.

18 The legislature authorises the street commissioner to open Battery Place in accordance with a plan adopted by the common council on Dec. 31, 1853. It also provides that a ferry slip may be constructed at the foot of Battery Place with the consent of the counsel, not nearer than 119 feet from pier No. 1, North River, and that thereafter no pier shall be built between the two.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 785.

" The Woman's Hospital (see Je 2, 1855) is incorporated by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1857), chap. 801. See Ap 17, 1858.

20 The board of aldermen adopts the following resolution: "Whereas, in the opinion of this Board, the act of the legislature, known as the Police Bill [see Ap 15] is unconstitutional and void; therefore be it

" "Resolved, that his Honor the Mayor, the Recorder and City Judge be, and are hereby directed to retain possession of all the property belonging to or connected with the Police Department, and refuse to acknowledge or obey the Police Commissioners (so called) in said act, but to continue in the discharge of their duties as heretofore imposed on them by virtue of the laws appointing them as commissioners."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXVI: 129. Subsequently this position of the common council was held to be untenable, and the legislative act constitutional.—Ibid., XVI: 101–2.

21 "Jones' Woods, which was so long retained as a place sacred to the enjoyment of long-pursed people, then for three years struggled over as the site for our great Park, and then suddenly dropped when the Central Park was hit upon, fairly comes into market to-day for City lots . . . at least 350 lots, scattered over and through the famous 'Woods,' are to be offered by Mr. Bleecker to-day, at the Exchange, to the highest bidder."—N. Y. Eve. Times, Ap 21, 1857.

May 2 "The Mayor and Common Council are taking measures to nullify the newly-passed Charter and Police Acts [see Ap 15]. Two injunctions . . . have been obtained, restraining the new Police Commissioners from entering upon the discharge of their duties. The liquor-dealers have taken measures to test the constitutionality of the new Excise law. The merchants have done the same with regard to the Post-Warden Act . . . and the Central Park and City Hall acts are likewise to be tested in the courts."—Harper's Weekly, I: 278. See also N. Y. Eve. Times, Ap 23, 1857. See further, My 9.

8 "A remarkable application of science to the domestic purposes of life will be made in a few days at one of our most popular theatres. It is intended to light up the innumerable burners before and behind the scenes entirely by electricity. Instead of a clumsy 1857 May 8 gasman staggering beneath the weight of a long pole and a taper, two wires will be touched, and instantly every light in the house will be illuminated. The effect is in the highest degree startling and beautiful, and the process by which it is produced will doubtless come into general use. The lighting of public buildings as at present conducted is a slow and troublesome job. After the introduction of electricity it will be effected with the rapidity of thought."—N. Y. Eve. Times, My 8, 1857. The experiment was made at the Broadway Theatre on May 25 with an apparatus patented by a Mr. Gardiner. It was, however, defective, for it failed to ignite all the burners and it was "far from being instantaneous in its operation." Also, the escape of gas which occurred before all the burners were lighted "created anything but a pleasant sensation." A similar experiment was made "many years ago" at the Polytechnic Institution, London.—Ibid., My 28, 1857.

9 "A proposal has been made to divide the State of New York into two new States, drawing the line north of the Island of Manhattan, so as to include in the southern division the counties of Westchester, New York, and Richmond, with Long Island. The ground for the proposal is that the metropolitan ideas of the city and its suburbs clash so violently with the rural ideas of the northern part of the State, that a continuance under the same government is certain to produce endless confusion, strife, and conflict between the Judiciary and the Legislature. A convention is proposed to take the matter into serious consideration.

"It need hardly be said that the division of a State into two or more States is no new thing. Massachusetts and Virginia have both undergone the operation with manifest gain. Nor can there be doubt but the two States—Manhattan and Orange—which would spring out of the bisection of New York, would be well qualified to take a position among the greatest members of the confederacy. We presume that the population of the State of Manhattan would not be less than 1,500,000, while the State of Orange might contain 2,500,000 souls. The former would become a sort of Venice or Hamburg, on a new and enormously increased scale."—Harper's Weekly, I: 290.

" "The new City Charter has gone into effect, though the Aldermen resolved to contest its constitutionality, and Mr. Selah, Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies, whose office is abolished by it, refuses to vacate his apartments. The contest on the Police Act continues [see My 2]. . . . The Central Park Act has gone into effect. The Excise Act is to be resisted by the liquor dealers. The new City Hall Commissioners [see Ap 17] have been sworn in."—Harper's Weekly, I: 294. Regarding the police feud, see My 30.

" Final exercises are held in old Columbia College in Church St. (see Ap 14) prior to the removal of the college to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum buildings. During the day, the corner-stone of the first building was disinterred.—Eve. Post, My 9, 1857. It was built into the east wall of the college chapel on 49th St. and remained there until it was removed in 1897 and inserted in the mantelpiece of the trustees' room in the University library on Morningside Heights.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 130–31. See My 12.

12 Columbia College opens its sessions in the old Deaf and Dumb Asylum between 49th and 50th Sts. (see 1856).—N. Y. Eve. Times, Ap 1 and My 12, 1857; Hist. of Columbia Univ., 130–34; L. M. R. K., III: 940. Its new home is thus described: "The new location of the College is a delightful one, and undesirable only on account of the distance uptown—an objection which, by the tendency of population, will be in a few years obviated. The old Asylum buildings have been altered somewhat, repaired, and greatly improved. The two wings have been separated from the main building. The east wing is occupied by the Chapel and the extensive Library of the College; the centre for the recitation rooms and the residence of President King; and the west wing for the residences of some of the College Professors. A beautiful lawn slopes from the College southward down to 49th Street, and is ornamented by some fine old trees. This will be for the present the main entrance to the College, but as soon as the more extensive grounds northward to 50th Street can be graded, laid out, and properly embellished, the principal entrance will be in that direction. The site is on a commanding eminence, affording an extensive and pleasant view. That part of the city is still quite new, and the hand of improvement is visible in all directions."—Eve. Post, My 11, 1857. See also descrip. of Pl. 142-b, III: 712. See, further, My 30.

" The corner-stone of a new Times building is laid at Park Row and Spruce St. The building is to occupy the site formerly covered by the old Brick Church (see Mr 14).—N. Y. Eve. Times, My 13, 1857. See also L. M. R. K., III: 968, and descrip. of Pl. 152-b, III, 772. The building was first used on May 1, 1858 (q. v.). May 12

" The New York Infirmary for Women and Children is opened at No. 64 Bleecker St.—N. Y. Eve. Times, My 13, 1857.

19 The New York Mariners' Home at No. 173 Cherry St. is opened.—N. Y. Eve. Times, My 20, 1857.

25 The supreme court declares the Metropolitan Police Law (see Ap 15) constitutional.—N. Y. Eve. Times, My 26, 1857.

30 "New York presents to the eyes of her sister cities the disgraceful spectacle of confirmed anarchy. The last few days have witnessed an ignominious conflict between two sets of individuals for the control of the police; men high in office entering the lists as attorneys of peace breakers; a Mayor vainly striving to avert an open conflict with deadly weapons between two sets of guardians of the public peace; hardened politicians making merry over the prospect of the subjugation of the city; every where anarchy, confusion, disorder, and contempt for laws."—Harper's Weekly, I: 338. See also ibid., I: 358, 402, 406. The dissensions between the two police forces were finally decided by the courts (see Jl 2).

" "There is a stir in old Columbia. With the increasing revenues of the College, whose property is estimated at $2,000,000, has naturally arisen the desire to elevate its standing to the character of a University, by a more competent and rigid course of study. In order to effect this, it has been proposed by Professor Anderson, one of the most efficient members of the Board of Trustees, to extend the collegiate course from four to six years, and to induce the students to pursue a more thorough course by a system of rewards proportioned to their acquirements, among which a list of Fellowships is contemplated, with a salary of $500 a year, for those who shall have completed the full curriculum of studies, and meritoriously received the highest honors of the College."—Harper's Weekly, I: 342.

June 9 The board of aldermen passes an ordinance providing for the purchase of the state arsenal grounds in Central Park for $275,000 (see Ap 15).—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 8–10, 1857. The property was incorporated with the park and long used as a museum, and later as offices of the park dept.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 437–38; L. M. R. K., III: 923. The arsenal is shown and described in Gleason's Pictorial, VII: 133.

13 The governor appoints D. D. Conover street commissioner to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Commissioner Taylor. This appointment was made on the basis of existing law, but "as the new city charter [see Ap 14] provides that the vacancy shall be filled by the Mayor, by and with the advice and consent of the Board of Aldermen, this proceeding of the Governor is likely to lead to some trouble and an appeal to the law courts."—N. Y. Herald, Je 14, 1857. For the trouble that resulted, see Je 16.

14 The corner-stone of the R. C. Church of St. Vincent de Paul is laid in 23d St. between Sixth and Seventh Aves.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 15, 1857.

16 "Civil War in the Metropolis:" Under this headline is described in the Herald the controversy over the new incumbent in the office of street commissioner (see Je 13). Conover, the governor's appointee, is forcibly ejected from the office in the hall of records when he endeavours to assume his duties. Upon his complaint to Recorder Smith, the latter issued an order for the arrest of Mayor Wood. An altercation followed on the steps of city hall, between the "Metropolitans" supporting Conover and the "Municipals" supporting the mayor, with much bloodshed. The Seventh Regiment, marching down Broadway to embark for the Bunker Hill celebration in Boston, was called upon to quell the riot. Immediately the mayor nominated, and the common council confirmed, Charles Devlin as street commissioner, and it remained for the courts to decide who was the legal incumbent.—N. Y. Herald, Je 17, 1857. For the decision of the court of appeals, see Ap 9, 1858.

" Gen. Wm. Walker, "the champion of republican liberty in Nicaragua," arrives in New York and is welcomed with great enthusiasm.—N. Y. Daily Times, Je 12–17, 1857. See also ibid., Je 18–21, 23, 29, and 30, 1857.

July 2 The court of appeals declares the Metropolitan Police Bill constitutional. On July 3, Mayor Wood yielded to the decision and disbanded the municipal force.—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 3 and 4, 1857. See also Harper's Weekly, I: 434.

4 A riot occurs in the Bowery as a result of a gang feud between

1857 July 4 the "Bowery Boys" and the "Dead Rabbits," precipitated by professional bullies of the Sixth Ward. It is carried on in Bayard, Elizabeth, Mott, Worth, Centre, and neighbouring streets, and is finally quelled by the militia, including the 4th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 55th, and 71st Regiments.—N. Y. Tribune, Jl 6, 1857. Another riot occurred on July 5.—Harper's Weekly, I: 438.

11 "Extensive improvements are making at Bellevue Hospital. An additional story is adding to the main building and to each of the wings. . . . The cupola on the main building . . . is to be moved back so as to surmount the westerly part of the edifice. Where it now stands a large glass dome will be erected, through which daylight will be admitted into a new and commodious apartment that is to occupy the entire fourth story. This chamber will be used for a lecture-room and operating theatre. . . . There will be Hospital accommodations at Bellevue for 1,200 patients when the present alterations are completed. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Times, Jl 11, 1857.

Aug. 6 The first attempt to lay the Atlantic cable, projected by Cyrus W. Field of New York, is begun at Valencia Bay, Ireland. After 335 miles had been laid, the cable broke, and the expedition had to return. There was another unsuccessful expedition in the spring of 1858, and the cable was not completed until the summer of that year (see Ag 5, 1858). It broke, however, soon after and was not permanently laid until 1866 (q. v., Jl 6).—Mullaly, Laying of the Cable (1858); Field, Hist. of the Atlan. Telegraph (1869). 11 "The work of filling in the Battery, which was begun six years ago, is likely to occupy two or three years longer before it is completed. . . . Some portion of the outer wall has settled on account of being laid upon a soft bottom; the water, is, in some places, three fathoms deep, and requires a large amount of material to fill it up. Eleven acres in all have now been filled, and two more remain to be filled. Trees will then be planted, walks laid out, and in the course of time there will be twenty-six acres of fine promenade."—N. Y. Daily Times, Ag 11, 1857. See Ja 11, 1858.

24 The panic of 1857 begins with the suspension in New York of the Ohio Life and Mutual Trust Co. It spread through the country and resulted in a general suspension of specie payments (see O 13). Many business firms failed, and thousands of men were out of employment. United States troops were placed in charge of the New York custom-house and assay office to protect them from mob violence (see N 2).—*N. Y. 17 "At last ground has been broken for the new Tompkins Market [see D 31, 1856], at the junction of Third and Fourth-avenues, and the iron building is in progress of erection. The plan of the market includes a large hall, the use of which has been given by the Common Council to the Seventh Regiment as a drill-room and armory" (see O 1, 1860).—N. Y. Daily Times, S 17, 1857. See also ibid., Je 2, 1858; N. Y. Daily Tribune, O 28, 1859; De Voe, Market Book, 556. The market was opened on Aug. 8, 1860 (q. v.).

23 The "Fulton St. prayer-meeting" of the Reformed Dutch Church is started in the consistory-room in the three-storey building in the rear of the North Dutch Church, at 103 Fulton St., which was erected in the summer of 1844.—Chambers, Noon Prayer Meeting (1858), 43; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 664.

Oct. 13 All the banks of New York City, except the Chemical Bank, unanimously agree to suspend specie payments.—Harper's Weekly, I: 646, 674; N. Y. Times, O 14, 1837. See also Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 39.

15 A new theatre is opened on Broadway, "in Wood's new marble building, on the site of the old Lyceum of Natural History."—N. Y. Times, O 16, 1857. The theatre was closed in 1859, and the premises became the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Bank.—L. M. R. K., III: 986.

22 Because of the large number of unemployed, Mayor Wood, in a message to the common council, recommends further public works, including Central Park, a new reservoir, and the construction of new streets. He also urges that the comptroller be authorised to advertise for estimates for furnishing the corporation with 50,000 bbls. of flour and a corresponding quantity of corn meal and potatoes, to be paid for "by the issue of a public construction stock, redeemable in fifty years, and bearing seven per cent. interest; these provisions to be disposed of to laborers to be employed upon the public works referred to, in lieu of money, at its cost price to the Corporation. . . . Twenty-five per cent. could be paid in cash."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXVIII: 158–59. For action taken by board of aldermen, see N 9.

Oct. 22

28 At a special session of the supreme court an injunction is issued in behalf of D. D. Conover, commanding Charles Devlin "absolutely to desist and refrain from performing or attempting to perform any of the duties of Street Commissioner [see Je 16] . . . and from interfering with the plaintiff in the performance of duties as such Street Commissioner, until some right in the said Devlin be established by the proper action in the nature of quo warranto, brought for that purpose." A temporary injunction had been issued on Aug. 17.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 101–2. While this injunction served to give Conover possession of the commissioner's office and access to the records and documents therein, neither Mayor Wood nor the common council gave Conover official recognition; furthermore, litigation was commenced resulting in the granting of another injunction restraining Conover from making contracts "for opening and regulating sundry streets."—Ibid., LXIX: 82–83.

Nov. 2 It is stated that from thirty to forty thousand labourers have been thrown out of work in New York City as a result of the hard times. Numerous hunger meetings were held in Tompkins Square, and the people marched through the streets calling for bread and work. At Mayor Wood's request the city corporation voted $250,000 to give work in Central Park to the unemployed. The unrest was so great that troops were called out to guard the custom-house and the sub-treasury.—McMaster, Hist. of the People of the U. S., VIII: 298–99, 300, 302; N. Y. Times, O 23, N 3, 4, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 19, 20, 21, 1857; N. Y. Eve. Post, N 12, 1857.

3 The new building of the New York Historical Society, on Second Ave. and 10th St. (see O 17, 1855), is opened with appropriate ceremonies.—N. Y. Times, N 4, 1857; L. M. R. K., III: 957. It is described in Harper's Weekly, I: 562–63.

9 Reporting upon the petition of the unemployed and the communication from Mayor Wood (see O 22), the finance committee presents to the board of aldermen the following resolutions which are adopted:

"Resolved, That it is inexpedient at this time to adopt the suggestions contained in the message of his Honor the Mayor, . . . relative to a proposed issue of stock to procure large supplies of food, to be furnished at cost prices to the laborers employed on the public works.

"Resolved, That the Comptroller be, and he is hereby directed to expedite, as much as possible, the contemplated grading of Hamilton square, and that, upon the passage of the Central Park Improvement appropriation, he take immediate steps to realize the money contemplated to be raised by the passage of the ordinance.

"Resolved, That in making up the annual tax levy for the year 1858, the Comptroller be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to insert therein, in addition to the annual appropriation for roads, the sum of fifty thousand dollars, to be expended in Macadamizing the Second avenue, from Forty-second to Eighty-sixth street, and such other streets and avenues as the Common Council may, from time to time, direct."

The committee states that the aldermen "have passed an ordinance, appropriating two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the Central Park Improvement, which now only awaits the action of the Board of Councilmen, and the approval of the Mayor, to meet in part, the demand for labor by the unemployed. It will, no doubt, be made available and applied to the purpose intended during the present week."

It is impossible for the common council to do anything about commencing the "New Reservoir," because of "litigation growing out of the award of contract, made by the Croton Aqueduct Department."

Matters connected with street improvements, repairing wharves and bridges, and repair of public buildings are no longer under the control of the common council, because of the interference of the state and the appointment by the governor of the head of the 1857 Nov. 9 street department. The committee complains that these are "matters which the Common Council cannot control, as this important branch of the city government is now under restraint, and will be likely to continue so, until the judiciary is freed from the baneful blight of partisanship, and officers of the people's choice supercede the appointees of the executive at Albany."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXVIII: 271–79.

11 The first block of granite for the Worth monument (see Ag 7 and D 5, 1854) is "taken from the vessel by Bishop's floating derrick, at the Grand-street dock, and moved to Madison-square, without injury. It is the largest block of stone ever trucked through our streets, weighing some 30 tons. It was moved by W. R. Smith, Esq., upon a truck constructed expressly for the purpose, and required the power of eighteen horses."—N. Y. Times, N 16, 1857. See N 24 and 25.

24 The remains of Maj.-Gen. Wm. J. Worth are removed from Greenwood Cemetery and escorted by a military procession to the New York city hall, where the body lies in state all day.—N. Y. Times, N 25, 1857. See N 25.

25 The body of Maj.-Gen. Worth (see N 24) is deposited with imposing civic and military honours in the ground at Madison Square upon which the monument to his memory is being erected (see N 11). At the same time the corner-stone of the monument is placed in position with full Masonic ceremonies, and the memorial is formally dedicated. Mayor Fernando Wood delivers the principal address. The monument is at present "only five or six feet above the ground, having a foundation of twelve feet."—N. Y. Times, N 26, 1857; Reports on the Erection of a Monument to the Memory of Wm. J. Worth, etc. (N. Y., 1857). The ceremonies are shown on Pl. 148-a, Vol. III, reproducing the folding plate following the title page in the above-mentioned report. The monument "is to be constructed wholly of granite from Quincy, Massachusetts, and will consist of a shaft fifty-one feet high. . . . The base is fifteen feet square, and the front panel of the die will contain an equestrian bronze statue of General Worth, in alto-relievo. The shaft will be ornamented with representations of trophies of war and military implements in use at Lundy's Lane, Mexico, and Florida. Upon the four sides of the shaft will be inscribed the names of all the battles, etc., in which General Worth participated."—Harper's Weekly, I: 772, which also contains view. See also Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City, 143, and L. M. R. K., III: 965.

Dec. 1 In the municipal election, the date of which was changed in the amended charter (see Ap 14), Mayor Wood is defeated for re-election by Daniel F. Tiemann, the election being close. Aldermen are elected for the first time from 17 aldermanic districts, according to the amended charter (see Ap 14), and likewise, for the first time, 24 councilmen are elected from the four senatorial districts. Under the new law, whereby a separate board of 12 supervisors is chosen (see Ap 15), it is reported that "the six Republican candidates for supervisors are elected;" but in the same column, when the election results are summarized, a list of six Democrats (actually appointees of the mayor under the new law) as well as one of six Republicans appears under the caption "Supervisors Elected." Wm. M. Tweed heads the list of Democrats.—Eve. Post, D 2, 1857. See also Harper's Weekly, I: 785.

25 The corner-stone of a new church for the worshippers at the late Broadway Tabernacle (see F 25) is laid at the n. e. cor. of 34th St. and Sixth Ave.—N. Y. Times, D 26, 1857; L. M. R. K., III: 928. The church was dedicated on April 24, 1859 (q. v.).

29 The board of aldermen votes to sell the lower end of City Hall Park to the U. S. as a site for a post-office.—N. Y. Times, D 30, 1857. See Ap 2, 1861.

Dec. 31 The city government passes an ordinance repealing that of 1855 (see summary under Ja 9, 1854), when all proceedings in the efforts of interested property owners to extend Albany St. through Trinity churchyard were stayed. This new ordinance permits the street to be cut through. In the course of the hearings in opposition to it, the Rev. Dr. Vinton made a notable and effective plea. "That ended the matter and the scheme has not been revived."—Dix, Hist. of Trinity Church, IV: 449–50. See also 1858.

In this year, Jews were first admitted to the house of commons. —Hazen, Europe since 1815, 458.

— The General Regulations for the Military Forces of the State of N. Y., for 1858, prescribe that every pike-pole or staff to which the flags, standards, guidons, or colours are to be attached shall be surmounted with a gilt eagle—Preble, Hist. of the Flag of the U. S. of Am., etc. (1880), 616.

— In this year, Daniel Huntington, the painter, after several extended visits abroad, returned to New York, where he resided and continued his profession. He held a leading position among the artists of America. He was for many years president of the Century Association, and the National Academy of Design. He was very prolific in the painting of portraits, but he produced, also, landscape, genre, allegory, and still-life.—Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting, 281–86. See also Tuckerman, Book of the Artists, 321–32.

— In this year, James Lenox presented to the N. Y. Historical Society a large collection of Nineveh sculptures, which the society named the "Lenox Marbles." These had been originally purchased by Henry Stevens in 1853, and were bought from him by Mr. Lenox for $3,000. "They consisted of 13 slabs, about a foot thick, with sculptures in bas-relief, generally about 7½ feet high, and averaging 6 feet in width, the whole, ranged side by side, measuring 72 feet 2 inches."—Stevens, Recollections of Mr. James Lenox, 118–27.

— A new and well-illustrated guide-book was published this year and the next, entitled Nelson's Guide to the City of New York and its Neighbourhood.

— In this year, "Macy's" was founded at the s. e. cor. of Sixth Ave. and 14th St., by Rowland H. Macy, a retired sea-captain. For view of this store, see Brown's Book of Old N. Y. (1913), 317. In 1902, the business moved into its new building "up town," occupying the block front on the west side of Broadway between 34th and 35th Sts., exclusive of the lot at the 34th St. corner. In 1924, a 19-storey addition on the west was added.—From letter to the author by courtesy of R. H. Macy & Co.

— In this year, the Chamber of Commerce moved from the Merchants' Bank to rooms in the building at the south-west corner of William and Cedar Sts.—26th Ann. Rep., Ch. of Com. (1883–84), xvi. It remained here until 1883 (q. v., Je).

— In this year, the "Palace Garden" was opened on the north side of 14th St., west of Sixth Ave. (109–111 W. 14th St.).—L. M. R. K., III: 985. It is shown in a coloured lithograph, by Sarony, Major & Knapp, published in this year as a music-cover.—See Eno collection, in N. Y. P. L. The 22d Regt. armory was later built on the site.—L. M. R. K., III: 924. Here the Metropolitan fair of the U. S. sanitary commission was held in 1864 (q. v., Ap 4).

— In this year, the first West Washington Market was established west of West St. between Dey and Vesey Sts.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVI: 59, 60; Hoffman, Estates and Rights of the Corporation, I: 393–94. See also De Voe, Market Book, 447–52. It burned on July 11, 1860 (q. v.).

— "During the early part of 1858 the monument in memory of the Revolutionary soldiers and sailors buried in Trinity churchyard was completed and put in position." It stands near Broadway, directly opposite to Pine St., on the line on which the extension of Albany St. was proposed to be carried out.—Dix, Hist. of Trin. Church, IV: 448–49. See also descrip. of Pl. 133-b, III: 701. This fulfilled the vestry resolution of Nov. 8, 1852 (q. v.), and stopped any further attempt to connect Albany and Pine Sts.

— In this year, the present (1926) portico, cornice, and balustrade on the roof of St. Mark's Church were erected.—Memorial St. Mark's Church (1899), 55, 150. See also descrip. of Pl. 119, III: 624.

— In this year, the family vault of the Provoost family, which stood in Jones' Woods, in the block bounded by Ave. A, East River, 71st and 72d Sts., erected in 1753, was demolished.—Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 530; see also O 8, 1749.

1858 — In Valentine's Manual for 1858 were published: map of the city, 1858; Mayor Daniel F. Jan. 5 Mayor Tiemann, in his message to the common council, shows that taxation "for the support of the city government" has increased 149% since 1850, an increase far in excess of the growth in population. Among his proposals to check this expenditure is that of placing the schools of the 22 wards, which are now controlled largely by local boards, "under the control and government of a single Board of intelligent and educated citizens."

He cites the expenditure of a considerable amount "for the purpose of causing the records and other papers in the County Clerk's, Surrogate's and Register's offices, to be indexed and printed."

Salaries having increased over 50% during the past year, a revision of salaries, "based upon the consideration of the labor and responsibilities involved," is recommended. He also advises that the city treasury have the advantage of the excess of sinking fund interest.

On the much debated question as to whether the streets may best be cleaned "by contract or by persons employed directly by the department," the mayor declares for the contract method, with "the contractors held to a strict accountability."

He prophesies that none of the cities of Europe will have parks, walks, and drives to exceed Central Park, "when time has been afforded for its improvement," and he recommends, in this connection, that all streets between 42d and 125th be "opened by one and the same proceeding" as a measure of economy and one that will tend to build up New York rather than "cities adjacent."

The mayor deplores the condition in the street department caused by rival claimants for the office of street commissioner each involving the aid of the courts "to determine his title," and declares he will refuse his signature "to all warrants for the payment of their salaries or for the payment of any work which either may undertake" until a decision is reached. The mayor also declares for an executive council, i. e., regular meetings of heads of departments with the mayor "for the purpose of consultation, in relation to the business and interests of the city, and each of the departments of its government, to prevent the conflict of the departments with each other, and insure economy in the public expenditure;" he maintains, however, that even this arrangement cannot produce the best results until all department heads are nominated by the mayor and "removable at his pleasure."

Jan. 5 In regard to the new arrangement for a police force, he declares his belief that it is "decidedly objectionable that the state government, besides creating the Board and appointing its officers [see Ap 15, 1857], have also fixed their compensation, to be paid out of the city treasury, without a right on the part of the people of this city to regulate or control them in any degree." The mayor says he considers the police of a metropolis to be "an army for preserving domestic order in time of peace, just as the regular army protects us from foreign invasion in time of war," and he recommends that our police, "in the designation of its men and officers, and also in their appointment, suspension, trial and removal," be organized and governed "according to like features in our military system, the mayor being considered the head of the force." However, he believes the force as now organized has done its work "with commendable fidelity," and has been "rapidly gaining the public confidence," despite its "hasty organization and the excitement of the public mind."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 10–54. In the next day's issue, the editor of the Herald declared the message "pregnant with reforms, some of them quite possible of accomplishment, but some of a character for which the times are not, perhaps, quite ripe."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 6, 1858.

11 D. D. Conover, who was appointed street commissioner by the governor on June 13, 1857 (q. v.), and in whose favour an injunction was issued on Oct. 28, 1857 (q. v.) against Charles Devlin, Mayor Wood's appointee (see Je 16, 1857), reports to the board numerous irregularities and abuses in the street department chargeable to Devlin in collusion with the comptroller and corporation counsel. In this way he claims the city treasury has been "defrauded of thousands of dollars." The business of contracting for public work is described as having been "reduced to quite a manageable system, confined to a few parties, who serve as sureties for each other, and back out or sell out among themselves, as occasion requires or opportunity affords to do so at the expense of the property owners. . . . The gross and wholesale violation of law and ordinance, disregarding concealment even; the utter contempt displayed for the action and sanction of the Common Council and Mayor; the bribery which must have bought the silence of parties whose legal rights were so summarily set aside, and which, if the whole truth were known, would be found to have sent its influence to bureaux outside of the Street Department; the deliberate and systematic alteration of contracts, thereby fradulently overtaxing citizens for unnecessary work, performed at monstrous rates of charge, all go to prove, most conclusively, that the separation of the several departments from the control and supervision of the Mayor and Common Council, and the making their respective heads elective and responsible to no one, as was the case under the late charter, has increased the political corruption of the day to a point, destructive alike to the honor of the man and the obligations of the citizen."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 97–100.

At the same meeting Mayor Tiemann communicates to the common council the fact that whereas the enlargement of the Battery was not expected to cost more than $27,150, the contract was made in such a way that $52,530 has already been paid out, "and but little, apparently, has been done to show for it. The filling in has been a source of profit to the contractor—it is supposed to a large amount—while the most expensive portion of the improvement remains yet to be done."—Ibid., LXIX: 124–28. These communications, says the Herald, "are calculated to satisfy every taxpayer that the charges of fraud and corruption which have been so frequently brought against the Corporation of this city, are not only well founded, but actually fall short of the truth."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 13, 1858. Devlin made answer to Conover's charges on Jan. 21 (q. v.).

14 The board of aldermen votes to add to its standing committees a new "Committee on Frauds."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 141. The membership of that committee was announced at the next meeting.—Ibid., LXIX: 195. The Herald's comment is: "So thoroughly has the principle of spoliation in the administration of the City revenues become part and parcel of the system that the Boards have recognized its permanent character by nominating a Standing Committee on Frauds. The only purpose of this Committee is, we are satisfied, to formalize and perpetuate existing abuses. We have but little faith in the utility of investigating committees, in connection with charges of corruption, so far, at least, as the Corporation is concerned. . . . We are, therefore, compelled to arrive at the conclusion that the appointment of this 1858 Jan. 14 Standing Committee on Frauds is only a sham, intended to cheat our citizens into the belief that our city shepherds are keeping strict watch and ward over the public wool."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 21, 1858. See editorial on the frauds occupying the attention of the committee in ibid., F 17, 1858. In a subsequent editorial this is termed "a standing committee of humbug, got up, not for the purpose of exposing crime, but of shielding it."—Ibid., Ja 31, 1858.

21 In a communication to the common council, Devlin defends himself against the charges of Conover (see Ja 11). "I have never sought," he says, "to pocket a penny dishonorab[l]y or dishonestly earned, and I have never kept a penny honestly due, from the pocket it belonged to.

"When this Street Commissioner controversy shall be ended, . . . I shall then give you a full account of my stewardship, which I am confident will satisfy the reasonable expectations of my fellow-citizens. I could not if I would, and would not, if I could, satisfy that eminent 'public piety' with which Mr. Conover has surrounded himself. It is long used and well skilled in that school of tactics which raises the cry of wrong, only to divert attention away from its own doings. It knows well how to trump up charges for fraud against those who stand in its way, to a place where its genius for plunder can germinate, blossom and fructify." He announces that he will no longer keep silent regarding the charges against him. "The press, which I hold with every good citizen, to be the palladium of freedom, has shown me no mercy; of this I do not complain; the press though sometimes severe, in the long run is generally right, and I have no fears but that it will vindicate my character, as one by one, I meet the charges as they shall be made definite against me; and truth shall yet rise radiant and serene from the dust in which her enemies had temporarily crushed her, in their unprincipled crusade against me."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 213–14. For additional charges against Devlin by Conover, see Ja 25.

25 D. D. Conover reports to the common council "additional cases [for earlier charges, see Ja 11], illustrative of the loose and irregular system under which fraud and other illegal transactions have heretofore been practiced upon the public treasury and individual property owners." In some of these cases Charles Devlin was shown to be implicated. These frauds consist, he says, "mainly in falsely certifying the terms and specifications of recorded contracts," and bring losses to property owners or to the city treasury of amounts "varying from hundreds to thousands of dollars." Means and opportunity have been found in the street department "to inspect the bids for the benefit of favorites, before the regular opening of them for award." Many of the cases of over payment made in consequence of the misrepresentation and fraud practised upon the comptroller "present fair grounds for recovery from the parties of the amounts so wrongfully obtained from the treasury and property owners," and all "clearly indicate that some further checks and guards by ordinance or otherwise" are necessary, and he offers definite suggestions for the common council's action.

The attitudes of the aldermen in the matter is evidenced by the following excerpt from the minutes: "While the same was being read, Alderman Stephens moved that the further reading thereof be dispensed with, and that the communication be laid on the table. Which was carried."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 253–68. At the next meeting of the aldermen, on Jan. 28, Conover submitted another report of a piece of work, "done under contract by Charles Devlin," in which the surveyor's original return of work done was

"1,285½ cubic yards, earth excavation
57½ " rock "
509 " earth filling " .

This return had been altered (with the alterations "clearly manifest"), prior to the payment for the job to Devlin by the comptroller, to read as follows:

"4,285½ cubic yards, earth excavation
357½ " rock "

—Ibid., LXIX: 299–301. This communication, tabled for the time being, was referred to a "Committee on Frauds," on Feb. 4.—Ibid., LXIX: 354. Conover submitted an additional report on March 1 (q. v.).

30 The editor of the Herald raises his voice against the proposal to erect a post-office in the Park (see D 29, 1857). "Since the Battery has been spoiled by the so-called improvements," he says, "the Park is the only public ground in the city below Fourteenth street. We would have it still farther improved by the Jan. 30 removal of all the buildings, except the City Hall, in which there should be a public free gallery of pictures and statuary and a great reception room for the guests of the city. Then let the city buy up the property on the Points, between Centre street and Chatham square, and erect thereon buildings for the Post Office, the United States Courts, the public offices of all kinds, the criminal and civil courts of the State, all within a stone's throw of each other. The convenience and importance of such a movement is obvious. A dangerous district would be purified, all the property in the vicinity would be doubled in value, while the public would be better served than at present. But, at all events, no Post Office in the Park."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 30, 1858.

The aldermen pass a resolution seeking an amendment to the Feb. 1 city charter that will allow a member of the common council to receive a compensation of $1,000 per annum.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 308–9. The resolution was vetoed by Mayor Tiemann on Feb. 15 (q. v.).

Mayor Tiemann vetoes the resolution of the aldermen seeking 15 an annual salary for the members of the common council (see F 1). His message is interesting historically in the statement: "Under all the charters prior to that of 1849 [q. v., Ap 2], the members of the Common Council received no pay for their services, in respect to the legislative duties performed by them. It is true that there were duties which, under previous charters devolved on the Aldermen, as Judges of several of the courts, and other trusts performed by them by virtue of their offices, for which they were paid, and that the Aldermen and Assistants, as Commissioners of Excise, received a certain rate for each day they acted as such. But . . . in their legislative capacity, they were never paid until the year 1850 [q. v., Ap 13], when an ordinance was passed, that each member should be entitled to receive for his legislative services, four dollars for each day he should sit in Common Council. The policy, as well as the right, of the Common Council to pass such an ordinance, was doubted and strongly opposed by several of its members at that time, but the pay was continued until the succeeding year [see Jl 11, 1851], when an act was passed by the legislature, amendatory of the charter of 1849, which, after fixing the sessions monthly, provided that 'at no session shall the members be entitled to draw any per diem allowance for a longer period than eight days'. . . . Each member . . . received pay for his services at the rate of three hundred and eighty-four dollars per annum, until the adoption of the present charter [see Ap 14, 1857], when . . . such pay ceased on the first day of May last. . . .

"The position of a member of the Common Council prior to the ordinance of 1850, had been sought by the citizens, mainly for the distinction it conferred, and the importance of the trust it imposed . . . the most prominent citizens were those who were connected with that Honorable Board. Whether it was the change that the salary given by the ordinance of 1850 introduced, by bringing forward candidates for the position who looked more to the compensation than to the great interests to be served as legislators of the city, I cannot say, but that after that period, extravagance and recklessness in the expenditures of the city government greatly prevailed, is evident from the fact that while in 1850 the expenditures were but three millions two hundred thousand dollars, they had increased the last year to upward of eight millions two hundred thousand dollars, and it, therefore, may have been this startling fact, so prominent, which induced the legislature, and satisfied the public, that a return to the old system of no pay was best for the public interests."

The mayor reminds the members that they were elected under this new charter and therefore "implicitly assented thereto, and accepted the responsible and important trust . . . with the understanding that they were to be performed without compensation." Furthermore, such action would increase the expenses of the city government, and they were elected "with a view to a reduction of the expenses of government." Again, there was more reason for paying members under the former charters than now, because "various executive and other duties were then performed, which the present charter strips the members of." The time now required for their official duties "need not interfere with the ordinary, or regular occupations or business, which they may respectively follow or carry on." Like many other "offices of trust and honor, in the city," this is one which citizens may gladly accept "for the interest and desire they feel to contribute their share of their talents

1858 and their time, to the public or private good."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., Feb. LXIX, 415–21. By a two-thirds vote the board repassed the 15 measure on March 5.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 6, 1858. See Ap 12.

17 The editor of the Herald again (for an earlier protest, see Ja 30) protests against a post-office being erected in City Hall Park. "Instead of put[t]ing any more buildings in the Park," he says, "all that are there should be removed except the City Hall." He recommends again that "the Five Points and its dependencies," now a "nest of drunkenness, roguery, debauchery, vice and pestilence," be acquired for "a new set of Corporation buildings . . . upon a scale and in a style worthy of this great metropolis." A surrounding margin of this area "might be made to pay to the city all expenses, if cut up into lots of twenty-five feet front for lawyers' offices, stores and hotels."—N. Y. Herald, F 17, 1858.

21 The editor of the Herald declares: "There probably never was a time when the police was so corrupt and so utterly inefficient as it is now. No one seems to be arrested; burglaries increase frightfully; assaults abound every night; almost every law is broken; the police seem to be asleep. There is every reason to believe that they are not only inattentive to their duties, and unfit for the station they fill, but also that in many instances—as, for instance, in the case of the gambling houses and the model artist clubs—that they are actually in league with the law breakers.

"A pretty change we have made in getting rid of the old force, and substituting the Metropolitans!"—N. Y. Herald, F 21, 1858.

26 Mayor Tiemann signs a resolution passed by the common council seeking the repeal of the "Metropolitan Police bill" (see Ap 15, 1857) on the ground that the measure "was passed against the feelings and wishes of the citizens of the city of New York, entailing upon them an increased taxation for the support of said police, without their deriving a corresponding benefit from the force in the matter of the general good government of the city than was derived from the former police at a much less expenditure of money."—N. Y. Herald, F 27, 1858.

Mar. 1 Irregularities in the street commissioner's office are alleged by D. D. Conover in another communication to the common council (for earlier charges, see Ja 11 and 25). He cites 30 cases in which assessment lists have been confirmed for amounts in excess of contract figures varying from $102.92 to $4,042.45. There are many other cases, he adds, "in which the allowances and gratuities range in amounts less than $100." Any "extra allowances" made to contractors by the street commissioner he shows to have been in violation of sec. 10 of the late charter: "No additional allowance beyond the legal claim under any contract with the Corporation, or for any service on its account, or in its employment, shall ever be allowed." He concludes: "How all these illegal, and even fraudulent allowances, could be passed over and confirmed by the Committees on Assessments, and more particularly admitted and liquidated in the Comptroller's Department, passes comprehension, and may justly cause a doubt of the utility and integrity of the present system of making up and auditing accounts in which the city is concerned in that department."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 535–56; N. Y. Herald, Mr 2, 1858. "The total amount of the excessive assessments in the foregoing list is $29,452.03; and in addition to the excesses which we have been able to obtain in the cases already examined by the committees of the Common Council would swell the amount of fraud in the Street Department to the nice sum of $92,052.80. This affords some clue to the largely increased taxation of the city."—Ibid., Mr 7, 1858. Further irregularities were alleged by Conover in another communication, on March 11.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXIX: 624–31. See Mr 7.

4 The circulation of the Herald for the last year has averaged 62,000 copies per day. The editor declares this to be according to "the sworn statements placed before the Post Office Department," and that "the combined issue of all the morning journals put together" does not equal it. This editorial was provoked by a resolution of the common council ordering the publication of the proceedings of that body in some daily journals including the Herald "at the usual advertising rates." Warning is given that the rates of the Herald are not "the usual advertising rates of the evening journals or the Sunday papers," which have "little or no circulation," and "are glad to get the city advertisements at any price to fill up their vacant spaces."—N. Y. Herald, Mr 4, 1858.

7 Rear-admiral Mohammed Pasha, Turkish envoy to the U. S., arrives at New York and is welcomed by a committee of the common council.—N. Y. Times, Mr 9–16, 1858.

Mar. 7 The supreme court renders a decision declaring Charles Devlin entitled to the office of street commissioner instead of D. D. Conover (see Je 13, 1857; Ja 5, 1858). Conover refused to yield the office until the court of appeals decided, and a "free fight" between the factions resulted. Mayor Tiemann personally entered the office with a squad of police and ordered both claimants to leave. He then locked the door and retained the key himself.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 7, 1858. For the decision of the higher court, see Ap 12.

13 "The old established gambling saloon of Messrs. Concklin & Griffin," at 215 Broadway, is raided and closed by a body of policemen from Mayor Tiemann's office. This and other activities brings an unaccustomed word of praise from the columns of the Herald: "Mayor Tiemann, like all his predecessors, has commenced an onslaught upon the gambling houses, lottery policy shops, &c, &c. He has stumbled on several occasions, but will improve as he goes on. It seems probable that the Mayor is a conscientious man—that he does not attack the gamblers for outside effect, but that he is a sincere believer in his reform measures, which he will probably make more stringent as he proceeds."—N. Y. Herald, Mr 15 and 16, 1858.

19 In a message to the aldermen Mayor Tiemann argues against another attempt that is being made in the legislature to lay a railroad track in Broadway. The city should control such a grant, he says, and it should go to the highest bidder, like ferries and other franchises. Furthermore, proposals have been lodged with him "offering $100,000, and more for the right of a railway, subject to certain restrictions."—N. Y. Herald, Mr 20, 1858. Subsequently, in an editorial, the Herald declared: "The Eighth, Sixth, Fourth, Third and Second avenue roads amply suffice for the public wants. If the Legislature seeks the public good, and not the furtherance of private interests, no new railroad scheme will be tolerated."—Ibid., Ap 4, 1858.

20 "The great wave of religious excitement which is now sweeping over this nation, is one of the most remarkable movements since the Reformation. . . . In this city we have beheld a sight which not the most enthusiastic fanatic for church-observances could ever have hoped to look upon;—we have seen in a business quarter of the City, in the busiest hours, assemblies of merchants, clerks and working-men, to the number of some 5,000, gathered day after day for a simple and solemn worship. Similar assemblies we find in other portions of the City; a theatre [Burton's] is turned into a Chapel; churches of all sects are open and crowded by day and night. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Mr 20, 1858. See also ibid., Mr 22, 23, 29 and 30, 1858.

Apr. 5 "Burton's old Chambers-street Theatre, which has been leased by the United States Government for fifteen years at a rent of $16,000 per annum, will be immediately fitted up for the use of the United States Courts and offices of the Government in this City. The property which has been leased includes three dwelling houses on Reade-street, in the rear of the theatre, and has a front of 75 feet, with a depth of 160 feet. The building will be divided into two stories connected by iron staircases. The hall will be 10 feet wide. On the first floor will be the United States Marshal's and other offices, and on the second floor will be the rooms of the United States Circuit and United States District Courts, each 60 feet deep, lighted from above. The United States District-Attorney will have four rooms in the second story, and on the same floor will be the Judges' private apartments, and petit jury rooms. $20,000 is the estimated cost of altering and refitting the buildings."—N. Y. Times, Ap 5, 1858. See also L. M. R. K., III: 982–83.

6 The Baptist Church at Fifth Ave. and 35th St. (see Je 8, 1856) has been sold to Christ P. E. Church, now in 18th St. near Fifth Ave. (see Je 30, 1854).—N. Y. Times, Ap 6, 1858. See S 26.

8 A grand charity ball is held at the Crystal Palace. About 20,000 people are present.—N. Y. Times, Ap 9, and 10, 1858. The receipts were over $9,000.—Ibid., Ap 23, 1858.

9 The court of appeals affirms the decision of the supreme court (see Mr 7) that the governor "had no authority to appoint D. D. Conover street commissioner in place of Joseph S. Taylor, deceased" (see Je 13, 1857).—N. Y. Herald, Ap 10, 1858. See Ap 12.

12 The legislature passes an act providing that the members serving in the common council of the city last year shall receive $280 from the city treasury "in addition to any moneys received for such services during any part of the said political year" (see F 15). By the amended charter of Ap 2, 1849 (q. v.), the members

1858 Apr. 12 had not been entitled to further compensation ($4 per day for the first eight days of each month) after May 1, 1857.—Laws of N. Y. (1858), chap. 159; Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXIII: 485. By the same act the board of supervisors for 1857 were "to be entitled to compensation at the same rate per diem as the supervisors of the other counties of the state."—Laws of N. Y. (1858), chap. 159.

" A day of much excitement in municipal politics. Attorneys of Charles Devlin (see Mr 7) serve Mayor Tiemann with "a judgment of ouster and a writ of possession for the Street Commissioner's Department" on the basis of the judgment of the court of appeals in affirming the decision of the supreme court that Devlin was the legal incumbent. The mayor's immediate reaction was to inform Devlin that he was "suspended from the performance of any duties of Street Commissioner" and that he (the mayor) was about to "communicate the cause thereof to the Common Council." During the afternoon, says the Herald, between 500 and 600 people "congregated about the City Hall, talking over the Devlin case. . . . At the opening of the Board there was a tremendous rush to get inside the chamber, and it was with the greatest difficulty the members of the Board, the Clerk and reporters could gain admittance." The communication from the mayor and a letter from Devlin demanding a hearing were both referred by the board to a special committee.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 99–101; N. Y. Herald, Ap 13, 1858. At the next meeting of the board (see Ap 15), the mayor transmitted his charges against Devlin. See My 15.

15 Mayor Tiemann transmits his charges against Charles Devlin (see Ap 11) to the board of aldermen. He cites 13 instances wherein the city treasury has been a sufferer because of Devlin's transactions. A number of these had already been brought to the attention of the board by Conover (see Ja 11) and concerned contracts undertaken by Devlin or his associates. "It is difficult to believe," declares the mayor, "that Mr. Devlin's connection with any considerable number of the flagrant frauds is susceptible of explanation. His attention has been called to the subject by the Comptroller, and an explanation requested; but he has refused to say any thing on the subject; and recently, upon the examination of J. B. Smith [a clerk in the comptroller's office], who is charged before a magistrate with complicity in some of these frauds, Mr. Devlin, on being called as a witness, refused at first to be sworn, and when sworn, refused to answer any question on the subject."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 118–32. For the report of the special committee to which this and the preceding communications on the same matter were referred, see Ap 19. In a Herald editorial entitled "The Street Commissioner Fight," Comptroller Flagg comes under criticism for "the loose fashion in which the financial affairs of the city have been conducted," and his retirement is suggested. With "half the entire expenditure of the city" disbursed through the street commissioner, "we may expect to witness one of the most desperate combats for the spoils of office ever known." The street commissioner's department is "a golden guerdon for which a cavalier may well splinter a lance. Plutus and Mercury, the god of gold and the god of theft, are the deities presiding over the battlefield."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 18, 1858. See My 19.

16 The city is authorised to build a free bridge, with a turn-table draw, across the Harlem River from a point at or near the terminus of Eighth Ave., not east of Seventh Ave., nor west of Eighth Ave., to a point in Westchester County at or near the terminus of the road leading to Macomb's dam. The act requires the removal of Macomb's dam (built in 1813), and that the new bridge shall be completed by 1861.—Laws of N. Y. (1858), chap. 291; (1859), chap. 359. See also descrip. of Pl. 137-b, III: 706.

17 The legislature appoints commissioners to superintend the erection, in the Park, in the rear of the city hall, of a building of suitable dimensions and arrangement, to accommodate the supreme court, superior court, court of common pleas, courts of oyer and terminer, general and special sessions, surrogate's court, marine court, their various officers and chambers, grand and petit juries, the sheriff, clerks of those courts, commissioners of jurors, district attorney, and law institute. A similar act of April 17, 1857 (q. v.) is repealed.—Laws of N. Y. (1858), chap. 318; N. Y. Times, Ap 22, 1858. The building here authorised eventually became the county court house.—L. M. R. K., III: 974. This marks the end of the attempt to build a new city hall in the Park. See, further, Ap 10, 1861.

" The legislature authorises the city to convey to the Woman's Hospital (see Ap 18, 1857) the block of ground bounded by Fourth and Lexington Aves., 49th and 50th Sts., containing 32 lots, the conveyance to remain in force only as long as the ground shall be used for the purposes of a hospital.—Laws of N. Y. (1858), chap. 324. The grant was made on Jan. 4, 1859.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762. Potter's field previously occupied this site.—L. M. R. K., III: 927, 956. The corner-stone of the hospital was laid in May, 1866 (q. v.). Apr. 17

"The remains of 100,000 paupers and strangers were transferred from the city limits to Ward's Island, where seventy-five acres had been set apart for a pauper cemetery."—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 668.

" The legislature resolves that Prof. Alexander D. Bache be requested to continue the drawing of the maps known as "the harbor commissioners map of the harbor of New York, and the land adjacent thereto," provided the cost of completion does not exceed $5,500.—Laws of N. Y. (1858), 668.

" Ground for the new reservoir in Central Park (see Ap 14, 1856) is broken, at 86th St. and Fifth Ave., with appropriate ceremonies. "The Reservoir will be egg-shaped, so as to give it the appearance of a lake, and has for its ground a natural basin, with an area of 106 acres. When completed, it will have a capacity of 1,029,880,145 New-York standard gallons, which, in the event of a cut-off in the supply, would give water to the City for thirty-one days. The work, it is supposed, will hardly be completed within three years, though the contract limits the time to 400 working days from the 1st of May."—N. Y. Times, Ap 19, 1858. See also 2d Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1859), 59; descrip. of Pl. 151, III: 771. See, further, Jl 31, 1860.

19 The aldermen concur with Mayor Tiemann in removing Charles Devlin (see Ap 12) from the office of street commissioner. A number of petitions had been received by the board urging such action. The special committee on the subject reports that a thorough examination of the charges "would occupy several weeks, if not months, thereby opening a lengthy controversy, and causing an unnecessary interruption of the public business of that department," which has been for nearly a year "paralyzed and inoperative." They deprecate further delay and "submit the whole matter back to the Board, for such action as may be considered necessary, and for the best interests of the city," with the result as above stated. The mayor is immediately informed of this action and nominates Edward Cooper, son of Peter Cooper, to succeed Devlin; the board unanimously concurs.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 171–74. Mr. Cooper took formal possession of the office on the following day; "he has determined," says the Herald, "to entirely change the personnel of the office, and have no one around that he cannot fully depend upon."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 21, 1858.

22 A funeral torchlight procession, composed of about 2,000 Germans, Italians, and Frenchmen, takes place in memory of Orsini and Pierri, recently guillotined in Paris for the attempted assassination of Emperor Napoleon. The line of march is from Union Square to City Hall Park, where addresses are made and resolutions adopted.—N. Y. Times, Ap 23, 1858.

24 Lucy Stone's lecture on "Woman's Right to Suffrage" is "attended by a large portion of the city magistracy and many leading citizens." The editor of the Herald believes that public impression is "in favor of the confinement of the fair lecturer . . . in some wholesome retreat, where proper care and mild regimen may subdue the undue excitement of her imagination."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 25, 1858.

28 The first prize ($2,000) for a design for the development of Central Park (see Ap 17, 1857) is awarded to plan No. 33, signed "Greensward" and made by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux. The second prize ($1,000) goes to plan No. 30, by Samuel I. Gustin; the third ($750) to plan No. 27, by McIntosh & Miller; and the fourth ($500) to plan No. 26, by Howard Daniels.—N. Y. Times, Ap 21, 29 and 30, 1858. The winning plan was described and illustrated in ibid., My 1, 1858. On May 13, all the plans were on exhibition at No. 637 Broadway.—Ibid., My 13, 1858.

Thirty-three designs were submitted in the competition. They are described in a small printed pamphlet, entitled Catalogue of Plans for the Improvement of the Central Park, now preserved in N. Y. P. L. and annotated by one of the park commissioners with the names of most of the competitors. This pamphlet was discovered by Miss Theodora Kimball and is referred to in her article in Landscape Architecture, Jan., 1922. It is bound with the 33 explanations and specifications submitted with the plans, some of 1858 Apr. 28 which are signed with the designers' names and some with pseudonyms. The annotations on the catalogue and these explanations reveal the names of 23 of the unsuccessful competitors, as follows: Richard Dolben, of Alleghany City, Pa.; Wm. Rogers, of Cleveland, Ohio; J. Lachaume, of Yonkers, N. Y.; John B. Deutsch and Charles Lyon, of Tarrytown; Pliny Miles, of England; R. Copeland, Charles Follen, and P. Schultze, of Boston; Lewis Masquerier, of Newton, L. I.; and J. Rink, Adam Gigrich, H. Noury, Augustus Fitch, Hepp & Vogel, Wm. (?) Parish, Graham & Bagley, John Hughes, R. Graves, E. L. Viele, G. E. Waring, Hoffman & Wehle, and Warner, of N. Y. City. See illustration in this volume.

Plan No. 33, submitted by Olmsted and Vaux, and plan No. 30, submitted by Samuel I. Gustin, are now in the possession of the Park Department. The former is reproduced and described as Pl. 149-a, Vol. III.

May 1 The Times building (see My 12, 1857) on Park Row, at the head of Nassau St., is completed and first used by that newspaper.—N. Y. Times, Ap 30, My 1 and 3, 1858. See also ibid., My 26, 1858. It was erected on the site of the Brick Presbyterian Church grounds. See also L. M. R. K., III: 968; and descrip. of Pl. 152-b, III: 772. For detailed account, see Maverick, H. J. Raymond and the N. Y. Press, 154–59. The building was demolished in 1888 (q.v., My 13).

9 St. Paul's M. E. Church, at the n. e. cor. of Fourth Ave. and 22d St., is dedicated. "The church is built of white marble, in what has been called the Romanesque style. . . . The top of the spire is two hundred and ten feet from the ground." A picture of the church accompanies this description.—Harper's Weekly, II: 309–10; N. Y. Times, My 8, 1858.

10 Cooper Institute is opened for the first time for the celebration, in the "Hall of the Union," of the 14th anniversary of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society. The institute is not yet completed, and its use is only temporary.—N. Y. Times, My 6 and 11, 1858. See also Harper's Weekly, II: 723.

11 St. Luke's Hospital, at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 54th St. (see My 6, 1854), is opened.—Tablet in St. Luke's Hospital, 113th St. and Amsterdam Ave. See also Richmond, N. Y. and Its Institutions, 367–70, and L. M. R. K., III: 955.

22 The new building of the Nursery and Child's Hospital, on Lexington Ave. between 50th and 51st Sts., is opened.—N. Y. Times, My 25, 1858. The property had been leased to the hospital by the city on April 1, 1857, and the corner-stone laid on June 22, 1857.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762; N. Y. Daily Times, Je 16 and 23, 1857. Regarding the organization of the society, see Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 693–94.

24 Andrew H. Green, president of the board of Central Park commissioners, presents to the corporation a report of the progress of work since Jan. 1, and takes occasion therein to defend the commissioners against criticism. They are not unconscious, he says, "of the general desire that the Park should be rendered enjoyable by the public, as soon as practicable; yet it is well to recollect that seven hundred acres of rough, unprepared, unfertilized ground can scarcely be changed to a garden, with full grown trees, in one year. . . . Some large trees will be transplanted, but the hundreds of thousands must make their own growth on the ground; considerations of the permanency of their growth, of their perfect development, as well as economy, demand this.

"An especial interest has been manifested in securing the roads for drives and rides at an early period; and while the Board sympathize with this interest, it is not to be forgotten, that for every ten who ride or drive, there are one hundred who walk; and, that while one or two thousand men are at work, some excavating, some removing earth, and others blasting rocks continually, it is neither a very safe or desirable place for either the pedestrian or equestrian." They are proceeeding "with all the promptness consistent with the dictates of sound judgment, and the practice of true economy."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 547–53.

25 The superintendent of police arouses the ire of the editor of the Herald by ordering that newsboys shall not cry their papers on Sunday. Sarcastically, it is termed "one of the greatest reforms that has been effected in any city or country since the expulsion of the Jews from Egypt. It is not the closing up of the gambling dens, for they are still in full blast; nor a finishing edict against the houses of ill-fame; nor any curtailment of the privileges of the Cyprians on Broadway; nor any general ventilation of the receivers of stolen goods; nor any decisive work among the suspicious grog shops; nor any grand haul of burglars, counterfeiters, emigrant swindlers, pickpockets, or incendiaries. All these professions still flourish like the green bay tree and may be regarded as embodying our privileged classes. What, then, can be this great and glorious reform? Nothing more nor less than the gagging of two or three dozen poor ragged newsboys, who have been in the habit of profaning the blessed Sabbath by crying aloud for their bread in the public streets on that holy day, while blundering office-holders, swindling hypocrites and common thieves were on their way, with honest people, to church. These ragged newsboys, with their Sabbath-day music, have been gagged—they are dumb—they may fail to raise the pennies which have heretofore supplied their destitute mothers and sisters with a meal or two; but the horrid profanations of these boys in singing out their Sunday papers on Sunday, is stopped. The next raid of the Metropolitan Board will probably be upon the apple women or the Chinese segar venders along the Park. Well, if our police authorities cannot muster the courage to grapple with full grown vagabonds, let us at least be thankful that they are a match for the poor ragged outcast children in the streets."—N. Y. Herald, My 25, 1858. This same order impels the aldermen, who are always ready to take issue with the "Metropolitans," to introduce a resolution requesting the police commissioners "to direct the trustees of the different churches in this city, to discontinue the nuisance of ringing their bells on Sunday."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 619. May 25

The city authorities take possession of the Crystal Palace.—N. Y. Times, Je 2, 1858. 31

The Herald advocates a "Taxpayers' Party" in municipal politics. The argument is offered that, during the past decade, when taxes have increased from three to ten millions, out of all proportion to the increase in population, every party, "democrats, old whigs, Know Nothings and republicans," has been "elevated to power" in the attempt to put an end to the "system of plunder," without avail. All parties "use the same low machinery, and work with the smallest and meanest ward politicians; men without means, character, credit, or lawful employment. They pay no taxes, and in no way contribute to the support of the government—they are only tax eaters and tax devourers. . . . We are credibly informed that of the two hundred and fifty employés of the Corporation at the City Hall, not fifty pay any taxes whatever. June 3

"Now for the remedy: There are thirty thousand taxpayers in this city—men of character, wealth and influence. Let them organize a party and put up the best men, without regard to previous political affiliations . . . put no man's name on a ticket unless he is a taxpayer. . . . There are thousands of honest non-taxpayers who anxiously inquire at the municipal elections for the best men, without distinction of party. Their votes will be given to the taxpayers' ticket, and its success would be a certainty."—N. Y. Herald, Je 3, 1858.

The liberty-pole, which for 26 years has stood at the junction of Franklin St. and West Broadway, is taken down because it is in "too advanced a state of decay to allow it to stand longer."—N. Y. Times, Je 5, 1858. A new liberty-pole was erected on the same site (see D 9). 4

The piers of the bridge connecting Ward's Island with Manhattan (see F 20, 1807) still remain and a resolution is passed by the board of aldermen aiming at their removal.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXX: 736. The removal was ordered on July 26.—Ibid., LXXI: 166–68. 11

The police captain of the 16th ward reports that "The small-pox is raging fearfully on the west side of Tenth-avenue, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth streets."—N. Y. Times, Je 23, 1858. 22

The entire collection of works of art belonging to the New York Gallery of the Fine Arts, until 1854 at least in the rooms of the Natl. Acad. of Design, is transferred to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. as a permanent deposit.—Howe, Hist. of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (1913), 38, 67. See also 1844; O 5, 1846. "

Palace Garden, a "place of open-air recreation" on 14th St. and Sixth Ave., is opened.—N. Y. Times, Jl 2, 1858. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985. July 1

The body of ex-Pres. Monroe is exhumed from the Second Street Cemetery (see Jl 4, 1831), and taken to the Church of the Annunciation, in 14th St. From there it was carried to the city hall, where it lay in state all day. On July 3, it was put on board the "Jamestown," which carried it to Richmond. Engravings show the exhuming of the body, the scene in the city hall, the landing at Richmond, and the burial in Hollywood Cemetery, Richmond, Virginia. 2

13 The board of aldermen accepts an invitation, extended from a committee of the "National Association of Base-Ball Players," to witness "a match between the Brooklyn and New York players, at the Fashion Race Course, near Flushing, on Tuesday, 13th instant, at 2 o'clock, P. M."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXI: 22. This is an early attempt to arouse interest in the present "National Game." For the beginning of base ball in New York, see S 3, 1845; Je 19, 1846.

21 Napoleon III and Cavour hold their famous secret interview at Plombières, and verbally agree that France and Piedmont shall go to war with Austria, but only upon such pretext as shall appear justifiable. In case of success, Austria is to be expelled from Italy, France is to receive Savoy, and possibly Nice, and the northern Italian kingdoms are to be united with Piedmont.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 222–24.

26 "There are 1,500 laborers employed at the Central Park at present, of whom 100 are grubbing, 100 draining, 150 with 75 carts removing dirt, and the rest making roads. Since the work on the Park commenced, 287 houses and shanties have been removed from the grounds; thirteen acres of the skating-pond have been excavated; forty acres of land have been grubbed; sixty acres of the lower pond have been drained; sixty-third-street has been leveled; considerable blasting has been done, and a great deal of rock removed, and a wall has been built around the entire Park. About five-sixths of the promenade is graded, and the drive for half a mile will be graded in a few weeks."—N. Y. Times, Jl 26, 1858. See also ibid., N 11, 1858. See, further, Ja 1, 1859.

Aug. The Atlantic cable is landed at Trinity Bay, Newfoundland,
5 and the news of its completion causes the "greatest excitement" in New York.—Harper's Weekly, II: 513, 518; N. Y. Times, Ag 6, 1858. For view of the event, see Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 637. A history of the enterprise is given in Harper's Weekly, II: 513–14, 520–21, 529–30, 532–33, 548–49, with engravings of the instruments and ships used in accomplishing the feat and a biography of Cyrus W. Field. See also N. Y. Times, Ag 7, 1858. The event was celebrated in New York on Aug. 6 (q. v.), Aug. 17 (q. v.), and Sept. 1 (q. v.). The cable, however, broke almost immediately, and another was not successfully laid until 1866 (q. v., Jl 6).

6 An impromptu celebration of the success of the Atlantic telegraph is held in New York. The mayor orders 100 guns to be fired in the Park, two telegraph-offices in Wall St. and one in Madison Square are illuminated, and the merchants' exchange exhibits a transparency with the following inscription: "The triumph of the Ocean Telegraph was a new bond of union with a kindred people. Honor to the energy and perseverance of Cyrus W. Field." The telegraph is the all-absorbing topic of conversation everywhere. —N. Y. Times, Ag 7, 1858. See also ibid., Ag 9, 11, 12, and 16, 1858. See, further, Ag 9 and 16.

9 The board of aldermen resolves to request Cyrus W. Field to sit for his portrait, and to celebrate the success of the telegraph by illuminating the city hall.—N. Y. Times, Ag 10, 1858.

15 The corner-stone of St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Fifth Ave. between 50th and 51st Sts., is laid. James Renwick is the architect. The cathedral was dedicated May 25, 1879 (q. v.).—N. Y. Times, Ag 11, 1858; Farley, Hist. of St. Pat'k's Cath., 123, 130; Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 461–64; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 675–78. For an abstract of the title to the cathedral site, see Catholic News, F 1, 1908.

16 The first message is sent over the Atlantic telegraph from Queen Victoria to Pres. Buchanan. The president's answer was sent back on Aug. 19. This caused great enthusiasm in New York.—N. Y. Times, Ag 17, 18, and 20, 1858. On Aug. 17, Mayor Tiemann sent a message of congratulation to the Lord Mayor of London.—Ibid., Ag 18, 1858. See illustration in this volume.

17 The laying of the Atlantic cable (see Ag 5) is celebrated by the ringing of bells, the firing of cannon, the illumination of the city hall, and the letting off of magnificent fireworks (see Ag 18). An engraving shows the scene at the city hall.—Harper's Weekly, II: 548, 549, 550; N. Y. Times, Ag 18–19, 1858; McClenochan's Rep. of Proc., &c. commemorating the laying of the Atlantic Cable. See also view, in Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 134, 140. A more elaborate celebration was held on Sept. 1 (q. v.).

18 In the early morning of this day, a fire, probably resulting from the display of fireworks on the roof of the city hall during the Aug.
Atlantic Cable celebration (see Ag 17), destroys the cupola, the 18 greater part of the dome, the roof, and almost the entire upper storey of the building, and does much damage to the governor's room. The bell-cupola is also injured, but the heavy frame work remains sufficiently strong to sustain the bell. The statue of Justice crashed through the tower, and the clock also fell.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 18, 1858; N. Y. Times, Ag 18, 1858. See also view in Harper's Weekly, 546–47; descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 587; and Pyne sales catalogue, item 226. A special meeting of the board of aldermen was held in the afternoon, at which a message from Mayor Tiemann was read describing the fire and estimating the damage at $50,000. Tiemann recommended that the bell be permanently removed from the city hall. A committee of the board was appointed to investigate the cause of the fire, to examine into the extent of the damage, and to determine what alterations, if any, could be made to effect certain improvements.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXI: 261; Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1858), No. 22. See Ag 24.

The U. S. frigate "Niagara," which aided in laying the Atlantic " cable, arrives off the Battery and is saluted by the guns in the harbour. Cyrus W. Field landed in the city and went immediately to his home.—N. Y. Times, Ag 19, 1858. See Ag 25.

The great series of Lincoln-Douglas debates begins at Ottawa, 21 Illinois. The second debate was held, on Aug. 27, at Freeport, where Douglas enunciated what is known as the "Freeport doctrine." The other places selected were Galesburg, Quincy, Charleston, Alton, and Jonesboro.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., II: 320 et seq.

The special committee appointed on Aug. 18 (q. v.) to investi- 24 gate the burning of the city hall makes a report recommending "that the dome and cupola be rebuilt, and also that the present half story of the center building, be raised a full story, in order to provide office room for one or more of the departments of the city government." Plans accompanied the report, drawn to meet the above proposals, but these plans cannot now be found.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXI: 301. See S 25.

Cyrus W. Field and the crew of the "Niagara" are given an 25 ovation at Cooper Institute.—N. Y. Times, Ag 26, 1858.

A monster celebration in honour of the laying of the Atlantic Sept. cable (see Ag 5) is held in New York. Cyrus W. Field and the 1 British officers who aided the accomplishment were ceremonially received at Castle Garden in the morning, and special services were held in Trinity Church. Later an elaborate procession of about 15,000 people paraded through City Hall Park and up Broadway to the Crystal Palace, the whole line of march being decorated with inscriptions, flags, etc. Field received an ovation at the palace where he was presented, by Mayor Tiemann, with a gold box engraved with the city arms. In the evening the firemen held a torch-light procession, and there were elaborate fireworks.—N. Y. Herald, S 2, 1858; McClenochan's Rep. of Proc. &c. commemorating the laying of the Atlantic Cable; Atlantic Telegraph celebration. Order of exercises at the Crystal Palace on the occasion of the celebration of the successful laying of the Atlantic telegraph cable, Sept. 1, 1858 (N. Y., 1858). See also views in Harper's Weekly, II: 577, 584–86, and Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 140, 144, 158, 170, 180. A stereographic photograph of the procession on Broadway was made by E. Anthony. It is one of the earliest extant photographs of New York. For a brief account of Cyrus W. Field, see Stephen Fiske's Off-Hand Portraits of Prominent New Yorkers (1884), 140 et seq.

The common council gives a dinner at the Metropolitan Hotel 2 to Cyrus W. Field, the officers of H. M. S. "Gorgon," and the officers of the U. S. frigate "Niagara."—N. Y. Times, S 3, 1858.

The quarantine buildings at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, are " destroyed by fire by a mob.—N. Y. Herald, S 3, 1858; N. Y. Times, S 2 et seq., 1858. They had been burned twice before.—Ibid., My 7, 1857, and Ap 27, 1858. Because of the burning, the island was put under martial law, and the 8th regiment was stationed there.—Harper's Weekly, II: 578, 595, 610, and views in ibid., II: 581, 612.

The mayor and common council direct the street commissioner 25 "to procure the necessary plans and specifications which may be required to carry out the contemplated alterations and repairs to the City Hall" (see Ap 24), and appropriate $40,000 for the work. —Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVI: 239. See D 31.

The church at 35th St. and Fifth Ave., formerly a Baptist edifice 26 (see Ag 6), is opened as Christ P. E. Church.—N. Y. Times, S 27, 1858 S 26 1858. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932. Prior to this, the church of this congregation was on West 18th St. (see Je 30, 1854).

Oct. 5 The Crystal Palace, which was opened in 1853 (q.v., Jl 14), is destroyed by fire, the loss being over $1,500,000. All the statuary and paintings in the palace, including the famous Thorwalden group, as well as the other articles placed on exhibition by 3,960 exhibitors, are consumed.—N. Y. Herald, O 6, 1858; N. Y. Times, O 6–9, 1858; Leslies' Weekly, VI: 303–4; descrip. of Pl. 141-a, III, 709. See also views in Harper's Weekly, II: 660–61, and Pyne sales catalogue, item 245.

31 The new Brick Church at the north-west corner of 37th St. and Fifth Ave., erected by the congregation of the "Old Brick Church" (see S 15, 1856), is dedicated.—Harper's Weekly, II: 706; 23d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 600. "The new church is a massive building. The ground measurement is 75 by 145 feet; main auditory, 50 feet in height. With the galleries, from 1500 to 2000 people can be accommodated. The spire is 250 feet high, the cap-stone weighing 2500 pounds. . . . The old bell is in the new spire. . . . The church is lighted by one large chandelier of 100 burners. . . . The spire is to receive a fine clock." An engraving of the church accompanies this description.—Harper's Weekly, II: 721. This is the present edifice and was erected on the site of the Waddell villa.—L. M. R. K., III: 930. See also descrip. of Pl. 72-a, I: 458.

Nov. 5 The new steam fire-engine, the "J. C. Cary," built at the Novelty Iron Works, by Lee & Larned, under a contract with the city, is tested before Street Commissioner Cooper and other officials. It runs "from the Novelty Works to the Bowling Green—the place of exhibition—through Avenue C, Fourteenth Street, and Broadway, threading its way without difficulty through the crowded streets, and ascending at a high speed the heavy grade from Canal to Duane Street." At "the large hydrant near the Bowling Green," the members of Empire Engine Company No. 42 attach the supply hose, and in a few minutes the steam fire-engine begins to work and, for an hour and a half, continues "to throw water in a volume and with a force never before witnessed in this city." After this and other tests, the engine, with 14 or 15 men on board, is run "through Beaver, Broad, Nassau, and Fulton streets, to Broadway; and thence through Barclay, Greenwich, and Murray streets, to the house of the Empire Engine Company." From there it returns "in triumph to the Novelty Works, having won the unqualified approbation of the city officials, and the admiration of the thousands who had witnessed its performances."—Harper's Weekly, II: 748–50. An engraving of the engine is in ibid., II: 749.

19 Due to a weakness in the structure, the walls of the almost finished state arsenal at 35th St. and Seventh Ave. give way, and the heavy roof falls in. With the exception of the main front wall, the building becomes a "complete wreck." The loss is between $20,000 and $30,000.—N. Y. Times, O 6, N 20, and 27, 1858. See also ibid., F 2, 1859. On April 13, 1859, the legislature appropriated $30,000 for rebuilding the arsenal.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 273.

" A large portrait of Simon Bolivar, the South American liberator, is presented to the city by the republic of Venezuela.—Hist. Mag. (1859), 1st. ser., III: 19.

24 A meeting of young women is held in the chapel of N. Y. University, which organizes a "Ladies' Christian Association." Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts headed its first board of directors. This was the beginning of the Young Women's Christian Association in the United States. For the beginnings of the "Association" idea, and the history of the organization in Europe and America, see Fifty Years Association Work among Young Women, by Elizabeth Wilson (N. Y., 1916).

Dec. 5 The Herald publishes a tabulation by occupations of the candidates for municipal office in the forthcoming city election. The liquor dealers lead with 27 candidates, outnumbering the lawyers by three.—N. Y. Herald, D 5, 1858. In a subsequent editorial reference is made to this tabulation as "fruitful of promise for an incapable and demoralized government." It is observed that a very large number of the candidates cannot be located in the directory and therefore "have no apparent local habitations and no business," and attention is called to the large number of "proprietors of porter houses, corner groceries and low drinking saloons . . . nearly the whole lot are hungry politicians, more greedy, if possible for the flesh pots of the city treasury than their predecessors."—Ibid., D 6, 1858.

7 The annual municipal election takes place. The Herald says:

"1. The Comptrollership. The Republicans have gained that [in the election of Robert T. Haws]. Dec. 7

"2. The fight between the Sachems of Old Tammany and the Wood party [in the common council]. The Sachems have saved their bacon by the skin of their teeth, but the glory of Old Tammany departed in the struggle.

"3. The contest in the election of school officers for the Bible in the public schools. The result is largely in favor of the Bible."—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1858.

A new liberty-pole, 187 feet high, is erected at the corner of West Broadway and Franklin St. on the site where the former one stood (see Je 4).—N. Y. Times, D 10, 1858. 9

The name of Hamersley St. is changed to Houston St., from the termination of Houston St. to Hudson River.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVI: 383. 27

Sen. Stephen A. Douglas and Mrs. Douglas arrived at New York from Havana late this evening and were welcomed by a delegation from the common council and escorted to the Everett House. On Dec. 31, Douglas was formally received at the city hall and presented with the freedom of the city. He left for Philadelphia on Jan. 3, 1859.—N. Y. Times, D 29, 1858, to Ja 4, 1859. 28

The committee appointed to investigate the causes of the city hall fire (see Ag 18) makes a detailed report showing that it originated from the remains of the fire works on the roof of the building during the Atlantic cable celebration (see Ag 17).—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1858), No. 22. "

James I. Orr, speaker of the house of representatives, is presented with the freedom of the city.—N. Y. Times, D 31, 1858. 30

The boards of aldermen and councilmen resolve to extend the hospitalities of the city to Sen. Samuel Houston of Texas, who is now in New York.—N. Y. Times, Ja 1, 1859. 31

The repairs on the city hall since the fire (see Ag 18) have cost $6,176.58. They "were partly done under the advice of the Mayor, as immediately necessary, to prevent further dilapidation, and partly under a resolution passed by the Board of Aldermen. No expense was incurred not necessary to save the interior of the building from damage by exposure to the weather, and to put the public offices and chambers again into a state fit for the transaction of public business."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1859), No. 6, pp. 4 and 10. See Ja 3, 1859. "

The common council grants a franchise to the Ninth Ave. R. R. for the route from the corner of 51st St. and Ninth Ave. along the avenue to Greenwich St., through Greenwich and Canal Sts., West Broadway, College Place, and Vesey St. to the Astor House, returning by the same route with a single track through Church and Washington Sts.—Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 412–13. See O 3, 1859. "

In this year, the clipper "Dreadnaught" sailed from Sandy Hook to Liverpool, 3,000 miles, in 13 days, 9 hours, thus equalling the run of the "Thornton," made in 1854.—New International Encyc., V: 468. —

In this year, Charles Darwin's Origin of Species was published. —

In this year, flashlight photography was first foreshadowed, by Robert Bunsen and Sir Henry Roscoe who suggested that magnesium offered a source of light which should be useful in photography. Pictures were made by this method by Brothers, of Manchester, in 1863-64, and by C. Piazzi Smyth in 1865. The magnesium was first used in the form of thin wire, later the wire was flattened into a thin ribbon, and this finally gave place to the powdered form. After powdered magnesium came the flashlight compound (prepared by mixing powdered magnesium with potassium chlorate and various metallic sulphides), which seems to have originated with J. Traill Taylor, who suggested the mixture about 1865.—Flashlight Portraiture (N. Y., 1912), 6-10. —

In this year, the History of the City of New York, from the Earliest Settlement to the Present Time, by Mary L. Booth, was published. —

In this year, Miller's New York As It Is; or Stranger's Guide-Book to the Cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Adjacent Places . . . , was published. This is the earliest issue in the N. Y. P. L. It thus describes some of the new and interesting buildings: —

"The New Fifth Avenue Hotel, now completing under the control of Col. Stevens, will become an object of special note. In addition to its beautiful site, being opposite to the shrubbery of Madison Square; it stretches its façades of white marble down Twenty-

1859 third and Twenty-fourth streets, both equally known as among — the most aristocratic of our thoroughfares. In its internal arrangements it will be unsurpassed—furnishing entire accommodation for eight hundred guests—containing more than one hundred suites of apartments, each combining the conveniences and luxury of parlor, chamber, dressing, and bathing rooms. All the rooms, besides being well lighted and ventilated, will have means of access by a perpendicular railway [elevator]—intersecting each story—in addition to the broad and capacious corridors and stairways, independent of the ordinary and usual approaches from floor to floor.

"As to location, this hotel is much nearer the termini of the Eastern and Northern Railroads than others further down town, and from the evidence of the march of improvement, it must continue to be the centre of civilization for many years to come. . . .

"The New St. Patricks Cathedral, on the Fifth Avenue and 50th street, now in process of erection [see Ag 15, 1858], will, when finished, become the crowning architectural ornament of the city. . .

"In order to form any adequate idea of the progress and opulence of New York, the visitor should not omit to visit the Fifth Avenue, the great centre of wealth and fashion. . . .

"The Union Club, on corner of Fifth Avenue and 22d street, is one of the most splendid structures in the city. It measures about 50 feet by 100, is built in superb style of brown stone, and cost about $300,000. [It stood on the n. w. cor. of 21st St.—L. M. R. K., III: 939.]

"The new private residence of W. B. Astor, Esq., on Fifth Avenue and 33d street, is another magnificent edifice."—Miller's N. Y. As It Is (1859), 63, 72, 73, 74. Later issues of this guide-book in N. Y. P. L. bear publication dates 1862, 1867, 1869, 1872, 1875, and 1876. The N. Y. H. S. has those for 1860, 1862, 1863, 1867, 1868, and 1872.

— A bronze statue of Washington, one of six copies made in 1857 of the marble statue by Jean Antoine Houdon (1788), which stands in the state house at Richmond, Virginia, was placed in the city hall. In 1884 (q. v., Jl 4) it was presented to the city by the pupils of the public schools. It is now in the Metropolitan Museum.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 180–81.

— In this year, Winslow Homer, American figure-painter, first came to New York at the age of 23; in 1861, he took a studio in the old University building. He studied in the night class of the Academy of Design; but at the outbreak of the war, he went to the front as special correspondent and artist for Harper Brothers, and later made a second and independent trip to the army of the Potomac. His paintings began at that time with a series of army scenes. He later made studies of negro and rural life, Adirondack hunting sketches, and paintings of the Maine coast.—Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting, 350–57.

— In his Manual for 1859, David T. Valentine published a "Financial History of the City of New-York from the Earliest Period," from his own pen, pp. 496–534. It contains also the following map and views: Trinity Church, 60; the North Dutch Church, 84; map of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hudson City, and Hoboken, 94; s. e. cor. Beekman and William Sts., 132; William St., looking north from Frankfort St., 276; old cottages on Frankfort St., facing Gold St., 284; Third Ave. R. R. depot, 389; State St., fronting the Battery, 396; East River, including Harris Point, Ward's Island, and Hell Gate, 484; Washington Market, 488; Central Park, 572.

For view of Market Slip, from the cor. of Cherry St., in this year, see ibid. (1860), 252.

For views of Five Points, 1859, one from the cor. of Worth and Little Water St., the other at the crossing of Baxter, Park, and Worth Sts., in this year, see ibid. (1860), 372, 396.

Jan. 1 Andrew H. Green, president of the Central Park commissioners, reports that the following progress has been made on the park: "The thorough drainage of the part of the Park below the old Reservoir is nearly completed; the Drive is for the most part graded not only within the same area, but also extending to the north above the New Reservoir. Portions of the Drive intended as examples have been constructed in different methods with their superstructure in order to test the relative cost and efficiency of each. The Ride for equestrians is in progress. Several miles of the walks are graded, drained and gravelled, and in a condition for use.

"Three bridges or viaducts over which the carriage road is carried and under which the horseback ride is to pass, are in a state of forwardness and promise to be structures of beauty as well as of utility; the Promenade, a prominent feature of the Park, is nearly complete with its broad walk and rows of transplanted trees of twenty years' growth. The planting of the Park with a great variety of shrubs and trees was rapidly progressing when the cold weather suspended operations. A Lake of about twenty acres above Seventy-sixth street is so far completed as to admit of filling it with water during the winter, and has afforded healthful amusement and recreation for thousands in skating; the lower lake at Fifty-ninth street near the Fifth avenue is also well advanced. Jan. 1

"The Play-ground and the Parade-ground are nearly complete.

"The buildings of all descriptions that were found on the Park have, with here and there an exception, reserved for use on the Park, been sold and removed and the proceeds of sales deposited in the Treasury. Among the buildings spared, though a very inferior structure, is the Arsenal constructed by the State and purchased by the city. . . .

"The establishment of a Pound has been to a large extent effectual in preventing the incursions of straying animals, from which the young trees have suffered injury." A map showing the original topography of the park and the roads and walks under construction, signed by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux, accompanies the report.—2d Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1859). See also Man. Com. Coun. (1859), 592–95.

A coloured view of New York from Weehawken, lithographed by W. Gauci, is published in London by E. Gambart & Co.—Pyne sales catalogue, item 103. "

The new rink in Central Park is "quite a fashionable resort for skaters," and many hundreds are enjoying the exercise daily.—N. Y. Times, Je 5, 1859. See also ibid., Ja 10, 12, 13, 20 and F 3, 1859. For view of this, in 1861, see Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 236. 3

Mayor Tiemann, in his annual message to the common council, says: "As is well known, a part of the City Hall was destroyed, and damaged by fire in the month of September last [error for Ag 18, q. v.]. . . . The Street Commissioner was directed by the Common Council to cause plans to be prepared for the repair or reconstruction of the part destroyed, which have not been carried into effect, from the fact that no appropriation was applicable to the work. "

"I am of opinion that the building should be restored to its former condition without the addition of a full story for public offices, as little available room would be gained thereby, although a large additional expense would be required."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1859), No. 1, p. 49.

The new Athenæum Club, having been fully organized, opens its club rooms at No. 48 Clinton Place for the first time.—N. Y. Times, Ja 13, 1859. See Mr 24. 12

The centennial anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns is celebrated at Cooper Institute. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher delivers the address. On Jan. 25, a commemorative banquet was held at the Astor House, where Wm. Cullen Bryant, James T. Brady, Dr. Francis, Horace Greeley, and others spoke. A celebration was also held at Mozart Hall.—N. Y. Times, Ja 25 and 26, 1859. 24

The new house of reception of the New York Juvenile Asylum, at 71 W. 13th St., is opened.—N. Y. Times, Ja 24, 1859. See also L. M. R. K., III: 955. "

A plan of fortifications to defend the water approaches to the city is proposed by J. G. Barnard, major of engineers, in a report to the secretary of war. The fortifications at the Narrows are Forts Hamilton and Lafayette on Long Island; and the old Forts Tompkins and Richmond, and Batteries Hudson and Morton on Staten Island. Between 1840 and 1859, a new Fort Richmond, three or four times the size of the old work, has been built; and a new work in place of Fort Tompkins has been commenced. A new casemated water-battery, also, nearly equal to Fort Richmond, and south of it, has been planned; and it is proposed to extend the earthen batteries. Maj. Barnard also proposes to enlarge the works on Long Island by extending batteries (either open or casemated) along the bluff below Fort Hamilton, and to re-model Fort Lafayette. He proposes to build a fortification on Robbins' Reef, which is mid-way between the Narrows and Governor's Island, to command the approach through the Narrows and the outlets of the "Kills." A work on the point of Coney Island is proposed to sweep the waters of Gravesend Bay. A fortification on Sandy Hook, authorised by Congress, is being commenced. The East River 27

1859 Jan. 27 approach to the city is defended by Fort Schuyler. Another work, opposite to it, on Willett's Point, is deemed necessary.—Barnard, The Dangers and Defences of N. Y., pub. by the Chamber of Com. (1859). See also N. Y. Times, Ap 14, 1859.

Feb. — The Rutgers Medical College on Duane Street is destroyed by fire. This was a school established by Doctors Hosack, Mott, Francis, and McNeven. It is a branch of Rutgers College of New Brunswick, N. J.—Griscom, Memoir of John Griscom, 229. See also L. M. R. K., III: 941.

25 Wm. Smith O'Brien, Irish patriot, arrives at New York on a visit to the United States. Salutes are fired in his honour, addresses of welcome are delivered by Judge B. O'Connor and Thos. F. Meagher, and cheers are shouted by multitudes on the Battery.—N. Y. Times, F 26, 1859. On May 28, he sailed from New York for Ireland.—Ibid., My 30 and 31, 1859.

Mar. 9 Another storey is to be added to the merchants' exchange in Wall St.—N. Y. Times, Mr 9, 1859.

18 The legislature passes a law prohibiting the admission into theatres in New York City of any minor under 14 years of age who is not accompanied by an adult person.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 48.

24 "The Athenæum Club [see Ja 12] have removed from their house in Clinton-place, to the large and elegant house No. 108 Fifth-avenue, corner of sixteenth-street."—N. Y. Times, Mr 24, 1859. The club "is an association of men of letters, artists, and members of the liberal professions, numbering some 400 to 500, who meet for the purpose of social intercourse, &c. The establishment is elegantly furnished."—Miller's N. Y. As It Is (1859), 74.

28 The N. Y. Historical Society having in its possession "the only printed Copy known to exist of the Journal of the Assembly, at the First Meeting of its Fourth Session, which commenced at Poughkeepsie, in Dutchess County, on September 7th, 1780, and closed on October 10th in that year," it presents to the state "an elegant Manuscript Copy of the Journal," which the society has had prepared. On April 8, the assembly passed a resolution of thanks for the gift, and directed that the MS. copy be deposited in the state library and that the Regents have 500 printed copies made.—Assemb. Jour. (1780), Preface.

Apr. 2 The legislature passes a law for the extension of Central Park from 106th to 110th St. between Fifth and Eighth Aves.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 101. The lands were acquired for this purpose in 1863.—Ann. Rep., Park Dept. (1902). See also 16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 462–63. Maps of the extension, in 7 sheets, made by John A. Bagley in 1859–1860, are filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 2008.

4 "Tannhäuser" is sung for the first time in America, at the Stadt Theatre (formerly the Bowery Amphitheatre).—Brown, I: 238; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 900.

14 The board of commissioners of taxes and assessments for the city and county of New York is created by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 302.

15 The legislature authorises the commissioners of Central Park to widen Seventh Ave. from 110th St. to the Harlem River by adding 25 ft. to each side so that the whole width shall be 150 ft.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 363.

" "An Act for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage, and to prevent fraudulent voting" is passed by the legislature. It provides for a "board of registry," consisting of three inspectors for each election district appointed by the board of supervisors of the city and county of New York. Such board is to meet three weeks prior to the general election for two days, if necessary, "for the purposes of registering the names of the legal voters of such districts." They shall meet again "on the Tuesday of the week preceding the day of the general election . . . for the purpose of revising, correcting and completing said lists."—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 380. For newspaper comment on the result of the first registration, see N 2.

16 The legislature authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to lay a double track from their track on Fourth Ave. at 42d St. up said street to Madison Ave. and up Madison Ave. to 79th St. and to use steam for drawing their passenger and freight cars from the northern extremity of Manhattan to the south side of 42d St.—Laws of N. Y. (1859), chap. 387. The company was also permitted to establish a steam terminal at 42d St. and Fourth Ave.—From chronology supplied by the company.

" The Broadway Theatre is being demolished.—N. Y. Times, Ap 16, 1859. See also L. M. R. K., III: 982. By Nov. 2, the site was occupied by a store.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 2, 1859.

Apr. 16 The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the U. S. is organized. After incorporation, it began business in "a small back room on the second floor of a four-story building over against Trinity Churchyard," at 98 Broadway, on July 28. On Dec. 1, the office was transferred to the new building, just completed, at 92 Broadway, where four rooms were occupied. In a few years, additional space was procured at 94 and 96 Broadway.—From The Equitable Society's First Half Century (1909). For history of the company's own building, see My 1, 1870.

19 Austria sends an ultimatum demanding that Sardinia put her army on a peace footing and disperse all volunteers. Cavour immediately rejected it, and war followed.—Andrews, Hist. Development of Modern Europe, II: 124–25. See My 3.

May 3 France declares war on Austria because she has invaded France's ally, Sardinia.—Anderson, Constitutions and other Select Docs. Illus. of Hist. of France (1789–1907), 569–71.

20 The French and Italian allies defeat the Austrians at Montebello.—N. Y. Times, Jl 26, 1859.

June 2 The Ramble in Central Park is opened to the public.—3d Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1860), 10. See N 12.

4 The Austrians are disastrously defeated at Magenta by the allied French and Sardinian armies under Napoleon III.—N. Y. Times, Je 20–23, 1859.

19 The corner-stone of the R. C. Church of St. Paul the Apostle is laid in 59th St. near Ninth Ave.—N. Y. Times, Je 20, 1859. The church was dedicated on Nov. 27. It is in charge of the Paulist Fathers.—Ibid., N 28, 1859. See also King's Handbook, 397–98, and L. M. R. K., III: 936. A new church was erected on the site in 1876.—N. Y. Times, Je 5, 1876.

22 An operatic benefit is held at the Academy of Music "in aid of the wives and children of the heroic soldiers who are fighting so gallantly and gloriously for the independence of a great people on the plains of Lombardy." A sum exceeding $3,000 is raised.—N. Y. Times, Je 22 and 23, 1859.

24 The Battle of Solferino is fought, and Napoleon III again defeats the Austrians, the latter losing about 35,000 men.—N. Y. Times, Jl 7–20, 1859.

28 The mayor approves a resolution of the common council directing the street commissioner (G. W. Smith) "to have specifications drawn, and advertise immediately for proposals to have the City Hall building put in proper repair, and as it was previous to the fire."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVII: 212. Smith made a report on Aug. 19 which was approved.—Ibid., XXVII: 355. The contract was signed on Sept. 23 (q. v.).

July 11 The Peace of Villafranca is signed by Napoleon III and Francis Joseph. It provides for an Italian confederacy under the honorary presidency of the pope, the cession of Lombardy to Sardinia, and Austria's retention of Venice.—N. Y. Times, Jl 25 et seq., 1859.

" The corner-stone of a new synagogue for the Congregation Shearith Israel is laid in 19th St. near Fifth Ave.—"The Congregation Shearith Israel," in Pubs., Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., VI: 123, 136, 140. The new synagogue was consecrated on Sept. 12, 1860 (q. v.).

Aug. 13 The Richmond Grays arrive on a visit to the city and are enthusiastically welcomed by the National Guard and a committee of the common council. During their stay, they attended services at St. John's Church, visited the public institutions, were reviewed by Mayor Tiemann, and were given a dinner at the Metropolitan Hotel by the city. They left on Aug. 18, and "their departure, like their entrance to our City, and their sojourn here, was an ovation which has seldom if ever been accorded to any strangers, civil or military, who ever before visited the City of New-York."—N. Y. Times, Ag 15–19, 1859.

One of the Grays, on his return home, sent an account of the visit to the Richmond Whig, saying in part: "The street cars, in New-York, run Sundays, day and night, as at all other times. Availing ourself of this means of conveyance, we rode to the upper part of the City, and took a survey of the place, much talked about, called 'The Central Park'. . . . In returning from the Park . . . we walked through Madison-avenue and other fashionable streets, what splendid mansions meet the eye at every step. Look to the 1859 Aug. 13 right or left, and you see row after row of three or four story tenements—all faced with omnipresent brown stone, and characterized by an undeviating style of steps leading from the sidewalks to the front doors. It might almost be imagined that there is or was but one plan of building residences in New York, so uniform is the appearance of the façades, but an inspection, of course, reveals some variation in the style of exterior finish. Still, it is wearisome to behold such an endless succession of houses so closely resembling each other; and in continuing our walk it was a momentary relief to turn into the streets inhabited by the poorer classes of the community. In relieving our contemplative organs, we aggrieved our olfactories, and were right glad when we again reached a purer atmosphere."—Ibid., Ag 27, 1859.

23 The Fifth Avenue Hotel, on the site of Franconi's Hippodrome (see Mr 14 and S 9, 1856), is opened to the public. William Washburn of Boston was the architect.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 25, 1859; Maurice, Fifth Ave., 325–27. It contains a passenger elevator, invented by Otis Tufts of Boston.—N. Y. Times, Ag 23, 1859; Scientific Am. (1859), I: 125; The Galaxy (Nov. 1882), 890, 891; Harper's New Monthly Mag., Nov., 1882. For description of the hotel, see also Granite Monthly, X: 317, and Leslie's Weekly, IX: 329. It is shown on A. Pl. 22-b, Vol. III. The elevator was not the first passenger elevator in New York, as one run by steam was in use in the Latting Observatory in 1853 (q.v., Je 30). The Fifth Avenue Hotel was demolished in 1908 (q.v., Ap 4). Regarding it, see also records of the Title Guarantee & Trust Co.; L. M. R. K., III: 978; descrip. of Pl. 141–b, III: 710.

25 The Spingler Institute has purchased the Samuel P. Townsend residence at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 34th St. for $200,000. The mansion is to be altered for the use of the school.—N. Y. Times, Ag 25, 1859. See also Wealthy Citizens of the City of N. Y. (1855), and Miller's N. Y. As It Is (1862), 74. The property was later purchased by A. T. Stewart.—L. M. R. K., III: 952.

28 Col. E. L. Drake, by driving an artesian well near Titusville, Pa., struck oil. Although petroleum was known, even in ancient times, Drake's was the first oil well.—Brannt, Petroleum (1895), 13; Crum, Romance of Am. Petroleum and Gas (1911 and 1921).

29 "The progress of this Metropolis is especially marked in its domestic architecture. Each year witnesses fresh improvements and more lavish expenditure. . . . The store of Messrs. Lord & Taylor, at the corner of Grand-street and Broadway, to be opened this morning, is one of the finest, if not the very finest, on this grandest of thoroughfares. It is five stories high, built of white marble, and looks more like an Italian palace than a place for the sale of broadcloth. Its extravagant ornamentation would be regarded as a fault by persons of more moderate taste than New-Yorkers. The basement and the first and second stories of this establishment form three immense salesrooms—each of which is about 100 feet square, and is subdivided by Corinthian columns into three compartments. The stairs communicating with these stories are of palatial width and of massive oak. The upper floors, not yet finished, will be used for manufacturing purposes. A most notable ornament in the building is the huge gas chandelier that lights up the staircase. It was made by Tiffany at a cost of $500, and is original and unique of its kind. The lower wing is not yet completed; but without it the building is one of the most spacious stores in the City, and has every accommodation for the transaction of a colossal business."—N. Y. Times, Ag 29, 1859. See also 1826. A rare view of Lord & Taylor's establishment at 461–467 Broadway, cor. of Grand St., was sold with the Pyne collection, at the Am. Art Assn. galleries, Feb. 5–7, 1917 (item No. 319), a reproduction appearing in the catalogue. See also N. Y. Times, S 5, 1859.

Sept. 1 Wm. B. Astor having erected a new building adjoining the Astor Library in Lafayette Place (see Ja 9, 1854) and of the same dimensions, the enlarged library is opened to the public with 110,000 volumes.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 702–3.

10 A new air-ship called "The City of New York" is being built for a transatlantic trip.—N. Y. Times, S 10, 1859. See also ibid., O 25, 28, 31, 1859. See, further, N 1.

14 The Winter Garden Theatre, erected on Broadway opposite Bond St. to replace the old Metropolitan Theatre (see S 18, 1853), is opened with "Cricket on the Hearth."—N. Y. Times, S 15, 1859; L. M. R. K., III: 986. It was destroyed by fire on March 23, 1867 (q.v.).

15 Leopold Eidlitz is paid $824 for "plans, specifications, &c., for repairs to City Hall."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1859), No. 32. See S 23.

"Dixie," just composed by Daniel D. Emmett, is sung for the first time from the stage of Bryant's Minstrels at 472 Broadway.—Kobbé, Famous Am. Songs, 59–78. Sept. 19

A contract is awarded to Edward Gridley, builder, for restoring the city hall to its condition prior to the fire of 1858 (q.v., Ag 18). Gridley agrees to "furnish all materials necessary to complete, and cause to be performed all the work required for Repairing the City Hall, agreeably with the drawings made and prepared by Leopold Eidlitz, Architect" (see S 15), in accordance with certain specifications. The drawings include a front elevation, a ground plan of the attic story, a plan of the roof and framing, a section, and a plan of the framing of the cupola, but these are not on file.—From contract in auditor's office of the commissioner of public works, Borough of Manhattan. The repairs were begun on Sept. 30.—N. Y. Times, O 1, 1859. See O 15. 23

The common council grants the Ninth Ave. R. R. Co. permission to lay a track from the Ninth Ave. R. R. track at Greenwich St.; through Canal St. to connect with the Eighth Ave. R. R. track at Hudson St.; also to lay a track from Ninth Ave. through 54th St. to connect with Eighth Ave. R. R.; and permits the Eighth and Ninth Ave. R. R. Co. to run their cars over each other's tracks during such times as they may be respectively relaying and repairing their tracks.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVII: 390. Oct. 3

The four southerly dwellings forming the southern end of the block of uniformly designed new houses on the east side of Fifth Ave. between 41st and 42d Sts. are advertised to be sold by auction at the merchants' exchange. "The Houses are of Brick, 5 stories high, built with hollow walls, in the best and most substantial manner, by days' work, and contain every modern convenience. Have fine Court Yards of 29 feet 6 inches in width on the Avenue and 5 feet on 41st Street."—From copy of original poster advertising this sale, in author's collection. The houses are shown on Pl. 148-b, Vol. III. For description of this neighbourhood, see N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 29, 1859. 4

The sum of $3,250 is appropriated for "retouching, restoring, regilding, and repairing the pictures and frames in the Governor's Room."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVII: 430. See D 31. 15

"The work of repairing the City Hall [see S 23] is going on vigorously. All the charred timbers and crumbled walls have been removed, new ones put in their places, and the roof put on. It is expected that by Monday the roof will be in readiness for coppering. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, O 15, 1859. See also ibid., O 27, 1859, and N. Y. Herald, O 25, 1859. "

Harper's Ferry is captured by 18 men under John Brown, the object being to hold the place as a refuge for fugitive slaves. Brown was tried for treason and executed on Dec. 2 (q.v.).—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., II: 383–416. See also N. Y. Times, O 18 et seq., 1859. 16

"It is stated that a movement is on foot to purchase St. John's Park for building purposes, the sum of $600,000 having been offered for it."—N. Y. Tribune, O 26, 1859. 26

Prof. T. S. C. Lowe commences the inflation of his great balloon, "The City of New York" (see S 10). The balloon is on exhibition in Reservoir Square. Lowe's transatlantic flight was postponed from time to time during November, and finally it was put off until the Spring, and the balloon was removed from the Crystal Palace grounds and stored "near the gas-house at the foot of Fourteenth-street, North River."—N. Y. Times, N 1, 2, 4, 12, 15, 16, 19, and 26, 1859. See also Lowe's pamphlet entitled Air-Ship City of New York: Full Description of the Air-Ship and the Apparatus to be employed, in the Aerial Voyage to Europe; with a Historical Sketch of the Art of Ballooning and the Aeronaut's Address to the Public (N. Y., 1859). In appearance, as shown by wood-cut illustrations in the pamphlet, the balloon had a closed car in place of the usual basket, below which was suspended a large open boat. See, further, Je 8, 1860. Nov. 1

The first registration of voters in the city under the new "Registry Law" (see Ap 15) is completed. "Considering that the process was entirely new, both to the registrars and the registered, and that the law is more elaborate than transparent, the work has been done very well. The appointees of the Board of Supervisors have, according to all accounts, been entirely impartial, and afforded every facility to applicants of all parties."—N. Y. Herald, N 3, 1859. 2

The 100th anniversary of the birth of Friedrich Schiller is commemorated in New York by a three days' celebration (beginning on this day), consisting of plays, vocal and instrumental music, tableaux, etc.—N. Y. Times, N 10–12, 1859. 9

1859 Nov. 12 The new four-mile drive-way in Central Park is opened to the public. The road may be entered at 72d St. and 59th St. from either Fifth or Eighth Ave., and it "runs through the Park by a route which displays in succession the expansive Mall, the unique Skating Pond, the delightful Ramble, the massive bridges, the deep cut near the old Reservoir, the capacious bed of the unfinished Manhattan Lake, and all the points of interest in the lower portion of the Park."—N. Y. Times, N 14, 1859. See, further, Mr 13, 1860.

18 "Mr. Franklin S. Kinney of No. 17 Nassau street is building a white marble hotel on the corner of Broadway and Twenth-fourth street, facing Madison square. It is six stories in hight, and has a frontage of 225 feet on Broadway and Twenty-fourth street, covering four city lots. It is to be conducted on the plan of the best European hotels. . . . There are to be two dining-rooms and about 50 suits of rooms—the parlors of which will all front on one of the streets. Pleasant accommodations will thus be afforded for ladies and families to the number of 250 persons. . . . It is built in the modern French style, with numerous balconies, and a steep slated roof! . . . The entrance to the hotel is on Twenty-fourth street, with a private door on Broadway. . . . The building will cost about $100,000, and be finished about the 1st of April. Renwick & Auchmaty are the architects."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 18, 1859. The new hotel was doubtless the Albemarle, which is shown on Perris's insurance map of this year.

24 Adelina Patti, at the age of 16, makes her début in opera at the Academy of Music in "Lucia."—Ireland, Rec. of the N. Y. Stage, II: 705; Mortier, Biog. Sketch of Madame Adelina Patti, 10. Patti first appeared in New York in 1852 (q. v., My 11).

28 Washington Irving dies at Sunnyside at the age of 76. As soon as the news reached New York, the flags on the city hall and other public buildings were lowered to half mast, and resolutions of regret were passed by the common council. Irving was buried in Tarrytown Cemetery on Dec. 1. Several of the New York councilmen attended the burial services, and while the funeral cortege was in progress, the bells of the city were tolled. Tributes of respect were paid to his memory by the New York Historical Society and other societies.—N. Y. Times, N 30, D 1–2, 6–7, 1859. See also cat. of autograph letters and MSS. sold at Anderson's, Jan. 23 and 24, 1924, items 202A–208.

" "A mansion presenting a rather unique appearance has been erected by John Jacob Astor, jr. on the Fifth Avenue at the corner of Thirty-third street. It is faced with Philadelphia pressed brick, and the window dressings, architraves, cornices, rustics, columns and stoop are made of Nova-Scotia freestone, together with the facing of the basement story. The building is 50 by 107 feet, and has three stories, besides basement and attic. The latter is constructed in the French style, there being a slight inclination from the perpendicular on each of the four sides, and is richly mounted in front. Facade Corinthian columns and pilasters flank the main entrance, which is approached by means of a double stoop. The height of the first story is 16 feet clear, that of the second 14½, and of the third and attic 13½ feet each. The structure is quite a relief to the monotonous view presented by a vast range on either side of the avenue, of brown stone fronts which, although stately and spacious, so closely resemble each other as to easily pass for duplicates of the same original."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 28, 1859. The house is shown on Pl. 155B, Vol. III.

Dec. — The number of patrolmen is 1,250. The salary of each is $800 a year.—Comptroller's Letter Book, No. 174, p. 150.

— In this month, the Down Town Association was organized at the Astor House. For a brief account of its various homes, see L. M. R. K., III: 937–38.

2 John Brown, having been convicted of treason, is hanged at Charlestown, Va.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., II: 403–16. His body was taken to New York City on the following day, on its way to North Elba, in Essex County.—N. Y. Times, D 5, 1859. See D 15.

6 In a three-cornered election for mayor, Fernando Wood, candidate of the Mozart Hall democracy, and mayor during the years 1853–57, wins against Havemeyer, the Tammany candidate, and Opdyke, Republican. National issues affected the vote to a considerable degree. It "must be viewed," says the Herald, "as the expression of opinion in this great metropolis in favor of the Union, peace and prosperity of the country, a defence of the rights of the South against the assaults of fanaticism, and as a rebuke to anti-slavery agitation in its duplicated shape as represented by Havemeyer and Opdyke."—N. Y. Herald, D 7, 1858. Some letters from prominent people to Wood during his mayoralty, 1859–61, including a certificate of his election, are among the miscellaneous N. Y. MSS. in N. Y. P. L. Wood was succeeded by George Opdyke (see D 3, 1861). Dec. 6

Postmaster Fowler has 5,000 cast-iron letter boxes put up on lamp posts throughout the city.—Leslie's Weekly, IX: 19. These were considered a failure.—Ibid., IX: 241. 10

A large meeting is held at Cooper Institute "to proffer their sympathy in a public manner for the family and associates of John Brown." Speeches in defence of Brown are made by Rev. Dr. Cheever, Wendell Phillips, and others.—N. Y. Times, D 16, 1859. 15

A great Union meeting is held at the Academy of Music, at which Mayor Tiemann, James Brooks, Charles O'Connor, ex-Gov. Washington Hunt, and others make addresses. Letters of approval from Gen. Winfield Scott, ex-Pres. Franklin Pierce, Millard Fillmore, and Martin Van Buren, etc. are read. Other meetings are held outside the academy in Irving Place and on 14th St.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 20, 1859. See views in Harper's Weekly, IV: 1, 8–9. 19

Chas. Keicher is paid $100 for "painting coat of arms of the city in Mayor's office."—Doc. No. 8, Bd. of Ald. (1860). "

"Since the Central Park was commenced there has been a great movement going on in the northern end of the island, and property in that vicinity has rapidly been acquiring an increased value. Before long we shall see the whole line of the Harlem and North Rivers covered with stores and factories; and when the Harlem River is cleared, as contemplated, and navigation established with Spuyten Duyvil creek, thus connecting the East River with the Hudson, the entire space between Tubby Hook and Harlem River will be thickly populated and devoted to business purposes, of course with the exception of that portion around Washington Heights, which is not available for streets, and which nature specially designed for a rus in urbe. Up to that point the ground lying between the two rivers is comparatively level, admits of an easy grade, and can be easily converted into streets and avenues. 21

"It is already contemplated to construct a village which will occupy all that space; and with that view we perceive that some five hundred lots are to be sold at auction to-day at the Merchants' Exchange.

"The natural tendency of our population towards the neighborhood of the Central Park, and the vis a tergo with which the increase of business is compelling the trade and commerce of the metropolis to extend themselves in that direction are manifest to every one. The picturesque beauty of the park, as well as the natural charms of the locality itself, affords an attraction without parallel to erect residences all around in that vicinity, while the pressure of a rapidly increasing trade must compel us to convert that portion of the island lying above it, as far north as Washington Heights, to business and manufactures. . . ."—N. Y. Herald, D 21, 1859; Pasko, Old N. Y., II: 287–88.

Sen. Wm. H. Seward, on his return from Europe, is welcomed by a committee of the common council and tendered the use of the city hall for the reception of his friends. On Dec. 29, he received an ovation from the public.—N. Y. Times, D 29 and 30, 1859. 28

The street commissioner is authorised "to procure, by contract or otherwise, a clock for the cupola of the City Hall, which in his opinion shall, in every respect be a credit to the city of New York" and to make arrangements for placing it "in the upper story of the City Hall." It is not to cost more than $4,000.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVII: 576–77; descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 587. 30

The street commissioner is authorised to have partitions removed in the governor's room, and $1,500 is appropriated for the work.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVII: 611. See Ap 23, 1860. 31

A tabulated statement of the city's debt is prepared. It was published in the Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 226. "

In about this year, a series of photographs of important sites and buildings in New York was made; it included one of Union Square, which is reproduced and described as A. Pl. 27 B-a, Vol. III. —

Mayor Wood, in his message to the board of aldermen, calls attention to the impotence of the mayor under the present charter. "Responsibility and power should go hand in hand," he says, "The Mayor should be clothed with ample authority. Those who are to execute the laws and ordinances should derive their appointments from him, and hold office no longer than, in his judgment, the duty shall be performed with fidelity. Jan. 2

"However conscientious and capable, no man holding the office of Mayor can meet public expectations, until the necessary changes shall be made in the fundamental law. Under the system as it is, we shall go on from bad to worse, sinking deeper every year in the 'slough of despond.'

"When accepting the nomination of the National Democratic party of this city, as a candidate for the Mayoralty, I declared my sentiments fully upon this subject. Upon that occasion I presented the platform upon which I should go into the canvass, and the policy which would govern my official course, if elected.

"The basis of this platform was in the following words: 'I am in favor of one head to the Corporation, which shall possess authority to enforce prompt obedience to the laws by officials and the people, believing that this city requires a strong, consolidated government, having sufficient inherent vigor and legal independence to command immediate compliance to its will. Better have an iron rule, than no rule at all, as now.'

"My opponents took issue with me upon this principle, and the people have decided in my favor. I therefore have a right to expect that the necessary amendments shall be made to the charter, which shall carry out their wishes. Those who expect a reform, without reforming the foundations of the evil, will be disappointed. Under the present laws, it makes little difference who occupies the Mayoralty. That functionary is but a clerk. His duties are chiefly clerical and his powers subordinate. Though he may be surrounded by those who live upon official peculation, and otherwise evince a disregard of the public interests, he has not the legal right to punish the one or remedy the other.

"The Mayor, as chief executive, has not the necessary authority to enforce a prompt obedience to, and execution of the laws, and without such authority concentrated in the hands of one man, there can be no good government. It is folly for any person holding this office to attempt that which he has no legal authority to accomplish. The evil-doers will resist him in the courts, and he must necessarily be discomfited. Moral suasion or official station avail not against the corrupt element existing in New York. There must 1860 Jan. 2 be a corrective, stronger and more potent. We require a vigorous arm, upheld by sufficient warrant of law. It is not only necessary that we should have a chief magistrate with capacity, integrity, industry and nerve, but he must be vested with requisite, unquestionable jurisdiction. With such a man, thus strengthened and encouraged reforms can be accomplished; otherwise, all attempts to this end will be futile.

"The views now presented by me, in favor of a radical change in the City Charter, are the results of study, observation and experience. I am confident that New York will have no reforms until the fundamental law itself is changed. Whether the Legislature will at this time concur or not, I do not know; but rest assured that, sooner or later, the people will, with one voice, demand the establishment of the 'One Man Power,' and the erection of a strong, consolidated executive government over the municipal anarchy and ruin to which we are now so speedily tending."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII: 21–24.

The Tribune says: "Mr Wood tells the public that he can do nothing, and the Councils can do very little, to mitigate the heavy burdens now pressing upon our tax-payers. We say they can do a great deal; and if they would only take hold and do what they can, we would favor an increase of their power. Let them begin and cut down the inordinate salaries now paid to the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department and scores more of unprofitable tax-eaters, shut up the dens of the mock auctioneers and emigrant ticket-swindlers, enact ordinances calculated to break up gambling-houses, brothels, and law-defying grogshops, and prove themselves on the side of morality, industry and thrift, against fraud, debauchery and wrong, and they could easily obtain from our new Legislature any reasonable enlargement of their powers. But, until they evince a disposition to use energetically and beneficently the power they already have they will doubtless clamor in vain for its increase; and, in any case, such a practical autocracy as Mr. Wood seems to demand, is out of the question."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 4, 1860.

13 The Herald gives two columns to the "illegal jobs and frauds" of last year's common council, and declares that other schemes "were concocted," but "in consequence of the determined opposition of the press and the strong public sentiment created thereby, the plotters were temporarily foiled in their schemes and the matters 'laid over' until a more propitious season. Among these jobs are the following: 1. The repaving of Broadway. 2. A contract for cleaning the streets. 3. The establishment of Westchester railroads, with rails through our principal streets. 4. The widening of Nassau street. 5. The sale of the Brooklyn ferry leases in an illegal manner." Minute details of these schemes are given. The prospect for improvement in the present year is called "dim," and the "city legislators" are denounced in scathing terms thus: "With few exceptions [they] are an unprincipled, illiterate, scheming set of cormorants; foisted upon the community through the machine of primary elections, bribed election inspectors, ballot box stuffing, and numerous other illegal means for attaining power. The consequence is that we have a class of municipal legislators forced upon us who have been educated in barrooms, brothels, and political societies; and whose only aim in attaining power is to consummate schemes for their own aggrandizement and pecuniary gain. The present Common Council are not the legitimate representatives of an intelligent community; none of our eminent merchants, tradesmen or mechanics are among them; but, on the contrary, they are from a class of men of superficial views, without the capacity or education to rank as wise legislators. In the present Common Council are men under indictment for murder and fraud, and those who, only a short time previous to their election, were inmates of the penitentiary at Blackwell's Island; and there are others who are actively engaged in contracts with the city—an act strictly forbidden by the amended charter, passed in the year 1857. In so doing they perjure themselves by engaging in that work, which by their solemn oath they swore they would not do."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 13, 1860.

This very outspoken language aroused the ire of the aldermen, who declared in a resolution that justice to their number "imperatively demands that either those accusations should be proved, and the charges against its members substantiated, or that such accusations and charges should be as publicly retracted as they were preferred by the proprietor or proprietors of the newspaper in question." This resolution was sent to the other board for concurrence.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII: 106–8. The Tribune editor remarks that it appears probable that "the public will be regaled with the interesting spectacle of Mr. James Gordon Bennett being held to account for rebuking sin." But the common council "must beware how they play with edged tools, as, unfortunately for the city, some of the members are amenable to the charge made by the Herald."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 17, 1860. Says the Times: "The public will await this august spectacle with considerable anxiety and curiosity. A more remarkable culprit has rarely come before a more remarkable tribunal. Charles I before the Regicides, Warren Hastings before the House of Lords, Franklin before the Privy Council, were all very well in their way; but James Gordon Bennett arraigned before Messrs. Boole, Brady and Bagley [the aldermanic committee], for making disagreeable insinuations about the New-York Common Council, will be, in many respects, the most imposing and thrilling scene which has ever been enacted on the stage of events."—N. Y. Times, Ja 19, 1860. See Ja 19. Jan. 13

The councilmen decline to take joint action with the aldermen for a committee of inquiry into the charges of the Herald (see Ja 13).—Proc., Bd. of Councilmen, LXXVII: 91. "We must continue to receive the evidence which is pouring in upon us," says the Herald. "Yesterday we were furnished with another batch of statements, and if they continue to come in at the present rate we shall probably have to employ two or three clerks to take care of them. It remains to be proved whether this investigation will go on in a fair and diligent spirit and what powers the committee have in the matter. And it remains to be proved, also, whether the statements made to us can be verified; but we must say they furnish a curious, a very curious history, indeed, of the late Boards of Aldermen and Councilmen. The language we used in describing the character of those bodies, whatever it was, was very moderate when compared with the statements in our possession. We hope, however, that the Aldermanic committee will give the matter every attention, and we again remind them of the necessity to subpoena the District Attorney, with directions to bring all his papers before them. They will probably throw a brilliant flood of light upon the whole transaction."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 20, 1860. 19

"Bond-street, once the head-quarters of fashionable society, and only a few years ago filled exclusively with private residences, is yielding to the resistless tide of business. Two or three business establishments have already invaded its precincts, and as it is the first step which tells in such a movement, they will have followers and imitators rapidly. Batchelor & Brown have taken possession of the old mansion of Gideon Lee; No. 1 is occupied as a restaurant, and a new hardware-store is soon to be opened next to the residence of Dr. Francis. This is the natural progress of events, and in due time even Fifth-avenue will probably go through a similar experience."—N. Y. Times, Ja 19, 1860. "

"The localities below the Park and around the City Hall, where the ancient Knickerbockers flourished, have long since been removed to make room for the progress of improvement, but until recently, the residences of the Revolutionary heroes have mostly had the good fortune to be spared. Within two or three days one of these, and not the least noteworthy—the mansion in which Gen. Lewis for a long period resided, in Leonard-street between Church and Broadway—has been demolished at the stern bidding of the ever-onward-marching Genius of Trade."—N. Y. Times, Ja 22, 1860. 21

"It appears," says the Tribune's editor, "that the county is paying fees for the same services to several officials. The Clerk of the Sessions, the County Clerk, and the Sheriff all draw 37½ cents each for informing the Secretary of State of every conviction and discharge of criminals. . . . It is high time that this leak was stopped."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 24, 1860. 24

The following remarks are made upon the city parks: "The expense of keeping and improving the public Parks in this city, for the year past, . . . was $27,389, of which amount a little more than half was devoted to Tompkins Square, though the improvements in that Park are not yet quite completed. A tasty stone and iron fence has been erected around it, the flagging has been taken up and replaced where necessary, grass and timothy seed have been sown, privet planted, and young and thrifty trees set out. Gutters and drains are yet to be built, and a railing is to be put around the fountain. Madison Square looks dilapidated. The wooden fence around it is rotten and decaying, continually requiring repairs; and the Square, in consequence, looks very little like the one which a Flora McFlimsey might be expected to choose for her melancholy 26

1860 promenades. Lines of flagging and an iron fence are wanted.
Jan. Union Park looks neat and cozy, and the fountain never fails.
26 The Washington Parade Ground also seems to be in good condition. A number of large trees in this Park were broken down and destroyed by heavy storms last Summer. The fairy little fields facing Dr. Tyng's Church, the East and West Stuyvesant Parks, though almost deserted except on sunny days, maintain as inviting and cheerful an aspect as any other Parks in the city. The City Hall Park in some parts is muddy, in others dilapidated, and presents a shabbiness of appearance in keeping with the seedy politicians that lounge about in it. The parade ground in front of the Hall was elevated last Fall by filling in foundery ashes, and mud since then has been less plentiful. The Controller and Street Commissioner have closed up the Beekman street breach with comely little wooden posts, and the question is pending whether Beekman street shall be extended or not. The Bowling Green, down town, is closed, and its fountain frozen up, and none but immigrants now resort to that dirty and noisome dumping ground, the once beautiful and much-frequented Battery."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ja 26, 1860.

" The Duane Street M. E. Church, erected in 1797, is sold at auction for $72,750. "The recent widening of Duane-street, and the proximity of the wharves and railroads, make the location one most desirable for business purposes."—N. Y. Times, Ja 27, 1860. See also L. M. R. K., III: 929.

30 An act of legislature deprives the common council of the city of New York of its power to grant franchises for street surface railways; such grants are to issue from the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 3. On the same day the board of aldermen resolved that the home-rule privileges of the city were being grossly violated in bills pending before the state legislature that contemplated "the deprivation of the inhabitants of this city of all control, right, title and interest over the streets, avenues and public places and highways located in said city."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII: 173–75. "The protest made little impression either upon the governor, to whom a copy was transmitted, or upon the people of the city. They had been fleeced so many times by the city legislators that they were once more turning to the state legislature for relief."—Carman, Street Surface Railway Franchises of N. Y. City, 87.

The Central Park commissioners present to the common council their third annual report. They observe an "eagerness that exists in the public mind for the establishment, within the Central Park, of institutions that will afford the means of popular cultivation and innocent recreation," but "doubt the propriety of appropriating the moneys placed at its disposal for these or any kindred purposes." They believe a Zoological Garden "would be an object of continued interest and instruction to the whole community," but that the maintenance of such "out of the public funds would not be justified;" furthermore, "the maintenance of such a garden by a private association would insure more thorough management." They refer with satisfaction to the following paragraph in the comptroller's report for 1859: "The increase in the amount of taxes occuring to the city, in consequence of the enhancement in value of real estate situated in the upper part of the island, over and above the former value of the land now withdrawn from taxation, on account of the opening of this noble park, will it is thought, afford more than sufficient means for the payment of interest on the debt incurred for its purchase and improvement, without any increase in the general rate of taxation."

In the selection of employees they report their policy from the beginning has been that of "excluding all political influences from the park" with "results satisfactory to the whole community;" to this policy they "will rigidly adhere for the future."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII, 190–213.

Feb. A large public meeting is held at the City Assembly Rooms "to 17 express the sympathy which all enlightened Americans feel with the people of Italy in the present crisis of their national existence." Speeches are made by Rev. Dr. Bellows, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and others.—N. Y. Times, F 18, 1860.

18 "Broadway, opposite Fulton Street, is, in its way, the most striking place in the United States. No other spot conveys so good an idea of the bustle and stir of the great commercial city of America."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 106. An engraved view of the district appears in ibid., IV: 104–5.

21 On this, the eve of the anniversary of Washington's birth, a large and enthusiastic meeting is held at Coöper Institute in order that the people of New York may publicly express their devotion to the Constitution and their desire for the preservation of the Union. Addresses are made by Mr. James W. Gerard, Hon. J. Morrison Harris, Hon. George Briggs, and Mr. Theodore E. Tomlinson. Gen. Winfield Scott is among those present.—N. Y. Times, F 22, 1860. Feb. 21

The statue of Washington, ordered by congress in 1783 (q. v., Ag 7), is unveiled, over 75 years later, at the intersection of Pennsylvania and New Hampshire Aves., Washington, D. C. Pres. Buchanan makes the address of dedication, and Hon. Thos. S. Bocock of Virginia delivers an oration. The sculptor is Clark Mills of New York State. An appropriation of $50,000 was made for the statue by congress in 1853.—Johnston, Original Portraits of Washington (1882), 181–82. 22

Abraham Lincoln speaks at Cooper Institute to a large audience. Wm. Cullen Bryant presides as chairman.—N. Y. Times, F 28, 1860. James A. Briggs, who was instrumental in bringing Lincoln to New York, later wrote an account of his part in the event. Lincoln was invited by Wm. Cullen Bryant, David Dudley Field, and another man, to be one of the lecturers in a course proposed for the winter of 1859–60, each lecturer to receive $200. When Lincoln wrote, in due time, that he would deliver the lecture, a political one, on Feb. 27, the gentlemen responsible for the engagement feared that, as the expenses would be large and as it was late in the season, success was very doubtful. In this emergency Mr. Briggs proposed that the lecture be delivered at Cooper Institute. Both the Young Men's Republican Union and the Draper Republican Union Club refused to have it delivered under their auspices, so finally Briggs and the three original sponsors assumed the expenses and advertised the address. Mr. Briggs in his narrative commented upon the general absence of interest in Lincoln in New York City. "A notice of the proposed lecture appeared in the New York papers and the Times spoke of him 'as a lawyer who had some local reputation in Illinois.'" After the lecture was over, Briggs adds, "I was handed by the gentlemen interested the sum of $4.25 as my share of the profits."—"Narrative of James A. Briggs," in the N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 16, 1867. 27

Henry M. Field was in the audience that greeted Lincoln on this occasion, and in his biography of his brother, David Dudley Field, he writes his impressions of the event and the man: "It was in the Cooper Institute as it was in the old days when the platform of the great hall was not in the middle but at the far end, and I can see him now as the door opened, and the tall figure came forward accompanied by William Cullen Bryant and David Dudley Field. As I sat on the platform close to the speaker, I caught every word and observed every gesture. He spoke in a high-pitched voice, in which there was not a trace of the smooth-tongued orator; but there was a singular clearness in his style, with a merciless logic which no listener could escape, as he unfolded link after link in the iron chain of his argument. But there was more in evidence that night than skill in debate: there was a revelation of the man, as one who loved his party but loved his country more. The fairness to his opponents was quite unusual in political combatants. It was not as if he were fighting an enemy, but reasoning with a friend."—Life of David Dudley Field, by Henry M. Field (N. Y., 1898), 122–23.

"The work on the Central Park has dwindled down to a low figure, and unless 'material aid' is furnished soon, it will cease altogether. The whole force employed on Friday last [Mr 9], . . . was 160. . . . The only work doing above the new reservoir is in draining, upon which a squad of about 20 men are employed. The work upon the new reservoir, under the management of the Croton Board, is prosecuted with vigor. About 500 men are employed, at present, and as soon as the warm weather shall make it safe to renew the work upon the embankment—probably within a month—the force will be doubled. For the last four months the whole force has been employed in blasting rock for the bed of the reservoir. The embankment and masonry work remains the same as it was last Fall."—N. Y. Times, Mr 13, 1860. See D 31. Mar. 13

The street commissioner is directed "to advertise for proposals for the excavation and building of an area around the City Hall; said area to extend in front three feet from the building, and on the other three sides to be of a width of the present coping from the house, and carried to a depth of one foot below the basement floor. The windows on the front to be cut down to the depth of three feet six inches from the floor, and the area covered with an iron grating, as per diagram. The rear windows, and those on the 22

1860 Mar. 22 east or west side, to remain as they are, and the railing and coping to be re-set, the same distance from the main building they are at present, and return the award to the Common Council for confirmation."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVIII: 73. The award was given to E. Watson and Wm. Haw on July 5, 1860.—Ibid., XXVII: 218.

23 Their people having voted overwhelmingly for annexation, Lombardy, Parma, Modena, Tuscany, and the Romagna are formally united with Piedmont under Victor Emmanuel.—Andrews, Hist. of Development of Modern Europe, II: 130, 134–35.

" "The building of a Chapel for Grace Church has just been commenced in Fourteenth-street, nearly opposite the Academy of Music."—N. Y. Times, Mr 23, 1860.

28 A terrible fire occurs in a tenement-house, No. 90 West 45th St., between Broadway and Sixth Ave. The building is entirely destroyed. About ten people are burned to death and several are injured.—Harper's Weekly, IV: 216–18. See also N. Y. Times, Mr 29, 1860.

Apr. — In this month, a pony express began regular trips between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Cal. It was part of a mail line from New York to San Francisco, and by its aid the distance from coast to coast was made in 14 days. "The pony express lasted two years, being given up when the telegraph line across the continent was completed."—Harper's Encyclop. of U. S. Hist., Vol. VII.

3 The N. Y. Historical Society holds a meeting at the Academy of Music to commemorate the birth of Washington Irving. Wm. Cullen Bryant delivers the eulogy.—N. Y. Times, Ap 4, 1860.

7 Commissioners are appointed to lay out streets and avenues north of 155th St. They are James C. Willet, John A. Haven, Isaac P. Martin, Isaac Dyckman, Charles M. Connolly, John F. Seaman, and Henry H. Elliott. The elevated, irregular, and rocky formation of that district, and also between 125th and 141st Sts. east of Tenth Ave. and west of a line 50 feet east of the old Kingsbridge Road, made it necessary to alter the plan of the city. The commissioners are not authorised to close Tenth Ave., or the old or new Kingsbridge Road or the Bloomingdale Road, but may straighten or widen them. They were required to cause three similar maps to be made of the streets, avenues, roads, and public squares which they lay out, accompanied by field notes and elucidatory remarks; and to file these, one in the office of the secretary of state, one in the office of the clerk of the city and county of New York, and the third to belong to the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city. They were also required to erect monuments to show the location of the streets, &c., and designate their location on the maps; also to determine the elevations and depressions of the intersection of streets, &c., above high-water mark, and to designate these, together with the grades, and all such hills, valleys, inlets, and water-courses, as may be necessary, on the maps. The act defines the proceedings necessary for opening the streets so laid down.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 201. See Ap 24, 1865.

10 A Metropolitan Police District is established.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 259. A similar district was established in 1857 (q. v., Ap 15).

17 Madison Ave., from 42d to 86th St., is declared by the legislature to be a public street as if laid down by the commissioners of 1807, and is opened.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 466; amended by ibid. (1862), chap. 176.

" The first law requiring fire-escapes on tenement-houses is passed.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 470. For the development of legislation in this direction, immediately following this act and the building law of April 19, 1862, see Ann. Rep., Supt. of Buildings (1862–1869), 334–40; (1871), 62; and (1872), 9–27.

" The Library Association is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 479.

" "Sylvan Place," extending from Third to Fourth Aves., 120th and 121st Sts., is declared by the legislature a public place, as if it had been laid out by the commissioners of 1807.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 486.

" The legislature passes an act authorising the corporation "to grant, bargain, sell and convey to the United States so much and such parts of . . . the City Hall park, together with any buildings thereon, as the said mayor, aldermen and commonalty may deem proper."—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 506. For the purchase of the post-office plot, see Ap 11, 1867. See also Je 26, 1866.

" The legislature authorises the payment of a $1,200 salary to the members of the present common council for their services, "which shall be in lieu of and include all charges for carriage hire and other expenses."—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 509. Says the Tribune: "The Councilmen were so tickled with the idea of getting $1200 a year for their services that [in session last evening] they got up a mock attempt to donate their own salary, with that of the Board of Aldermen, to the Widow and Orphan's Fund of the New-York Fire Department. When the jest had gone far enough, the motion was withdrawn."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 21, 1860. At the time when this "salary grab" was introduced at Albany the Times argued: "In a City like this, a man who can do the duties of an Alderman, and earn his bread as well, is pretty sure to be an honester, more respectable and better-behaved man than an Alderman by profession. In other words, in the existing condition of ward politics, a person who has no ostensible means of support, and looks to being elected a municipal legislator for board and lodging, is pretty sure to be a worthless adventurer, and having no affairs of his own, is the last person in the world to be charged with the management of the affairs of other people. We do not assert or insinuate that penniless people are unfit for office, but we know as a matter of fact that penniless people in New-York, who take to ward politics for a livelihood, are, in nine cases out of ten, incorrigible scamps."—N. Y. Times, F 22, 1860. Apr. 17

" By act of legislature, the department of "Public Charities and Correction" is created. It is to be headed by four commissioners appointed for five years by the comptroller, although their successors are to have six-year terms. The almshouse department, that had been created on April 2, 1849 (q. v.), is abolished, and all books and accounts are ordered to be transferred to the new department. Particularly mentioned as coming under the control of these commissioners are the almshouse and workhouse, the nurseries for poor and destitute children, the county lunatic asylum, the "Potter's field," the penitentiary, and city prison. Institutions excepted from their control are the house of refuge, the juvenile delinquent asylum, the house of detention of witnesses, and the "county or sheriff's jail." While it is made lawful for prisoners to be detained in the workhouse "for the purpose of employment therein," the "recipients of the public charities" must not be employed in association with felons. "Confinement, by being fed on bread and water only, for such length of time as may be considered necessary," is the penalty prescribed for refusing "to perform the work allotted." All grounds under the department's jurisdiction which are capable of cultivation "shall be used for agricultural purposes, and improved in such manner as will yield the greatest revenue to the department." As far as possible the criminals are to be classified "so that the novice in crime may not be contaminated by the evil example of, or by association and contact with the more hardened and confirmed." The power "to indenture and bind out, as apprentices during their minority, any minor children who may be under their care" is stated in the act. The county board of supervisors is expected "to visit and inspect the department," and any commissioner "against whom charges of misconduct in office may be established" is removable by the governor.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 510. The unique plan of having the comptroller appoint these commissioners is attributable to the fact that it was a republican legislature that passed this act, and that Comptroller Haws was a Republican while Mayor Wood was a Democrat.

" Over the veto of the governor the legislature grants franchises in perpetuity to five different groups of men to operate railways in several streets of the city.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chaps. 511, 512, 513, 514, 515. See Ap 20.

" The legislature authorises the sale and conveyance to the city by the state of the soil reclaimed and filled in along the Hudson and East Rivers, which lies outside of and adjacent to the grants made to the city under the Montgomerie Charter.—Laws of N. Y. (1860), chap. 606.

20 Meeting in special session, both boards of the common council concur in a resolution which expresses their displeasure at the action of the legislature in granting street railway franchises in New York City (see Ap 17). They instruct the corporation counsel "to take all proper necessary legal measures" to prevent the laying of rails or the running of cars in any "street, public place or highway in the said city of New York, without the consent of the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the said city, being first had and obtained."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII: 238–42; N. Y. Herald, Ap 21, 1860.

23 The mayor approves a joint resolution providing that the governor's room in the city hall be painted, carpeted, and upholstered,

1860 under the direction of the street commissioner, "in a manner be-
Apr. fitting the necessity of the occasion."—Proc., App'd by Mayor,
23 XXVIII: 108.

25 The common council authorises the street com'r to have "Carson's striking apparatus" attached to the bell in the Harlem fire district, at a cost not exceeding $400.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVIII: 121. This was the big fire-bell in Mt. Morris Square.—See F 3, 1857. See S 28, 1864.

May "The Old Clinton Country Market—the old rotten building
5 in the centre of the triangle of Clinton Market, at the foot of Canal Street, for many years a landmark [see O 22, 1833]—has become too dilapidated to answer the purposes of the marketmen, and yesterday the work of tearing down was begun. The space left is to be appropriated as a stand for the wagons of country marketmen."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 5, 1860. For ten years prior to this the old country market had been used by the Hudson River R. R. Co.—De Voe, Market Book, 548, 549; L. M. R. K., III: 958.

7 A statue of Justice has recently been re-erected on the city hall. "The figured Goddess, in robes of shining white, looks benignantly [sic!] on the great town, and, with tempting exhibition of impartial scales, invites those who seek her aid to the temple on which she stands. . . . The general course and spirit of the City legislators would find a vastly truer type in a statue of Mercury, the god of thieves, than in this image of benign Justice, the punisher of thieves and robbers."—N. Y. Times, My 7, 1860. The former statue fell during the fire of 1858 (q. v., Ag 18). This new statue was of wood; it was taken down in 1887 (q. v., Jl 15).—Ibid., Jl 16, 1887.

10 Four hundred women meet at Cooper Institute, "clamoring for their rights." Miss Wright, Miss Anthony, Wendell Phillips, etc. address the meeting.—N. Y. Times, My 11, 1860; Leslie's Weekly, IX: 409.

18 New York receives the news that Abraham Lincoln has been nominated for the presidency by the national Republican convention at Chicago, but there is no enthusiasm, for most Republicans here are surprised and disappointed that Sen. Wm. H. Seward was not chosen. The various Republican clubs, however, resolve to support the ticket.—N. Y. Times, My 19, 1860.

22 The Democrats hold a great demonstration at Cooper Institute in favour of Stephen A. Douglas for the presidency.—N. Y. Times, My 23, 1860. See Jl 2.

26 The one-cent ferry to Williamsburg has been a great success; average number of passengers ten thousand per diem.—Leslie's Weekly, IX: 409.

June The College of Physicians and Surgeons is nominally allied with — Columbia College. Though each institution retains its own autonomy and is in all essential respects independent of the other, the diplomas of the medical graduates are to be signed by both presidents. The College of Physicians and Surgeons kept its own title, but it was hereafter known officially as the "Medical Department of Columbia College."—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 319. In 1891 (q. v., Mr 24) the two institutions were actually joined.

2 Ex-Pres. and Mrs. Franklin Pierce paid a visit to Fernando Wood at the Astor House the other day.—Leslie's Weekly, X: 7.

6 Palermo surrenders to Garibaldi.—Stillman, Union of Italy, 314–15. See S 7.

7 The Republicans of the city hold a meeting at Cooper Institute to ratify the nomination of Lincoln and Hamlin for president and vice-president. Speeches are made by Horace Greeley and others.—N. Y. Times, Je 8, 1860. Other meetings were held on July 11, July 16, and Sept. 13.—Ibid., Jl 12, 17, and S 14, 1860.

8 Prof. T. S. C. Lowe (see N 1, 1859) informs the public that he intends to make his "aerial trip to Europe" during the summer.—N. Y. Times, Je 9, 1860. Lowe's transatlantic flight never took place.

9 Three of the four ex-presidents were in New York last week, and all in good health and spirits—Van Buren, Millard Fillmore, and Franklin Pierce.—Leslie's Weekly, X: 35.

12 "The widening of State-street to some sixteen feet, by removing the sidewalk on the Battery side, has added greatly to the appearance and convenience of the street, and with Whitehall-street also widened, and nearly completed, there will be no more crushing, crowding and delay among the omnibuses which gather at those points. It is now proposed to remove the sidewalk around the Bowling-green which is perfectly useless for pedestrians, and if this June is accomplished a great and much-needed improvement in that 12 part of the City will have been effected."—N. Y. Times, Je 12, 1860. See also Leslie's Weekly, X: 71.

The New York World is first issued, as a one cent religious daily. 14
—See issue in N. Y. P. L.; Annals of N. Am., 617. After varied fortunes, it was purchased by Joseph Pulitzer, in 1883, and became one of the leading Democratic papers.—King's Handbook (1893), 620–22.

The first Japanese Embassy to any foreign nation arrives in 16
New York from Philadelphia. The members are formally received by a committee of the common council and conducted in procession to the Metropolitan Hotel.—N. Y. Times, Je 18, 1860. Mayor Wood and Gov. Morgan held an official reception on June 18, and on the following days there was a continuous round of festivities including a ball at the Metropolitan Hotel.—Ibid., Je 19–29, 1860. The embassy left on the "Niagara" for Japan, on June 29.—Ibid., Je 30, 1860. See also Booth, Hist. of City of N. Y., and Harper's Weekly, IV: 408–9, 410.

"The Trustees of the Rutgers Female Institute [see Ag 29, 1838] 18 have purchased, at a cost of $60,000, the buildings on Fifth-avenue between Forty-first and Forty-second streets. They design making extensive additions in the rear of the buildings fronting on the avenue, for the purposes of a chapel, laboratory, school-rooms, painting-gallery, and observatory."—N. Y. Times, Je 18, 1860. The Institute removed from Madison St. to this location at 487–491 Fifth Ave. during this year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 323. See also L. M. R. K., III: 941, and Pl. 148-b, Vol. III.

"In a day or two, the Croton Department will commence the 31 work of laying down the new four feet cast-iron main along Fourth-avenue, to connect the new reservoir now building in the Central Park [see Ap 17, 1858] and the distributing reservoir in Forty-second-street."—N. Y. Times, Jl 31, 1860. See Ag 30.

About 100 British residents of New York meet at the Astor Aug.
House to make arrangements for the reception of the Prince of 6
Wales.—Leslie's Weekly, X: 201; N. Y. Times, Ag 7, 1860. On Aug. 14, a meeting of merchants, bankers, and other well-known citizens was held for the same purpose.—Ibid., Ag 15, 1860. The prince arrived on Oct. 11 (q. v.).

The new Tompkins Market (see S 17, 1857) is opened for busi- 8
ness on the site of the old one, corner of Third Ave. and 6th St.—N. Y. Times, Ag 9, 1860. See also De Voe, Market Book, 556–57. See, further, O 1. The market was demolished in 1911, and the Abram Hewitt Memorial Annex to Cooper Union erected on the site.—L. M. R. K., III: 959–60.

More than 6,000 strangers registered their names last Saturday 11 at the New York hotels. The presence of the "Great Eastern" is said to be the principal cause.—Leslie's Weekly, X: 177.

An editorial reads: "In a few days the Great Eastern [see Je 25] " will take her departure for Great Britain. To say that she has been 1860 Aug. 11 a success here would not be true. She has certainly attracted a great deal of attention—more than any other ship that ever anchored in the bay of New York. She has been visited by several hundred thousand people, who have paid their money to see her. Her enormous size, her wonderful structure, her colossal capacity, her huge engines, her marvelous internal arrangements, have each and all elicited the admiration, not only of the crowd, but of those who are best fitted to judge of such matters. At the same time it would not be correct to say that she has been a success, or that we part with her with much regret." The editor complains that the managers of the ship were grossly inefficient, that the ship was very dirty, that the officers and crew were discourteous and rude, and that Americans who made helpful suggestions were not only ignored but insulted.—Harper's Weekly, IV: 498. See also N. Y. Times, Ag 2 and 3, 1860. The ship left on Aug. 16 (q. v.).

16 The "Great Eastern" leaves New York on the homeward voyage, taking 100 first-class passengers with her. The public shows no interest in her departure.—Harper's Weekly, IV: 535. Cf. N. Y. Times, Ag 17, 1860.

23 The city hall clock is being fitted with illuminated dial plates so that it may be seen at night.—N. Y. Times, Ag 24, 1860.

25 "The merchants have met and appointed a large Committee, consisting of the most respectable persons in the city, to entertain the Prince [of Wales]. It is understood that they will offer him a dinner in the Academy of Music. Mayor Wood has sent his Secretary to Quebec with some sort of an invitation to the Prince."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 535.

" The work of demolishing the structures on the line of Chambers St., continued from Chatham St. to James's Slip, is rapidly progressing. The marble building previously occupied by the Chatham Bank will soon be taken down. Quite an opening is already seen between Chatham and Pearl Sts. The extension of Chambers St. to the East River, making a direct broad communication from river to river, is one of the most important lately undertaken by the city.—Leslie's Weekly, X: 221.

30 The old Bowery Theatre, having undergone complete renovation, is reopened under the management of George Wood.—N. Y. Times, Ag 31, 1860; L. M. R. K., III: 982. See N 23, 1866.

" "The work upon the gate-houses for the new reservoir in the Central Park [see Jl 31] is progressing with as much rapidity as is consistent with safety. The foundations for the southern gates are already laid, and are pronounced master-pieces of masonry. Those on the northern end of the reservoir are not so far advanced, but will be in nowise inferior to the others."—N. Y. Times, Ag 30, 1860. See Jl 26, 1862.

Sept. 2 The Atlantic Garden, the well-known house of entertainment at Nos. 9–11 Broadway, has just been demolished, and a freight station for the N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R. Co. is to be erected on the site. The property was bought by the railroad company for $91,000.—N. Y. Atlas, S 2, 1860; Hist. Mag., 1st ser., IV: 303–5. See also *N. Y. City During the Am. 12 The Douglas Democrats hold a "Grand Political Carnival and Ox-roast" in Jones' Woods. Between 20,000 and 30,000 people are present.—N. Y. Times, S 13, 1860.

" The new Jewish synagogue erected by the congregation Shearith Israel in West 19th St. (see Jl 11, 1859) is consecrated.—N. Y. Times, S 13, 1860; Leslie's Weekly, X: 296. See also L. M. R. K., III: 929. The property was sold in 1894 (q. v.).

17 A ferry is established, and a lease is directed to be sold, from 130th St., North River, to a place on the Jersey shore nearly opposite.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVIII: 332. This was the Fort Lee Ferry.—L. M. R. K., III: 942.

21 The Prince of Wales (later Edward VII) arrives at Detroit, Mich., from Canada. After visiting Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Harrisburgh, Washington, Richmond, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, West Point, Albany, and Boston, he embarked for England, on Oct. 20, from Portland, Me.—Englehart, Jour. of Progress of H. R. H. The Prince of Wales Through Brit. N. Am.; and His Visit to the U. S. A., 71–100. For his stay in New York, see O 11–15.

Oct. — The work of improving High Bridge is commenced. The new pipe was put into operation in Dec., 1861, and the masonry was completed in 1863.—Bronze tablet, east end of bridge. "High Bridge was the sole means of conveying Croton water from the main land to Manhattan Island up to July 15, 1890, when water was first supplied through a siphon under the Harlem river near Washington Bridge."—22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 533.

Oct. 1 The 7th regiment armory on the second and third floors of the new Tompkins Market (see Ag 8) is occupied for the first time and thrown open for public inspection.—N. Y. Times, O 2, 1860. See also ibid., Ja 10, 1861, and L. M. R. K., III: 960. On Dec. 28, the armory was inspected by the common council and the heads of departments. It cost nearly $250,000.—Leslie's Weekly, XI: 116.

" The Woman's Library is formally opened by a public meeting in Dr. Chapin's Church, Broadway. Many prominent men make addresses. The library is on the second floor of the University building and looks out on the Washington Parade Ground.—N. Y. Times, Ag 25 and O 2, 1860; Leslie's Weekly, X: 325.

2 The corner-stone of the P. E. Orphan Asylum is laid in 59th St., between Fourth and Lexington Aves.—N. Y. Times, O 3, 1860.

3 About 12,000 "Wide-Awakes" parade up Broadway with torches for Lincoln and Hamlin. "Standing at midnight in Broadway, near the corner of Tenth Street, and looking up toward Union Place, you saw the entire street sheeted with flickering light, and Union Place bright with showers of fireworks; while down town, as far as the New York Hotel, and beyond, there was the same blazing torrent of life and enthusiasm, from which, in profuse and incessant explosion, burst the Roman candles of every celestial hue."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 649, 650. See also N. Y. Times, O 1, 3, and 4, 1860.

8 On this and the following days, the theatrical and miscellaneous library of Wm. E. Burton, the comedian, was sold by J. Sabin & Co., at their auction-room, on the south side of 4th St., corner of Lafayette Place, and extending nearly to Broadway.—See catalogue in N. Y. P. L.

11 The Prince of Wales (afterward King Edward VII) arrives in New York and is received "by a grand military and popular display."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 663; N. Y. Times, O 11 and 12, 1860. See also letter in ibid., N 23, 1919. See, further, O 12.

12 The Prince of Wales and his suite visit N. Y. University, the Woman's Library, the Astor Library, Cooper Institute, and the Free Academy. They then drove to Central Park where the prince assisted in transplanting an English oak and an American elm. He then lunched at the house of Mayor Wood, "on the Bloomingdale Road," and in the afternoon visited the Deaf and Dumb Institution at Fort Washington. From there he drove to the foot of 215th St., where he embarked on board the "Trumpeter" and sailed through Harlem River, under High Bridge, and past the institutions to the East River, down which he sailed in the "Harriet Lane." At 6:30 p. m. the royal party landed at the foot of 22d St., North River and returned to the Fifth Avenue Hotel. In the evening, "the greatest ball ever given in the city of New York" was held in his honour at the Academy of Music.—Harper's Weekly, IV: 663, which contains an engraving showing the ball; N. Y. Times, O 13, 1860. See also Eve. Sun, N 12, 1919. "The Prince of Wales elm is still standing . . . on the east side of the middle drive in Central Park, between Sixty-eighth and Sixty-ninth streets."—Ibid., N 20, 1919.

13 The firemen of New York hold a torchlight parade in honour of the Prince of Wales. An engraving shows the parade passing the Fifth Avenue Hotel.—Harper's Weekly, IV: 659 660; N. Y. Times, O 15, 1860. See O 14.

14 The Prince of Wales attends services at Trinity Church and is presented with two prayer-books. The larger one, which is bound in red morocco and fastened with a gold clasp finely worked with the prince's plume and the motto "Ich Dien," bears this inscription: "To His Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, from the Corporation of Trinity Church, New York, in memory of the munificence of the Crown of England." The other bound in brown morocco and clasped by two ornamental silver clasps, has the inscription: "To His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales, from Francis Vinton, D. D., Fred. Ogilby, D. D., The Clergymen in charge of Trinity Church, New York, as a Memorial of the Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity, October 14, 1860."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 678; N. Y. Times, O 15, 1860.

15 The Prince of Wales leaves New York and sails up the Hudson to West Point.—N. Y. Times, O 16, 1860. It was estimated that $750,000 were spent in the city for demonstrations in his honour.—

1860 N. Y. Herald, Ja 1, 1861. Regarding his visit to this country, see Oct. also Cordova, A Humerous Description of the Tour of the Prince of 20 The new theatre for Mr. James W. Wallack, at the corner of Broadway and 13th St., has been begun. It will cost about $30,000. —Leslie's Weekly, X: 341. It was opened on Sept. 25, 1861 (q.v.).

29 The Middle Dutch Church (used as a post-office since 1845, q.v.) and the ground on which it stands are sold to the U. S. The deed was not recorded until Jan. 29, 1866.—40th Ann. Rep., Mutual Life Ins. Co. (1883). The following facts are interesting in regard to the purchase by the federal government: "The lease of the Post-office expired in 1860, and in that year the Government began to seek a new site, as this one was valued at $250,000, and the Post-office Department was limited to $200,000 for this purpose. Many merchants, banks, and insurance companies were unwilling to have the Post-office removed, and they therefore subscribed $50,000 to make up the amount required. The Government then bought the property. . . . After the premises became the property of the Government, a brick addition was built forming a sort of shell around the old church, most of which it conceals from view."—Eve. Post, O 17, 1882; descrip. of Pl. 130-a, III: 695–96. The church continued to be used as a post-office until 1875 (q.v., Ag 28).

" The city conveys to the Hebrew Benevolent Society (see 1860) 12 lots on the south-west corner of 77th St. and Third Ave. On Oct. 17, 1864, a further grant of 5 lots adjoining was made to this society, to be used as an orphan asylum.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763; L. M. R. K., III: 954. The orphan asylum was dedicated on Nov. 5, 1863 (q.v.).

Nov. Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin, Republicans are 6 elected president and vice-president. The Democrats were divided, one section nominating Stephen A. Douglas and Herschel V. Johnson, and the other section John C. Breckinridge and Joseph Lane.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 106–20; N. Y. Times, N 7 et seq., 1860. See N 9.

9 Horace Greeley advocates a peaceable disunion of the United States if the South wishes to secede. A leading article in the Tribune says: "If the cotton States shall decide that they can do better out of the Union than in it, we insist on letting them go in peace. The right to secede may be a revolutionary one, but it exists nevertheless. . . . Whenever a considerable section of our Union shall deliberately resolve to go out, we shall resist all coercive measures designed to keep it in. We hope never to live in a republic, whereof one section is pinned to the residue by bayonets."—N. Y. Tribune, N 9, 1860. See also ibid., N 16, 19, and 30, 1860.

"This view had its greatest popularity in November and in the first part of December, 1860; it received the countenance of other Republican newspapers; it prevailed with Henry Ward Beecher, whose consummate oratory swayed many audiences; it won, also, a certain adherence from the Garrison abolitionists, who saw in the accomplishment of it the realization of their dream of many years." This sentiment of peaceable disunion speedily declined in public estimation, however, after the middle of December, and in January, 1861, Greeley recanted.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., III: 140–42, and authorities there cited.

" Southern medical students attending lectures in New York hold a meeting at the Democratic headquarters on Broadway opposite Astor Place to take action in consequence of Lincoln's election. They decide to return home "as soon as any State secedes."—N. Y. Times, N 10, 1860.

10 "Within the past fortnight a panic has prevailed in Wall Street, and stocks of all descriptions have declined from 10 to 15 per cent."—Harper's Weekly, IV: 706.

19 Thos. H. Chambers, L. M. Whitney, E. D. Bassford, and 175 other citizens having petitioned that the city purchase the statue of Washington, belonging to Dr. S. A. Main, and now in front of the City Hall, and for placing the same in the triangular plot of ground opposite Tompkins Market," the board of aldermen, on the recommendation of the committee of arts and sciences, resolves to purchase the statue for $2,000 and to place it "in such locality as may be hereafter designated by the proper authorities."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXX: 498–99, 543–44.

On Nov. 24, Horace Greeley thus commented on this action: ". . . it was a 'big thing,' the aldermen did when they made a liberal appropriation for the purchase of that remarkable work of art, the red sandstone 'What is It?' that has been standing out in the cold in front of the City Hall for the past two years. How it ever Nov.
came there, and where it came from, and what it was intended to 19
represent, are points upon which the learned savants of the Ethnological Society have not ventured to offer any explanation. With all the mystery, but none of the gravity of the Sphynx, the hideous object has been staring at us with its dismal eyes, a daily deformity to the Park, and a puzzle to everybody. . . . While Paris, which was very well supplied with objects of the kind, has added to her public statues nearly a hundred marble effigies of illustrious Frenchmen during the past year, New-York has but one statue, the bronze Washington in Union Square, and that was the gift of a few public-spirited merchants. Our Aldermen were moved by a noble ambition to do something for the city, and to make use of a familiar expression, they have gone and done it. . . . We have no question that that most abominable object is, in the eyes of our Booles and Bradys, quite equal, as a work of art, to the Farnese Hercules or the Apollo Belvidere; . . . As we shall have nothing to remind us of Boole and his companions after their term of office has expired, but the debts they have saddled us with, it will not be altogether a bad idea to have this statue as a suitable memento of them; and let it be set up in one of our dirtiest thoroughfares, which might be called the Boole-vard, as an awful example to our posterity."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 24, 1860. On Nov. 26, Alderman Boole called the attention of the board to this article and offered a resolution that the statue "be, and the same is hereby assigned a location in the counting-room of the Daily Tribune office, pursuant to suggestion contained in the issue of the aforesaid newspaper, that the filthiest locality in the city be assigned for that purpose." However, he was given leave to withdraw the resolution.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXX: 570–71. For Greeley's comment on this, see N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 29, 1860. On Dec. 1, Leslie's Weekly said the statue's "removal from the public gaze is cheaply bought at the price of two thousand dollars."—Ibid., XI: 19.

The mayor approves a resolution of the common council 22
authorising payment for "dredging the channel of Harlem river above High Bridge, and removing therefrom obstructions occasioned by the old coffer dams in building the High Bridge." The resolution also authorises an appropriation for further improvements.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXVIII: 466–67; Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXVII: 674–84; N. Y. Tribune, Mr 13, 1860.

In the year ending on this day, New York City handled 70% " of the entire import trade of the United States, which was worth $248,000,000.—Johnson, Hist. of the Domestic and Foreign Trade of the U. S., II: 53. See also Ja 19, 1861.

The assessed valuation of New York City property is $577,230,- "
656; that of the entire United States is $41,088,417,635.—Am. Ann. Cyclopaedia (1861), 525. For details of the city appropriation and expenditures during this year, see Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 222–25.

CHAPTER VII

A.—THE CIVIL WAR
1861–1865

B.—PERIOD OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
1865–1876

CHAPTER VII

A.—THE CIVIL WAR

1861–1865

1861 — A BRIEF summary of the principal events during the Civil War, 1861–1865, and the Period of Political and Social Development, from 1865 to 1876, is contained in Vol. III, chap. VII.

— In this year, by a new constitution granted by Emperor Francis Joseph, Austria became a constitutional, instead of an absolute, monarchy. Hungary, however, refused to recognize the new constitution.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 390–92.

— In this year, the 22d Regiment, N. Y. (Engineer Corps), and the 47th Regiment, N. Y., were organized.—Chas. S. Clark, in Eve. Post, F 26, 1916.

— In this year, the Board of New York Cotton Brokers was organized by James F. Wenman, who became its president. In 1870 (q.v.), the present Cotton Exchange was formed.—N. Y. Times, My 31, 1919.

— At this time, New York City's defences consisted of the following works: at the Narrows, Forts Hamilton, Lafayette, Richmond, and Tompkins, together with batteries Hudson and Morton, which mounted 457 heavy guns requiring 2,170 men; in the upper bay on Governor's Island, Fort Columbus, Castle Williams, and the South Battery, with 200 guns and 800 men; on Bedloe's Island, Fort Wood, and on Ellis Island, Fort Gibson, with 100 guns and 430 men; at Throgg's Neck in the Sound, Fort Schuyler, with 318 guns and 1,250 men. At Sandy Hook, new works for 300 guns and 1,250 men were being built. There was also under construction at Hoboken an immense floating battery.—Appleton's Am. Cyclop. (1861), XII: 271. See also views and description in Harper's Weekly, IV: 776–77, 778.

— "Printing-House Square is the open space facing the eastern side of the Park, opposite the City Hall. Upon this Square directly front the offices of the New York Tribune, the New York Times—on the site of the old Brick Church—the Sunday Times, etc. The great American Tract House Printing Establishment is also on one of the corners of the square, while within sight are the offices of the Herald, the Sun, the New York Express, the Daily News, the New York Mercury, the New York Ledger, and numerous others. . . .

"On Broadway, just above the Park, is Stewart's Marble Palace. . . . In all its departments, it employs 350 clerks, and annually sells dry-goods to the amount of several millions. Bowen, McNamie & Co.'s marble store, also devoted to dry-goods, is on the corner of Pearl-street and Broadway, and is a most costly and elegant edifice. This firm has made itself widely known by their immortal reply to a threat of a withdrawal of trade for their political opinions—'Our goods are for sale, not our principles'. . . .

"The Fifth Avenue Hotel covers an acre of ground. It is faced with white marble, stretches 200 feet on Fifth Avenue and Broadway, 215 on Twenty-third street, and 198 on Twenty-fourth-street. Exclusive of basement, it is six stories high, and in hight [sic] 110 feet. . . . One novel feature of this hotel is a vertical railway [elevator] moved by steam power, which ascends from the lowest to the highest story, and by which persons can be carried from floor to floor."—Barber and Howe, Our Whole Country: or the Past and Present of the U. S. (Cincinnati, 1861), I: 395–99, 401. See also The U. S. and Canada as seen by Two Brothers in 1858 and 1861 (London, 1862), 15–24.

— The school of the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church, the oldest school in the U. S., erects a three-storey building on the south side of 29th St. near Seventh Ave.—Dunshee, Hist. of School of the Coll. Ref. Dutch Ch. in City of N. Y., 88; Van Rensselaer, Hist. of City of N. Y., I: 120. The Collegiate School is now at 241 W. 77th St.

In this year, Delmonico leased the Moses H. Grinnell mansion at the north-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 14th St., and established there another restaurant, which was opened on April 9, 1862 (q.v.). He also retained his place at Broadway and Chambers St. (see 1855) and the one at William and Beaver Sts.—L. M. R. K., III: 978. See also the Dripps Map of 1867. In 1876 (q.v.), he moved from 14th St. to 26th St. 1861 —

In this year, the German Reformed Church erected a building at 149–153 Norfolk St. and moved there from Forsyth St. (see 1822).—Corwin's Manual, 1003; L. M. R. K., III: 935. —

In Valentine's Manual for 1861 are the following maps and views: map of city and county of N. Y., 1861; Central Park (5 views, including four views of park bridges, and one of the skating pond), 188, 204, 214, 228, 236; "Century House," on Harlem River, near Spuyten Duyvel Creek, 240; Second Ave., looking north from 42d St., 288; old houses at junction of Marion and Elm Sts., 300; Fourth Ave., bet. 10th and 11th Sts., 332; Tompkin's Market, Cooper Institute, and Bible House, 354; residence of Isaac Dyckman, Kingsbridge, 388; old cottages at junction of Canal and Division Sts., 420; old house, 178 William St., and old cottage, 129 Division St., 516; Gov. Stuyvesant's pear tree (vide infra), 532; old double house on Pitt St., bet. Broome and Delancey Sts., 542; old houses (built in 1764), cor. Broad and Water Sts., 580; s. e. and s. w. corners of Greenwich and Franklin Sts., 628; the Havemeyer mansion, bet. Eighth and Ninth Aves., 58th and 59th Sts., 660; old houses in Division St., bet. Eldridge and Orchard Sts., 672; Harlem bridge, 684; Broadway, with Trinity Church and City Hotel, 696.

In this year, the old pear-tree which stood at the n. e. cor. of Third Ave. and 13th St., and which, tradition says, was planted by Gov. Stuyvesant in 1647, bore fruit.—Ibid. (1862), 689. See also map of "The Bouwery" in 1861 in ibid. (1862), opp. p. 686.

— In this year, Augustus St. Gaudeus, at the age of 13, entered the night classes in drawing at Cooper Institute. For the development of his career, see Fielding's Dict. of Am. Painters, Sculptors and Engravers [1926], 314.

— In this year, a view of New York, painted and etched by George L. Brown and finished by A. H. Ritchie, was published by George Ward Nicholas. A signed artist's proof on India paper of the first state of this print was sold with the Pyne collection.—Pyne sales catalogue, item 104.

Jan. 2 Frederick Wm. IV of Prussia dies and is succeeded by his brother Wm. I.—Lewis, Hist. of Germany, 683–84.

4 New York and other northern states protest against secession; a general fast is proclaimed and observed.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 5, 1861.

7 Mayor Wood, in his annual message to the common council, indicates how far New York is from being the "free city of itself," ordained by the Montgomerie Charter of 1731. The state has usurped control, among other things, of the police department, the almshouse, Central Park, schools, piers and wharves, even of our records. Last year the sum of $2,108,625 was exacted from us as a tax, "very unfairly apportioned upon this city." He declares that "the political connection between the people of the city and the State has been used by the latter to our injury. The Legislature, in which the present party majority has the power, has become the instrument by which we are plundered to enrich their speculators, lobby agents, and abolition politicians. Laws are passed through their malign influence, by which, under the form of legal enactments, our burdens have been increased, our substance eaten out, and our municipal liberty destroyed." With a "dissolution of the Federal Union" apparently "inevitable," the mayor declares, "it behooves every distinct community, as well as every individual, to take care of themselves. . . . Why may not New York disrupt the bonds which bind her to a corrupt and venal master—to a people and a party that have plundered her revenues, attempted to ruin her commerce, taken away the power of self-government, and destroyed the Confederacy of which she was the proud Empire City?"—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXI: 10–26. Says the Herald: "This document . . . is one of the most remarkable that has emanated from Mayor Wood, who has a Napoleonic love of sensations. . . . The message is devoted entirely to an elaborate attack upon the powers at Albany, and its theory is that, as the Federal Union is about to be broken into pieces like so much fragile crockery, it is well to be on hand to pick up the pieces; that the city of New York is rather a valuable fragment, and that we should look out and keep it for ourselves, even if we have to break the State government into bits."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 8, 1861. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 715.

9 The first shot of the rebellion is fired, in Charleston harbour against the "Star of the West," which was bringing reinforcements from New York to Fort Sumter.—N. Y. Times, Ja 10, 1861; Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., III: 245–51.

10 The College of St. Francis Xavier (see N 25, 1850) is chartered by the regents.—The College of St. Francis Xavier. A Memorial and Retrospect, 1847–1897, 208–10. See, further, O 15.

12 A memorial, signed largely by the merchants, manufacturers, and capitalists of New York, is sent to congress in favour of compromise measures with the southern insurgents. On Jan. 18, a memorial of similar import was adopted at a large meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce and sent to Washington with 40,000 signatures.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 715–16.

19 "The exports of produce, goods, and merchandise from the port of New York during the year 1860 were valued at the Custom-house at the sum of $103,492,280, about thirty per cent. more than the heaviest previous export on record. . . .

"Recent political developments have directed attention to the commerce of this port, and alarm has been created by threats of raising up commercial rivals to New York. It does not appear that this alarm rests on a substantial basis. Before the Revolution, Charleston imported more foreign goods than any Northern city. After the Revolution, and previous to 1800, Philadelphia was the principal emporium of foreign goods on this sea-board. New York has now superseded both. It has done so without the least favors from Government, but simply by the force of geographical influence and the energy of its people. . . . The simple fact is that a variety of concurrent circumstances—an excellent harbor, a central position, an energetic commercial community, an unequaled system of internal communications, a liberal commercial code, and a uniformly healthy climate—have combined to render this city the metropolis of commercial America. Our taxes are heavier than those of any other city on the continent; our Municipal Government indisputably worse than any. . . . Yet we thrive notwithstanding, and two-thirds of the business of the country are done here."—Harper's Weekly, V: 34. Jan. 19

21 The regular meeting of the aldermen is adjourned for lack of a quorum, only four members attending. At the same time a cock fight between Troy and New York birds, one side said to be backed by "a member of the city government," is interfered with by the police, although the pit has every seat occupied at $3 per head. "Was this match the cause of an adjournment of the Board of Aldermen?" inquires the Herald.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXI: 87; N. Y. Herald, Ja 22, 1861.

22 Muskets intended for the Secessionists in Alabama are seized in New York by the city police and taken to the armory at 35th St. and Seventh Ave.—N. Y. Times, Ja 23, 1861. Other seizures were made on the following days.—Ibid., Ja 24–26, 1861. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 716–17.

26 "Mrs. Lincoln, wife of the President-elect, is now in this city, and, it is said, will remain here for a few days, in order to make some needful purchases for the White House."—Harper's Weekly, V: 55. Lincoln arrived on Feb. 19 (q. v.).

28 A large Union meeting is held at Cooper Institute, and resolutions are adopted declaring that the Union should be preserved, that there is no cause for secession, etc. James T. Brady, De Peyster Ogden, Gen. Walbridge, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Times, Ja 29, 1861.

Feb. 4 At a convention beginning on this day, the Southern Confederacy was formed, and Jefferson Davis and Alexander H. Stephens were elected president and vice-president respectively.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., III: 291–95; Macdonald, Select Docs. Illus. of the Hist. of U. S., 1776–1861, 446–55.

12 Mayor Wood approves the resolution of the common council accepting the bid of Andrew J. Hackley for cleaning the streets for five years for $279,000 per annum.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIX: 12. The mayor had recommended the previous year that the streets be cleaned by contract rather than by day's work; after much discussion bids for such work had been sought. Inasmuch as there were 22 lower bidders than Mr. Hackley and as both chambers of the common council concurred the same day in awarding the contract—both actions being contrary to charter,—opposition to the award and charges of bribery were heard; further indignation was aroused when the common council gave permission to Hackley to use the city dumping ground "as a temporary place of deposit for street dirt." The corporation council ruled that the contract award was valid under a statute (Laws of N. Y., 1860, chap. 509) which allowed the corporation to raise money to clean streets.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXX: 850–60; LXXXI: 329–30, 444, 481–83, 502, 524–25; N. Y. Tribune, F 13, 1861. For further developments relating to this contract, see My 28.

16 "It is understood that the New York bankers have met and come to an understanding that they will not take another dollar of the forthcoming United States loans, unless a compromise is effected which shall be satisfactory to the border Slave States."—Harper's Weekly, V: 103.

18 Representatives from all Italy (except Venice and Rome) meet in the first Italian parliament, at Turin.—Andrews, Hist. of Development of Modern Europe, II: 143–44. See Mr 17.

19 Pres.-elect Lincoln arrives at New York on his way to Washington and is enthusiastically greeted by a great crowd of spectators. The streets are decorated with flags and welcoming banners. After receiving visitors at the Astor House, he made a brief address from the balcony to about 5,000 people.—Harper's Weekly, V: 129, 130; N. Y. Times, F 20, 1861. See F 20.

20 Abraham Lincoln is officially welcomed to New York at the city hall by Mayor Wood. In making reply to the mayor's words of welcome, Mr. Lincoln takes occasion to say that he is the more 1861 Feb. 20 appreciative of his reception because it "is done by a people who do not by a majority agree with me in political sentiments."—N. Y. Herald, F 21, 1861.

For two hours Lincoln shook hands with an unending line of people. In the evening he and Mrs. Lincoln went to the Academy of Music to hear Verdi's new opera, "Un Ballo in Maschera." After that he was serenaded at the Astor House.—N. Y. Times, F 21, 1861.

" Hannibal Hamlin, vice-president-elect, arrives in New York and is received by delegations from the various Republican clubs. In the evening he was serenaded at the Astor House and made a brief address.—N. Y. Times, F 21, 1861.

" The "Senate Committee on Cities and Villages" reports favourably and unanimously bills for the repeal of acts authorising the construction of "The Tenth-avenue Railroad, The South and West Railroad (known as the 'Belt'), The Seventh-avenue and Broadway Railroad, The Fourteenth-street Railroad, The Avenue D and East Broadway Railroad, and The Ninth-avenue Railroad (confirming and extending a grant of the Common Council)." All these measures were passed last year over the governor's veto with the exception of the Ninth Avenue which the governor approved.—N. Y. Tribune, F 21, 1861.

21 Abraham Lincoln leaves New York City.—N. Y. Times, F 22, 1861; Harper's Weekly, V: 135.

27 The Tribune remarks: "The plunder-mongers of the City Hall . . . in order to evade that requirement of the Charter which provides that contracts shall be given to the lowest responsible bidder, . . . lobbied through the last Legislature a bill rendering that clause inoperative so far as street-cleaning is concerned. The Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, was therefore obliged to dissolve the temporary injunction obtained by Mr. Williams, the lowest bidder, and the contract with Hackley was concluded. By their forecast the men who trade in contracts with the Common Council have been enabled to rob the city of nearly half a million of dollars on this street-cleaning operation alone. We suppose their next move will be to neglect the contract clause in the Charter altogether."—N. Y. Tribune, F 27, 1861.

Mr 4 Abraham Lincoln is inaugurated.—N. Y. Times, Mr 5, 1861.

17 The Italian parliament at Turin (see F 18) confers the title of "King of Italy" upon Victor Emanuel, King of Sardinia.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 205.

20 St. Paul's German Lutheran Church on the corner of 6th Ave. and 15th St. is dedicated.—Leslie's Weekly, XI: 316.

Apr. — Between April and June, 56,100 men (including 40,000 from New York) passed through the city on their way to the front.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 533. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 731.

1 An expedition is fitted out at New York to supply Fort Sumter peaceably or by force.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 530. See Ap 6.

2 The consent of the state is given to the purchase, by the U. S., of any lands in New York City, not exceeding in area 50,000 square feet, for a site for a post-office (see D 29, 1857).—Laws of N. Y. (1861), chap. 118. See Ap 17.

6 The "Atlantic" sails from New York with troops and military stores. The "Baltic," similarly supplied, followed her on April 8. Engravings show the ships being loaded.—Harper's Weekly, V: 246, 252.

7 The U. S. enters into a treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave-trade. Ratifications were exchanged on May 20, and the treaty was proclaimed on June 7.—U. S. Treaties, Conventions, and International Acts (Washington, 1910), I: 674–87.

10 The legislature authorises the supervisors of the county of New York to acquire lands in the city for the erection of a county court-house.—Laws of N. Y. (1861), chap. 161. An undated map of the ground at Chambers St. is filed as map No. 196 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office. The corner-stone of the building was laid on Dec. 26 (q. v.).

12 An attack on Fort Sumter begins, and Civil War is now inevitable. The news causes great excitement in New York. "The bulletin boards were surrounded; the streets near them were blockaded, and the fast-gathering multitude were only satisfied when the self-appointed reader had read himself hoarse in the frequent repetition of the brief announcement of the facts. . . . The feeling of rejoicing was everywhere to be met, that Major Anderson had not lowered his flag, and that President Lincoln had determined to sustain, even at so fearful a cost, the honor of the country. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Ap 13, 1861.

To provide "against mutilation of the records in the city of New York," the clerk of the city and county and the register of the county are required by act of legislature to "assign one or more suitable persons in their respective offices to have custody of the records . . ., by whom or in whose presence all examinations of such records shall be made."—Laws of N. Y. (1861), chap. 172. Apr. 12

The legislature passes an act changing the chamberlain's term from two to four years.—Laws of N. Y., (1861), chap. 186. "

Fort Sumter in S. Carolina is surrendered by its commander, Major Anderson, to the Confederates who have stormed it.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 14, 1861. For the reaction on mayor and common council, see Ap 22. 13

When news of the bombardment of Fort Sumter reached the New York Stock Exchange, its members joined in hearty cheers for Maj. Anderson.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 16, 1861. "

News of the fall of Fort Sumter is announced in New York. The surrender occurred on Saturday, the 13th, at 12:55 p. m., and the news reached New York on Sunday evening, but did not appear in the papers until Monday morning.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 15, 1861. Lossing says: "It is worthy of record that a New York policeman, Peter Hart, serving under Major Anderson in Fort Sumter, saved the American flag in that first battle of the war."—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 717 (footnote). 15

The New York papers publish Pres. Lincoln's call for 75,000 volunteers for three months' service. The quota of New York State was 13,000 men. Gov. E. D. Morgan immediately informed the legislature of this, and in a few hours an act was passed which conferred large powers upon the governor, authorised the enrollment of 30,000 men for two years instead of for three months, and appropriated $3,000,000 for this purpose.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 15, 1861; Laws of N. Y. (1861), chap. 277; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 752. Marching orders were sent on the 16th to the regiments in New York to proceed to Washington.—Ibid. (1861), 523. "

The New York Daily Tribune publishes a call for a patriotic mass meeting. In response to this call, a meeting of the "solid men of Wall Street" was held at 30 Pine St., where arrangements were made for calling a mass meeting of the citizens. Resolutions urging the legislature, before it should adjourn, to put the militia of the state on a war footing were passed and were telegraphed to Gov. Morgan.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 15–16, 1861. "

The legislature names 24 commissioners "to amend the charter of the city of New York," and fixes May 1 as the date for the members to assemble and organize. The commissioners are to keep "a journal of their proceedings" and submit the amended charter to the voters "at the next charter election." The voters, however, must have a chance to read the document in newspapers "designated by the commissioners" at least 30 days prior to the election.—Laws of N. Y. (1861), chap. 268. See My 1. "

The New York Herald's office was visited on Monday afternoon by a few hundred citizens with the result that its Tuesday issue upheld the government's prosecution of the war, whereas on Monday it had advocated peace.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 17, 1861. 15= 16

The effect upon New York of the attack on Fort Sumter is reflected in the following editorial which appears in The New York Daily Tribune of this date under the heading "The Uprising of the Country:" 17

"Let no one feel that our present troubles are deplorable, in view of the majestic development of Nationality and Patriotism which they have occasioned. But yesterday we were esteemed a sordid, grasping, money-loving people, too greedy of gain to cherish generous and lofty aspirations. To-day vindicates us from that reproach and demonstrates that beneath the scum and slag of forty years of peace, and in spite of the insidious approaches of corruption, the fires of patriotic devotion are still intensely burning. The echoes of the cannon fired at Sumter have barely rolled over the Western hills ere they are drowned in the shouts of indignant freemen, demanding to be led against the traitors who have plotted to divide and destroy the country. Party lines disappear—party cries are hushed or emptied of their meaning—men forget that they were Democrats or Republicans in the newly aroused and intense consciousness that they are Americans." See also Ap 23.

The 6th Massachusetts, Col. E. J. Jones, arrives in New York on its way to Washington. It meets with a most enthusiastic welcome and its passing through the city is a triumphal march.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 531. "

1861 Apr. 17 The New York Stock Exchange appoints a committee "to co-operate with the Committee of Citizens of New York, at a meeting to be held at the Chamber of Commerce this day." The object is to give encouragement to the government by pledging fidelity to the Union.—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 41.

"In 1861 the public stock market in the street was in William Street between Exchange Place and Beaver Street, during the hours when the Board was not in session."—Ibid. The meeting was held on April 19 (q.v.).

18 Gov. Morgan issues a proclamation announcing the president's requisition on New York for a quota of 17 regiments, of 780 men each, to serve for three months in the national defence.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 19, 1861; Stevens, The Union Defence Committee of N. Y. City, 1.

" Major Anderson arrives from Fort Sumter with his command. He is received with great enthusiasm.—N. Y. Times, Ap 19, 1861; Harper's Weekly, V: 263. See My 1.

" The hide and leather manufacturers, whose business houses are mostly in the "Swamp," swing to the breeze in Gold St. between Spruce and Ferry Sts., a large and beautiful flag. Mr. A. T. Stewart does the same on his store. Brooks Brothers also display the American banner from their store at Broadway and Grand St. On April 19 a large flag was flung from out Trinity Steeple while the chimes played, and also one from St. Paul's portico.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 19 and 20, 1861.

" A meeting is held at the Chamber of Commerce (corner of William and Cedar Sts.) and is attended by about 200 citizens representing the most important business firms in the city. The speakers, who included Breckinridge Democrats, Douglas Democrats, Bell men, and Republicans, were unanimous in urging prompt support of the government in the measures it was taking to crush the rebellion. A committee was appointed to aid certain regiments in getting equipment to leave for the front; $21,000 was given on the spot, and a large committee of influential capitalists was appointed to secure an immediate subscription to the $9,000,000 left of the government loan.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 20, 1861.

" New York's favourite regiment, the 7th, leaves for Washington. Although the regiment was not scheduled to start before 3 p. m., at an early hour the streets were thronged with people, and the buildings in Lafayette Place, Broadway, and Cortlandt St. were literally covered with flags and bunting. Through the gay and expectant throng first marched the 8th Massachusetts, which was presented with colours on the way, but this only served to fill in a portion of the interval until the coming of the 7th. The latter finally formed in Lafayette Place about 4 p. m. Before it moved, the crowd was made wild by the news of the attack upon the 6th Massachusetts in Baltimore, and forty-eight rounds of ball-cartridge were served out to the 7th. The procession was headed by a band of Zouaves, who had volunteered for the occasion, then came a strong body of police, and after the police came the regiment itself, with Col. M. Lefferts commanding. The line of march was through 4th St. to Broadway, down that great thoroughfare to Cortlandt St., and across the ferry in boats provided for the purpose. Thousands upon thousands lined the sidewalks, and the entire line of march was a perfect ovation.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 20, 1861; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 531. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 726–27; and views in Harper's Weekly, V: 281, 282, and Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 152. A painting owned by the regiment also represents the scene.

20 By three o'clock more than 100,000 people had gathered around the statue of Washington in Union Square in the largest mass meeting that had ever been held in New York City. John A. Dix, assisted by 87 vice-presidents, presided over the vast assembly. Loyalty to the government was pledged, and a committee was appointed to receive funds to be used in support of the public authorities. The meeting also directed that a committee of 21 (see Ap 22) be formed to assist in war work.—Stevens, The Union Defence Committee, 6–9; N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 22, 1861; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 531. See also view of meeting, in Harper's Weekly, V: 277, 279. "The great war-meeting at Union Square effectually removed the false impression that the greed of commerce had taken possession of the New York community, and that the citizens were willing to secure peace at the sacrifice of principle. It silenced forever the slanders of the misinformed correspondent of the London Times (Dr. Russell), who spoke of his friends as 'all men of position in New York society' who were 'as little anxious for the future or excited by the present as a party of savans chronicling the movements of a magnetic storm'. The patriotism of the citizens was also indicated by the wrath which that meeting excited at the South. The Richmond Dispatch said: 'New York will be remembered with special hatred by the South, for all time.'"—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 718–19. Apr. 20 21 The 6th, 12th, and 71st New York State militia leave for the front. The 6th embarks on the steamer "Columbia," the 12th on the steamer "Baltic," and the 71st on the steamer "R. R. Schuyler." A Massachusetts battalion and some regulars go on board the "Ariel." The fleet leaves the harbour amid a scene of great excitement. The piers, landings, and house-tops of New York, Jersey City, Hoboken, and Brooklyn are crowded. Flags dip, cannon roar, bells ring, whistles shrilly salute, and thousands upon thousands of people send up cheers of parting.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 22, 1861; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 532. 22 It is announced that New York, in addition to being the headquarters of the regular army of the United States, has been designated as the headquarters of the department of the East, and that Gen. John E. Wool, second in command to Gen. Winfield Scott, has been ordered to take command. Gen. Wool soon came to New York and opened his headquarters in the St. Nicholas Hotel.—Am Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 524. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 723–26.

" Mayor Wood sends a special war message to the common council. "Military aggressions," he says, "have been commenced against the Federal authorities . . . which threaten . . . to subvert our institutions, destroy our commerce, and lay waste our homes and firesides. It is a war, apparently, not of self-protection upon the side of the belligerents, but of active hostility against the property, the honor, and the continuance of the Government under which we live. . . . It is our interest, therefore, as it is our duty and our right, to speak out boldly, and to act promptly, at this critical emergency, in the affairs of the country. Representing the corporation of the city, it devolves upon us to make proper provision for the public exigencies, so far as New York is concerned." He recommends the immediate appropriation of $1,000,000.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXII: 67–68. Resolutions are adopted by the aldermen assuring the president of "the unqualified support of the people of this city," recommending appropriations "for the purpose of furnishing to each regiment mustered into service from this city a stand of colors and suitable outfit for active service," and declaring it to be "their unalterable purpose . . . to do all in their power to uphold and defend the integrity of the Union, to vindicate the honor of our flag, and to crush the power of those who are enemies in war, as in peace they were friends." Other resolutions express thanks to Major Anderson "for his gallant defense of Fort Sumter [see Ap 13] against a vastly superior force of men, guns, and fortifications," and provide for the presentation to him of the freedom of the city in a gold box.—Ibid., LXXXII: 56–60; N. Y. Herald, Ap 23, 1861. See Ap 23.

" The "Committee of Twenty-One," formed under the direction of the mass-meeting of April 20 (q.v.), organises, with John A. Dix as president. The mayor, the comptroller, the presidents of the board of aldermen and of the board of councilmen, together with two members of the select committee of the Chamber of Commerce, are added, after which the committee adopts the title, "the Committee of Union Defence of the City of New York." The purpose of the committee was to get troops into the field as quickly as possible to meet the emergency caused by the attack on Fort Sumter. For the time being it became the executive arm of the national government in New York, giving method and efficiency to the people's energies. On April 23, it opened offices at 30 Pine St. It chartered a steamboat to take provisions and ammunition to the garrison at Fortress Monroe, to the army at Annapolis, and to southern posts occupied by Union forces. It sent the first ambulances to the seat of war. By June 29, thirty-six regiments had been sent to the front from New York City. As soon as the national government was ready to undertake the work of recruiting and equipping soldiers, the committee suspended its efforts. Active work ended in the

" In this year, the New York Produce Exchange erected its first building, on the block bounded by Whitehall, Moore, Pearl, and Water Sts., and they occupied it on April 22. 23 Mayor Wood signs an ordinance of the common council appropriating $1,000,000 "in aid of the defence of the National Union." This money is to be paid upon vouchers approved by the Union Defence Committee appointed on April 20.—Stevens, Union Defence Committee, 64–66.

" "The events of the last week have brought forth manifestations of public opinion and public sympathy in this City, which have startled those who had not taken into account the deep currents which flow strong and perpetual far beneath the superficial storms of party and faction which ordinarily meet the eye. As long as New-York saw in the political contests of the day only the constitutional strife of Democrat, American and Republican—as long as all parties maintained their allegiance to the Union and their devotion to law, one party might achieve a victory to-day and another party to-morrow; and the loyalty of the defeated was no more in question than that of the victors. . . .

"But now the question has fairly shaped itself as one of Union against Disunion, of the Constitution against Revolution, of Law against Anarchy, the voice of the Metropolis is heard in no doubtful tones, and all parties of the past melt away into the universal and perpetual American party of Constitutional Freedom and National Unity. . . .

"The universal voice is that the Republic must not be destroyed and that the supremacy of the Constitution must be maintained. It finds expression through the Legislature, through the Press, in Wall-street, in the Church, and through the citizen-soldiers of the Republic. There was not half as much unanimity in Seventy-six, when the first blow was struck for Freedom, as there is now in defending Freedom when the first blow is struck against it."—N. Y. Times, Ap 23, 1861.

" Gen. Chester A. Arthur, of Gov. Morgan's staff, having been appointed assistant-quartermaster-general, takes up his headquarters at the corner of White and Elm Sts. 26 During 1861, New York City contracted two loans for war purposes. On April 26, an ordinance was approved by which $1,000,000 "Union Defence Bonds" were issued, payable May 1, 1862. Subsequently, a loan of $500,000 was made for the purpose of aiding the families of volunteers.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 529. See also D 31.

Apr. 29 Upon the arrival of news from the U. S. "that a civil war has broken out between the Secessionists in that country and the other States of the Union," the Earl of Malmesbury, in the house of lords, asks whether the ministers "have made any attempt to prevent the quarrel between the different States of the American Union from coming to a bloody issue; what hopes they entertain of succeeding in so laudable an endeavour, and whether they have invited, or are in correspondence with any other European Government with the view of obtaining their assistance in seeking to put a stop at the outset to a civil war, of which, if once fairly commenced, it will be impossible to foresee the end?" Lord Wodehouse, foreign secretary, answered that, "after the most mature deliberation, the Government came to the conclusion that it was not desirable that this country should intrude her offices or counsel on the Government of the United States."—Hansard's Parl. Debates, CLXII: 1207–9.

" Col. Ellsworth's Fire Zouaves, to the number of 1,100, leave for the front. " Benson J. Lossing arrives in New York from New Orleans and is astonished at the transformation since he left it for the South late in March. He writes: "Everywhere between Cincinnati and Jersey City he had seen the great uprising. . . .

"When he crossed the Hudson River into the great city of almost a million inhabitants, it seemed to him like a vast military camp. The streets were swarming with soldiers. Among the stately trees in Battery Park white tents were standing and sentinels were pacing. Rude barracks filled with men were covering portions of City Hall Park, and heavy cannon were arranged in a line near the fountain, surrounded by hundreds of soldiers, many of them in the gay costume of the Zouave."—Lossing, *Hist. of N. 4 "New York has nobly responded to the call made for troops to assert and protect the honor of our national flag, and is fast drafting her military forces to the expected scene of strife. 13 England proclaims her neutrality between the contending parties in the United States. "This proclamation . . . derived now great importance for the reason that its issuance and the nature of its terms were the recognition of the Confederacy as a belligerent power. To regard the Confederate States as a belligerent conflicted with the theory of the Lincoln administration that the Southerners were insurgents, and with the largely prevailing notion at the North that they should be treated as rebels and traitors; and it placed in the eyes of nations—for all the important powers of Europe substantially followed the example of Great Britain—the vessels that should accept letters of marque from the Confederate government on the level of privateers, instead of considering them pirates and 25 By this date, the 30,000 men authorised by the New York State legislature had been raised, and by July 12, they had been organised into 38 regiments, officered, and dispatched to the seat of war. In addition, 10 regiments were accepted from the Union Defence Committee in New York. By July 1, the New York State troops in the field were: three-months' militia, 8,300; three-years' militia, 3,400; two-years' volunteers, 30,000; three-years' volunteers, 5,000; total, 46,700. By the end of the year 1861, the total strength of troops furnished by New York State was 120,361.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 523.

" The grand jury, in the court of general sessions, issues a presentment against A. J. Hackley, commissioner of street cleaning (see F 12). At the time when the bids for the contract for cleaning the streets for five years were called for, two sureties for each bidder were required. The presentment of the last grand jury showed that, just prior to the awarding of the contract to Hackley against 22 lower bidders, Hackley had received $40,000 from his sureties and "refused to say what use he had made of the money on the ground that his answer would [in]criminate him." Evidence examined shows that "the contract has not only been violated by Mr. Hackley in nearly every respect, but that some of its requirements have been entirely disregarded." A list of streets is given, "required to be swept four times [in two weeks] and not swept at all;" another list was "required to be swept four times, but swept only once;" another very long list was "required to be swept twice, but swept only once;" another, still longer, "required to be swept twice, but not swept at all." The contractor has "reduced the number of sweepers to less than two hundred," whereas "probably about five hundred sweepers working faithfully, in favorable weather, would be required to sweep the streets once a week." This makes it clear that, with summer coming on, "it is the duty of the proper public officials to take immediate and efficient measures, to save our citizens from the dangers to which they will then be exposed from filthy, pestilence-breeding streets." It is declared to be the duty of the city inspector "to give immediate notice in writing to the contractor of his failure to perform the duties required by the contract; and if the same are not fully performed, to give notice to the Comptroller, that he may communicate to the sureties; and if they fail to have the work performed within forty-eight hours thereafter, to proceed to have it done at their expense." It is also urged that the corporation counsel investigate to see if immediate legal proceedings may not be taken "to relieve the city from the burden of this contract."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXII: 418–33; N. Y. Tribune, My 26, 1861. This presentment is referred by the common council to the committee of the law department. On June 17, this committee reported for adoption resolutions very closely in accord with the recommendations of the grand jury, but they were "laid over" three times and finally "laid on the table."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXII: 507–10; LXXXIII: 12, 71, 141.

A description of a circumnavigation of Manhattan Island includes the following: "The upper portion of our island yet presents, upon the Hudson side as upon the East, very much of its primitive forest look; and for more than half the distance of the fourteen miles between the Spuyten Duyvel and the Battery, the shore is as yet but little disturbed by the city encroachments, excepting as they occasionally 'crop out,' like the geologists' rocks, in the form of a factory dock, an embryo street, or a village nucleus. From the water, the landscape appears peaceful and rural enough in the curtaining veil of summer verdure; but step ashore any where and the cloven foot of the town is somewhat more evident along highways and byways . . . there already stretch lines of glaring gas-lamps, and in the shadow of mossy hillocks the eye may occasionally detect the intrusive uniform of the Metropolitan Police. . . . July —

"The lofty table ridge which overlooks the Spuyten Duyvel continues unbroken for the distance of a mile, when it drops nearly to the river level at the railway station of Tubby Hook. The whole way is closely occupied by quiet country retreats, with woods and lawns extending back to the King's Bridge Road. . . .

"In our next mile's travel we pass the heights memorable in revolutionary story as the site of Fort Tryon and Fort Washington. . . . The precise spot upon which Fort Washington stood is now included in the beautiful estate of Mr. James Gordon Bennett. It is the highest of the high lands of the metropolis and overlooks the river and all its surroundings of cities, villages, and farms, from the Tappan to the Atlantic. . . .

"The picturesque promontory which steps so bravely into the river at the base of Fort Washington is Jeffrey's Hook. . . .

"Continuing our voyage . . ., we come immediately to the grounds of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, a noble edifice perched on the heights above, with broad, grassy lawns sweeping down to the water's edge. . . .

"Next below the Asylum—not including a large sugar-refinery—is Audubon Park, a charming group of country-seats, all sharing in common the rural pleasures of a broad, woodland stretch along the river marge. . . . Near the lower end of the Park is the Carmansville station of the Hudson River railway at the foot of One Hundred and Fifty-second Street.

"The interval between the Park and the railway dépôt is occupied by the thickly-wooded grounds of Trinity Church Cemetery. The grounds stretch back from the river to the Tenth Avenue, at present the great central thoroughfare of this part of the island. . .

"Yet a little further down and we approach that part of the metropolis still distinctively known as Manhattanville, but soon to be merged in the general mass, as the former villages of Chelsea and Greenwich were absorbed long ago. . . . Among the public establishments of this part of the city are a large Lunatic Asylum, and a convent and seminary of the Catholic church.

"Within the remaining stretch of the river-shore, until we again reach the compactly built town at Fifty-second Street, are included the several roadside resorts of Clermont, Stryker's Bay, and Burnham's; and the pretty edifice of the Orphan Asylum with its beautiful lawns sloping down to the river's side [at 73d and 74th Sts.].

"From Fifty-second Street back to the Battery and the Bay we see again, with variations, the busy pictures upon which we have already looked on our passage up the East River—endless and crowded streets and wharves and fleets of vessels of all kinds, jostling each other at the piers and in their passage to and fro in the stream. On this side of the city, huge lumber-yards take the place of the ship-yards and steamboats and steamers of the clipper ships of the East River. . . .

"We are now near the end of our route, having reached the point where the great waters of the Hudson mingle with the salt floods of the Bay. It only remains to flit across the mouth of the broad river and regain the grateful shades of the Battery grounds, from which we set out in this our varied journey of thirty miles around the far-famed Island City."—Harper's New Monthly Mag., July, 1861.

3 "The work of laying the seven-feet pipes across the High Bridge [see O, 1860] is progressing with a rapidity promising very speedy completion. At each gate house, new gates have been constructed and the two three-feet pipes have been brought around and inserted on the west side, while a third gate has been placed at each end of the bridge to regulate the passage of the water through the large pipes, which will soon be inserted. The new reservoir is being pushed forward with all the dispatch commensurate with strength and durability, by the energetic contractors, but it is scarcely probable that the embankment will be sufficiently settled to allow the reservoir to be filled. The lower gate-house, now nearly completed, is pronounced by all scientific men who have examined it the finest piece of masonry on this continent, and not excelled by any similar work in the world."—N. Y. Times, O 3, 1861.

14 Gov. Morgan is notified by the secretary of state, Wm. H. Seward, that New York should be put in a state of defence against foreign enemies. Seward sent similar letters to the governors of all the states on the seaboard and lakes.—N. Y. Times, O 17, 1861; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 524.

15 The corner-stone of the second building of the College of St. Francis Xavier (see N 15, 1850, and Ja 10, 1861) is laid, at the present location on West 15th St. The formal inauguration of the new building took place on July 7, 1862. This was the east wing of the new plan of buildings which was altered and developed into the present structures, mainly during the period from 1886 to 1892.—College of St. Francis Xavier, A Memorial and Retrospect (1897), 68–72, 120, 128–29, 149–50, 164–67, 208.

Oct. 15 About this time, Anthony Trollope visited New York. He thus writes of it: "Speaking of New York as a traveller I have two faults to find with it. In the first place there is nothing to see; and in the second place there is no mode of getting about to see anything. Nevertheless New York is a most interesting city. . . . Free institutions, general education, and the ascendancy of dollars are the words written on every paving-stone along Fifth Avenue, down Broadway, and up Wall Street. . . .

"In saying that there is very little to be seen in New York, I have also said that there is no way of seeing that little. My assertion amounts to this,—that there are no cabs. . . .

"In New York there are street omnibuses as we have—there are street cars such as last year we declined to have,—and there are very excellent public carriages; but none of these give you the accommodation of a cab, nor can all of them combined do so. The omnibuses, though clean and excellent, were to me very unintelligible. They have no conductor to them. To know their different lines and usages a man should have made a scientific study of the city. . . .

"And then there are street cars—very long omnibuses—which run on rails but are dragged by horses. They are capable of holding forty passengers each, and as far as my experience goes carry an average load of sixty. . . .

"And now as to the other charge against New York, of their being nothing to see. How should there be anything there to see of general interest? In other large cities, cities as large in name as New York, there are works of art, fine buildings, ruins, ancient churches, picturesque costumes, and the tombs of celebrated men. But in New York there are none of these things. Art has not yet grown up there. One or two fine figures by Crawford are in the town . . . but art is a luxury in a city which follows but slowly on the heels of wealth and civilization. Of fine buildings . . . there are none deserving special praise or remark. . . . Churches there are plenty, but none that are ancient. . . .

". . . The arrangements for supplying New York with water are magnificent. The drainage of the new part of the city is excellent. The hospitals are almost alluring. The lunatic asylum which I saw was perfect. . . .

"And as to the schools, it is almost impossible to mention them with too high a praise. . . .

". . . The Fifth Avenue is the Belgrave Square, the Park Lane, and the Pall Mall of New York. It is certainly a very fine street. The houses in it are magnificent, not having that aristocratic look which some of our detached London residences enjoy, or the palatial appearance of an old-fashioned hotel in Paris, but an air of comfortable luxury and commercial wealth which is not excelled by the best houses of any other town that I know. . . .

"There are churches on each side of Fifth Avenue—perhaps five or six within sight at one time—which add much to the beauty of the street. They are well-built, and in fairly good taste. . . . I own that I have enjoyed the vista as I have walked up and down Fifth Avenue, and have felt that the city had a right to be proud of its wealth. . . .

"But the glory of New York is the Central Park. . . . It is very large, being over three miles long, and about three quarters of a mile in breadth. . . . The great waterworks of the city bring the Croton River, whence New York is supplied, by an aqueduct over the Haarlem river into an enormous reservoir just above the Park. . . . At present the Park, to English eyes, seems to be all road. The trees are not grown up, and the new embankments, and new lakes, and new ditches, and new paths give to the place anything but a picturesque appearance. The Central Park is good for what it will be, rather than for what it is. . . ."—Trollope, North Am. (N. Y., 1862), 182–209.

Nov. — "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" is composed at Washington, D. C., by Julia Ward Howe after a visit to the Army of the Potomac. It was first published in Feb., 1862, in the Atlantic Monthly, and it became one of the most popular songs of the Civil War.—Hall, The Story of The Battle Hymn of the Republic, 49 et seq.

1861 Nov. 1 The final session of the charter commission of 1861 (see My 1) is held, at which a resolution is passed stating that, "owing to the condition of public affairs, it has been found unpracticable to prepare and mature the necessary amendments to the Charter within the time prescribed by law" (see Ap 15).—Jour. of the Commission (MS.), in N. Y. P. L.

7 A large meeting is held at Cooper Institute to express New York's sympathy for the suffering and starving people of North Carolina who have remained true to the Union. Speeches are made by George Bancroft, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Gen. Burnside, etc., and a committee is appointed to solicit subscriptions for the relief of the Carolinians.—N. Y. Times, N 8, 1861.

8 James Mason and John Slidell, commissioners from the Southern Confederacy to Great Britain and France, are forcibly taken from the English mail-packet "Trent" by Capt. Wilkes of the American man-of-war "San Jacinto" and carried to Boston. Upon demand of the British government, Secretary Seward, on Dec. 26, disavowed this violation of the law of nations, and the commissioners were liberated. This proved a sufficient apology to England, and a threatened war with that country was averted.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., III: 520–38.

23 The following scathing arraignment of Fernando Wood appears: "When he came into office the taxes of the city were six millions per annum. They are now over twelve millions. Where are his vetoes which would have stayed this tide of profligate expenditure?" He has made the police force "a mere machine for his private and political purposes. Under his sway gamblers, ticket swindlers, emigrant robbers, baggage smashers, and all the worst classes of the city, rose into prominence . . . till the name of New York became a byword and a reproach all over Europe."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 23, 1861. See D 3.

Dec. 3 In a very close municipal election, George Opdyke, an old Free-soil Democrat and pioneer Republican, is elected mayor of New York City over the Mozart Hall candidate, Fernando Wood. Tammany Hall refused to support Wood and nominated C. Godfrey Gunther.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 4, 1861. See also some letters to Wood just prior to the election, among miscellaneous N. Y. MSS. in N. Y. P. L. Opdyke was succeeded by C. Godfrey Gunther in 1863 (q. v., D 1).

12 The common council resolves "That the Street Com'r be directed to proceed forthwith in the grading and laying out of Mt. Morris Square as a park (to conform to a certain map or plan made by H. L. Southard and J. Buckhout, now on file in his office), except so much thereof as has been leased to S. Van Ostrand; said square to be inclosed immediately, by a strong and substantial picket fence, said fence to be made and put up by contract; and that no portion of the earth or rock-cutting shall be removed from the square."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIX: 292. See, further, S 25, 1863.

16 Mayor Wood submits a message to the common council advocating a more complete defence for the city against a possible attack of the enemy. While we have already in position "more guns of heavy calibre than Sebastopol had at the attack of the Allied armies," much remains to be done so that the approaches to the city by the Narrows or Long Island may be "thoroughly and successfully defended."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXIV: 341–47.

18 "During the past year very extensive improvements have been completed in Central Park. . . . The Park-drive has been extended from fifty-ninth-street to One Hundred and Fourth-street, making in all more than seven miles of as fine a road for driving as can be found in this country. Much labor has also been expended in the preparation of the skating ponds, the construction of refreshment saloons, and other necessary buildings. These buildings will be rented to parties desiring to furnish refreshments to the visitors at the Park, and the income thereof is to be applied to the adorning of the grounds and the improvement of the ponds. Mr. C. G. White, of Brooklyn, has presented to the Superintendent a couple of cranes. They are objects of much interest to those visiting the Park. A pair of deer have also been placed in an enclosure near the Mall, where all may have an opportunity of seeing them. Mrs. Crawford, the widow of the celebrated sculptor of that name, has caused to be placed in the Park a copy of each of her husband's works in plaster. They make a very fine appearance. A great amount of shrubbery and large numbers of trees have been transplanted within the last year, with great success. Several new avenues have been opened, and five archways of great architectural beauty, have been constructed in different parts of the Park. Several wealthy parties in the upper part of the City are now making arrangements to erect a glass conservatory at their own expense. . . . It will be two hundred feet in length, by forty feet in width, and two stories in height. It is to be situated near Fifth-avenue and Seventy-fourth-street, and will front an artificial pond five hundred feet in length, by two hundred and fifty in breadth."—N. Y. Times, D 18, 1861. New York banks suspend specie payments.—N. Y. Herald, D 31, 1861. 30

The population of New York City is 810,000, half of whom live in tenement-houses.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 527. 31

Of the $260,000,000 borrowed during 1861 by the federal government to carry on the war, $210,000,000 came from New York. Without this advance by the capitalists of New York, there could have been no movements of troops or purchase of arms. The perils of the operation were fully appreciated. Foreign capitalists withdrew their confidence; Boston reduced the quota of its advance from 30 to 20%. New York had no doubts or hesitation; it took its own share and that which Boston rejected.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1861), 524. "

A tabular statement of the funded debt of the city on this day, showing the titles of stock, for what purposes these various issues of stock were made, and the amounts of principal and interest, was published in the Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 170. Cf. similar statements in ibid. for current years. "

In this year, a French expedition sent out by Napoleon III overthrew the Mexican Republic. It was determined that Mexico should henceforth be an empire, and Archduke Maximilian of Austria accepted the offer of the crown. The majority of the Mexicans, however, were opposed to Maximilian, and guerilla warfare followed. In 1865, when the Civil War was over, the U. S. threatened intervention, and Napoleon thereupon withdrew his troops. Maximilian was taken by the Mexicans and shot June 19, 1867.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 277–80. —

In this year, "Greenbacks," treasury notes so named from the green colour of the paper used, were first issued in the United States, to provide for the expenses of the Civil War. "The government, following the example of the banks, had suspended specie payment. The new notes were therefore for the time being an inconvertible paper currency, and, since they were made legal tender, were really a form of fiat money. The first act, providing for the issue of notes to the amount of $150,000,000, was that of the 25th February 1862; the acts of 11th July 1862 and 3rd March 1863 each authorized further issues of $150,000,000. The notes soon depreciated in value, and at the lowest were worth only 35 cents on the dollar. The act of 12th April 1866 authorized the retirement of $10,000,000 of notes within six months and of $4,000,000 per month thereafter; this was discontinued by act of 4th February 1868. On 1st January 1879 [q. v.] specie payment was resumed, and the nominal amount of notes then stood at $346,681,000." —

The so-called "Greenback Party," which advocated an increase in volume of greenbacks, the forbidding of bank issues, and the payment in greenbacks of the principal of all government bonds not expressly payable in coin, first appeared in a presidential campaign in 1876, with Peter Cooper as nominee. It went out of existence subsequent to 1884.—Encyclop. Brit., XII: 537.

Edward Dicey, an English newspaper correspondent, arrived in New York early in this year, and thus described the effects of the war on the city: "I had left England at the time when the fortunes of the Federal cause seemed the lowest, and when New York was popularly believed to be on the brink of ruin and revolution. It was, I own, a surprise to me to find how little trace there was of either. An incurious stranger, not given to enter into conversation, —

1862 or to read the newspaper, might almost, I fancy, have lived there
— for weeks at that time without discovering that the country was involved in a civil war. There were forts being thrown up rapidly along the banks which command the Narrows; . . . The number of uniforms about the streets was small. . . . A score or so of tents were pitched upon the snow in the City Park, and at the Battery, but rather for show than use. In the Broadway and the Bowery there were a few recruiting offices, in front of which hung hugh placards tempting fine young men, by the offer of a hundred dollars' bounty (to be paid down, but after the war), and the promise of immediate active service, to join the Van Buren light infantry or the New York mounted cavalry. It was rare to hear a military band; and in the shop windows I noticed at that time but few pictures of the war, or portraits of the war's heroes. I saw regiments passing through the town on their way to the South, and yet only a few idlers were gathered to see them pass. In fact, the show-time of the war had passed away, and it was become a matter of sober business.

"So, too, I was present at New York when the news came of Roanoke Island, and Bowling Green, and Fort Donaldson—of the first of that long uninterrupted series of victories which checked the progress of the insurrection. . . . There were no proclamations, no addresses to the people, no grandiloquent bulletins as there would have been under like circumstances in a Continental country. A small crowd collected round the newspaper offices—a few extra flags hung out of shop windows—a notice that Barnum's Museum would be illuminated in honour of the Union victories, by the patriotic proprietor—and a salute of cannon from the battery; such were about the only outward symptoms of public rejoicing. There was no want of interest or feeling about the war. In society it was the one topic of thought and conversation. . . .

"There was as little look of public distress as of popular excitement. The port and quays were crowded with shipping. Broadway was daily rendered almost impassable by the never-ending string of carts and omnibuses and carriages, which rolled up and down it for hours. . . . New stores and streets were still building, and notices of 'houses to let,' or of sales by auction, were very few. Though the banks had suspended specie payments, yet, by one of those mysteries of the currency I never hope to see explained, their notes passed at full value, and were exchanged readily for coin—at least, in all such small transactions as come under a traveller's notice. There was, I have no doubt, much mercantile distress; and the shopkeepers, who depended on the sale of luxuries to the wealthy classes, were doing a poor trade. . . . Residents often expressed their regret to me that I should see their city under so dull an aspect. But I know that, on a bright winter day, when the whole population seemed to be driving out in sleighs to the great skating carnivals at the Central Park, I have seldom seen a brighter or a gayer-looking city then that of New York."—Dicey, Six months in the Federal States (London, 1863), I: 22–26.

— "In 1862 Calls of stocks were begun in the basement of 23 William Street, known as the 'Coal Hole,' admission being obtained by paying the lessee an annual subscription. These Calls were attended only by persons not members of the 'Regular Board,' though all parties dealt together in the street. There was no organization, though, the sales on the Calls at the 'Coal Hole' were printed in the newspapers of the period as 'Sales at the Public Stock Board.'" —Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 43.

— In this year, the merchants' exchange (see 1842), bounded by Wall St., Exchange Place, William, and Hanover Sts., was leased to the U. S. government and remodelled for use as a custom-house. —Liber Deeds, DCCCXLIV: 634; Statutes at Large, XII: 534, 749; XIII: 25; House Ex. Docs., 38th cong., 136; Ann. Expenditures upon the N. Y. Custom House (Washington, 1867). In 1865 (q. v., Ap 29), the federal government bought the property.

The old custom-house became the sub-treasury (see 1863).

— In this year, Amos R. Eno erected a building for an evening stock exchange (where the Madison Square Theatre was afterwards built), on W. 24th St. adjoining the Fifth Avenue Hotel.—Brown, II: 399; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See N 30, 1865.

— In this year, The Market Book, by De Voe, was published.

In Valentine's Manual for 1862 was published an address on 1862
"Old New York" by Benj. Robt. Winthrop, read before the — N. Y. H. S. on Feb. 4, 1862, together with a map of "The Bouwery," drawn from the Goerck-Mangin Map of 1803, and having the modern streets superimposed in red lines.—Man. Com. Coun. (1862), 686–94.

There were also published in this year's Manual the following views: the south gate-house of the new reservoir (2 views), 182, 188; High Bridge during construction (3 views, 1861 and 1862), 212, 216, 596; the old Latimer House, at Third Ave. and 88th St., 261; the N. Y. Hist. Soc. building, cor. Second Ave. and 11th St., 344; the old Gotham Inn, The Bowery, 380.

In 1862 and the years immediately following, Victor Prevost — made a series of photographs showing the original condition of the site covered by Central Park and important sections under development. These are now in the N. Y. Public Library, and five of them are reproduced as Pl. 149-b, Vol. III.

"The Stevens Steam Floating Battery" is tested with great success at Hoboken. It is "a shot-proof vessel of war, capable of unusually great speed and manageableness, and of throwing a broadside of unusual weight. It was suggested to the Government by Robert L. and Edwin A. Stevens in 1841, commenced in 1854, and advanced to its present state during the period of twenty months. The hull of the vessel, with the exception of some of the decks and cross-bulkheads, is completed, and the engines, screw-propeller shafting, boilers and blowing and pumping machinery, are finished and in their places. The armor, the armament, the remaining portion of the decks and bulkheads, the screw-propellers, joiner work, and upper decks, are yet to be completed."—N. Y. Times, Ja 5, 1862. See also ibid., Mr 19, 1862. Jan. 4

Mayor Opdyke communicates his first message to the common council. He declares that since the outbreak of the war in April, 1861, the city has sent 60,445 volunteers to the field and loaned the government more than $100,000,000. Reminding the members that the exigences of war "operate with irresistible force in compelling individual economy," just as truly, he declares, they "admonish us of the necessity of retrenchment in the public expenditures." He asks the cooperation of the common council "in the adoption of all measures calculated to lighten the public burdens, without impairing the efficiency of the City Government." He expresses the belief that "the best form of government ever devised by human wisdom is that of the United States," and wishes that New York City might have executive and legislative departments of a like nature; he would have the mayor and comptroller as the only elective officials outside the common council, and all the powers of the board of supervisors given over to the aldermen. 6

The mayor brings out the interesting fact that "no other city in the State is obliged to apply annually to the legislature for authority to levy a tax," and deplores this discrimination against New York; also, he makes a plea for "an inflexible rule that no item of expense shall be inserted by the Legislature which the authorities of the City have not asked for." The mayor further offers the interesting suggestion that any tax-payer may have the authority "to sustain an action against the city authorities for the faithless and improper application of the public funds." He believes there must be "some radical defect" in the management of wharves, piers, and markets, citing the comptroller's annual report to show that this property, valued at nearly $7,000,000, yields a net revenue of less than $150,000; "under prudent and skillful management it should yield half a million." Such management under city ownership "cannot be expected," he thinks, so he advocates the sale of the property and "the application of the proceeds toward the payment of the City's public debt." He recognizes, however, that this is not an auspicious time for such a sale and recommends meanwhile "a thorough investigation of the management of this property, the removal of all existing abuses, and the abolition of all unnecessary offices connected therewith."

It was to be expected that the mayor would say something about the disgraceful condition of the streets; "New York has earned a most unenviable reputation," he declares, in this respect, yet "no other city has paid so liberally for such service." He recommends the abrogation of the "Hackley contract" (see My 25, 1861), and declares there is no good reason "why street cleaning in this city may not be ultimately made, as it is already in some other cities, a source of revenue instead of expense." Most injurious to the city's commerce, he feels, is that provision of the tariff act

1862 Jan. 6 passed at the last session of congress, which shortens the period during which "foreign goods may remain in bond, without the payment of duty," from three years to three months. This is particularly unfortunate at a time when England and France are "still liberalizing the provisions of their warehousing system." New York is now the world's third largest city, and with a prophet's eye Mayor Opdyke sees "the vast population inhabiting this island and the western county of our sister island united in one Municipal Government, under the name of Manhattan, and forming a metropolis of imperial dimensions, worthy of that nation whose mercantile marine exceeds that of any other nation in the world."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXV: 9–22. Bennett, editor of the Herald, likes the message, and calls the conflict between the state and municipal authorities to which the mayor alludes a "battledore and shuttlecock game of thieving;" he would have the mayor of the city rendered responsible for the administration of city affairs. "Immense responsibility would devolve, of course, upon Mr. Opdyke himself, but all parties repose confidence in both his integrity and ability, and we have no doubt that, under his rule, the city would see better days."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 7, 1862. "The message of Mayor Opdyke . . . is brief, pointed, and business-like."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 7, 1862.

Mayor Opdyke's message was referred "for suitable action," on Ja 13, to a "Select Committee" of five members. This committee rendered a report on F 14. They called the message "one of the most interesting, important, and valuable papers ever addressed to the legislative branches of the city government." However, the committee, holding a different political belief from the Republican mayor, especially in national matters, expressed its views thus: "Opposed in politics as were the great majority of our citizens to the party which brought into power the existing National Administration, they nevertheless cordially and with entire unanimity, placed at the disposal of the Government, in its darkest hour of trial, all the men and all the treasure which the mighty resources of the city could command. And from that time forward the city has been not only among the foremost, but the very foremost in its contributions of troops and money to sustain the National cause. For all these sacrifices and all these exertions, what is the return made by the authorities of the Federal Government? The immense sums which in excess of our due proportion we furnished in their extremity are unpaid. The fortification and defense of our harbor are neglected. But beyond, and worse than this, with a rapacity and profligacy to which the history of this country is a stranger; the Cabinet at Washington has recklessly squandered the public moneys upon family relatives and political stipendiaries, and has employed our armies in the field and our navy more for the purpose of enriching contractors and speculators than for the achievement of victory over our enemies."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXV: 142–46.

20 John Ericsson writes from New York to Assist. Sec. of the Navy Fox: "In accordance with your request, I now submit for your approbation a name for the floating battery at Greenpoint. The impregnable and aggressive character of this structure will admonish the leader of the Southern Rebellion that the batteries on the banks of the rivers will no longer present barriers to the entrance of Union forces. The iron-clad intruder will thus prove a severe monitor to those leaders. But there are other leaders who will also be startled and admonished by the booming of the guns from the impregnable iron turret. 'Downing Street' will hardly view with indifference this last 'Yankee notion,' this monitor. To the Lords of the Admiralty the new craft will be a monitor, suggesting doubts as to the propriety of completing those four steel-clad ships at three and a half million apiece. On these and many similar grounds, I propose to name the new battery Monitor."—Church, Life of John Ericsson, I: 254–55 (footnote). The "Monitor" was launched on Jan. 30 (q. v.). Feb. — "Those who remember the Broadway of twenty years ago can hardly walk the streets now without incessant wonder and surprise. For although the transformation is gradually wrought, it is always going on before the eye. Twenty years ago it was a street of three-story red brick houses. Now it is a highway of stone, and iron, and marble buildings. The few older ones that remain and are individually remembered as among the best of their kind and time, are now not even quaint, but simply old-fashioned and unhandsome.

"And yet, among all the costly and colossal buildings that have of late been erected how few show any real taste or grace; . . . The fine architectural effects of some streets in Genoa, in Naples, in Rome, in Paris, in Berlin, in Venice, and other great foreign cities, are unknown in New York. There are some exceptions. Some of the new stores in Broadway are almost as imposing as some of the palaces in Italian cities. . . . How the best are disfigured by the ugliest signs! . . .

"But in Broadway the cellar and wareroom are invading the boudoir. Great wholesale stores stand where the pretty shops stood, and if you go below Canal Street of an evening there is something ghostly in the gloom of the closed warehouses. Twenty years ago you sauntered from Canal Street to Chamber, stopping at Contoit's Garden to eat an ice-cream. City civilization then paused at Bleecker or Fourth streets. The New York Hotel stands now, down town, where then a quiet farm-house stood aloof in leafy seclusion. Beyond Ninth Street the city raveled out into the fields. Union Park was an inclosure. Madison Square was out upon the Island. Where now the choicest fashion dwells cows and donkeys browsed. . . .

"Of course in all these changes the city has lost much of its old town character, and becomes every year more and more a metropolis. . . ."—From the "Editor's Easy Chair" (by George Wm. Curtis), in Harper's Mag. (F, 1862), 409.

8 New York is filled with apprehension lest the "Merrimac" come northward from Newport News and destroy the shipping in the harbour. The battle between the "Merrimac" and the "Monitor" on March 9 (q. v.) removed this danger.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Mr 10, 1862. See Mr 29.

9 In a battle at Hampton Roads, the "Monitor" badly disables the "Merrimac" and dispels the terror inspired by the Confederate iron-clad. "The Merrimac . . . appeared, when afloat, like a huge roof. This and her sides were composed of heavy oak timber, twenty-eight inches in thickness, covered six inches deep by railway iron bars and iron plates. A bulwark, or false bow was added, and beyond this was a strong oak and iron beak, thirty-three feet long. . . . She was made apparently shot-proof; was propelled by two engines of great power, and carried on each side four 80-pounder rifled cannon, and at the bow and stern a gun that would hurl a 100-pound shot, or 120-pound shell. Her engines and other apparatus were all below water-mark." The "Monitor" "presented to the eye, when afloat, a simple platform, sharp at both ends, and bearing a round revolving iron Martello tower, twenty feet in diameter and ten feet high, and forming a bomb-proof fort, in which two 11-inch Dahlgren cannon were mounted."—Lossing, Civil War in Am., II: 359–67; Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., III: 608–14.

21 The introduction of "iron-clad" vessels into naval warfare (see Mr 9) impels the board of aldermen to meet in special session and consider a "preamble, resolution, and ordinance." The opinion is expressed in the preamble that vessels of this character "could, 1862 Mar. 21 almost with impunity, visit and destroy this the great commercial metropolis and emporium of the western hemisphere." To remove this "feeling of insecurity," it is believed that "at any sacrifice, and at every hazard, the defenses of the approaches to its environs, both by way of the Narrows and by Long Island Sound, should be so efficiently protected as to allay even the shadow of a doubt as to their impregnability." Further, it is "peculiarly the province of the Common Council of this city—the immediate representatives of all classes of its citizens, and the custodians of its varied and important interests—to take the initiative in a subject of such vital importance." The resolution that follows calls for the passage of an ordinance "providing for the creation of a fund, to be called the 'Harbor Defense Fund of the city of New York,'" and the issuing of bonds therefor. The ordinance fixes $500,000 as the amount to be raised. A special committee of three is named to confer with the mayor and others "as to the advisability or actual necessity of taking such action."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXV: 356–60. See Mr 24.

24 The board of aldermen adopts the ordinance considered at the meeting of March 21 (q. v.). The special committee had reported in favour of such action; a communication to the board by Mayor Opdyke, however, had recommended a memorial to the legislature first. He cites a section of the charter which "expressly forbids the Common Council from borrowing money on the credit of the Corporation, except in anticipation of the revenue of the year . . . unless authorized by special act of the Legislature." Furthermore, he minimizes the "immediate danger apprehended," declaring it is "the opinion of the highest authorities" that the naval department has provided "ample means" for destroying the "Merrimac" if she "again ventures to come out," and that, if this reliance should fail, she could not reach New York Harbour, "as her construction is such as to incapacitate her for ocean navigation."

The board is influenced by the mayor's letter to this extent, viz., "to memorialize the Legislature . . . to legalize . . . the issue of bonds . . . to the amount of $500,000."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXV: 361–75. The Tribune quotes Alderman Boole as taking exception to the mayor's statement that the "Merrimac" is unseaworthy. "He had the measurement, within a few inches, of the vessel, and he felt quite sure that she could easily reach New-York; that first she would visit the East River, and set fire to the city on either side, then visit the North River, and set us on fire on that side, and then bid us good-bye, and go elsewhere."—N. Y. Tribune, Mr 25, 1862.

On April 19, 1864, it was authorised to borrow an additional $800,000 for the same purpose.—Ibid. (1864), chap. 242. The court-house was occupied in 1867 (q. v.).

Henry B. Dawson, of Morrisania, N. Y., presents to the city, through Mayor Opdyke and the common council, a compilation of information, derived from the Royal Gazette from 1776 to 1783, inclusive, regarding the finances of the city during the British occupation. The comptroller's office and other city departments had not previously possessed this data. It was printed in the Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 195–240. 15

The board of aldermen receives a message from Mayor Opdyke approving the ordinance to provide $500,000 "for the relief of the families of volunteers from the city of New York, serving in the army of the Union." To return it without his approval, he says, would cause delay and "produce suffering in many families from actual want," but he could wish the board might amend the measure by decreasing "the amount of relief provided for each family," also by giving "the distribution of this large sum of money to private citizens of high character, on whom no suspicions may rest of political favoritism in the performance of this delicate duty." For the common council, "but a few months before a charter election, to appropriate half a million dollars for distribution among a class of our citizens, and constitute themselves its almoners," seems to him "inexpedient, if not improper."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXVI: 497–99. The message was "indignantly returned to the Mayor" by the aldermen.—N. Y. Tribune, Je 24, 1862. 23

By special order from the adjutant-general, the 8th, 11th, 22d, 27th, and 71st Regiments are required to "proceed to Washington forthwith." The 71st Regiment on its return to New York was mustered out of service on Sept. 1.—Whittemore, Hist. of the 71st Reg't, 62–66. See My 29. 26

As Thurlow Weed has for the past six months "been engaged in England and France in enlightening public opinion there in regard to the true character of the infamous rebellion which exists in the Southern States, and has thus rendered to the country valuable services, deserving public recognition," the boards of aldermen and councilmen vote to present him with the freedom of the city and to offer him the municipal hospitalities.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 430. The resolution was vetoed by Mayor Opdyke on June 5, but was repassed over the veto by the board of aldermen on June 16 and by the board of councilmen on June 26.—Ibid. (1885), 430–32. The common council votes its thanks and those of the inhabitants of the city to Archbishop Hughes because, "at a period in the history of our country, when further progress in its onward march to greatness, was declared arrested, its character for englihtenment, 9

21 "The Mayor's Office has been very handsomely refurnished with splendid heavy window-shades, elegant English Brussels carpets, furniture covered with rich green plush, and the railing tastefully fluted in blue damask. This improvement gives a fine rich tone to the general appearance of the office. The Board of Aldermen's room is ornamented with beautiful curtains and draperies, arranged with excellent taste. The floor is covered with a brilliant velvet carpet, while the bookcases are fluted with rich green silk. The rugs and door-mats are of a beautiful design, and the chairs are upholstered with morocco. The rooms of the Clerk of the Board are covered with Brussels carpet, and the desks with morocco. The floor of the outside office is covered with heavy oil-cloth, with mats and rugs. These improvements at the City Hall were much needed."—N. Y. Times, Je 21, 1862.

26 The new Croton reservoir in Central Park (see Ag 30, 1860) is nearly completed. It covers an area of 107 acres, is about a mile and a half in circumference, has an average depth of 40 feet, and will hold 1,129,880,145 gallons. It is built of brick and granite, and has cost not far from $2,000,000.—Leslie's Weekly, XIV: 275. It was opened on Aug. 19 (q. v.).

Aug. 8 All citizens who are liable to be drafted are prohibited, by Secretary Stanton, from leaving their own states or the United States, and the police are directed to arrest all those who attempt thus to evade military duty.—*N. 19 Horace Greeley, through the N. Y. Tribune, addresses a letter to President Lincoln voicing the discouragement of the people at the progress of the war. The letter appears under the caption "The Prayer of Twenty Millions" and declares that a great proportion of those who supported Lincoln's election "are sorely disappointed and deeply pained by the policy you seem to be pursuing with regard to the slaves of Rebels." The Confiscation Act, which provides that all slaves from the South who come within the Union lines shall be free, is not being enforced.

"Slavery is everywhere the inciting cause and sustaining base of treason," Greeley says, and adds: "Had you, Sir, in your Inaugural Address, unmistakably given notice that, in case the Rebellion already commenced were persisted in, and your efforts to preserve the Union and enforce the laws should be resisted by armed force, you would recognize no loyal person as rightfully held in Slavery by a traitor, we believe the Rebellion would therein have received a staggering if not fatal blow. . . . We complain that the officers of your Armies have habitually repelled rather than invited the approach of slaves who would have gladly taken the risks of escaping from their Rebel masters to our camps, bringing intelligence often of inestimable value to the Union cause. . . . We complain that a large proportion of our regular Army Officers, with many of the Volunteers, evince far more solicitude to uphold Slavery than to put down the Rebellion. . . .

"On the face of this wide earth, Mr. President, there is not one disinterested, determined, intelligent champion of the Union cause who does not feel that all attempts to put down the Rebellion and at the same time uphold its inciting cause are preposterous and futile—that the Rebellion, if crushed out tomorrow, would be renewed within a year if Slavery were left in full vigor—that Army officers, who remain to this day devoted to Slavery can at best be but half-way loyal to the Union—that every hour of deference to Slavery is an hour of added and deepened peril to the Union. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 20, 1862. See also Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 72–73. See Ag 22.

" The Croton water is introduced into the new reservoir in Central Park (see Jl 26) before a large assembly. Addresses are made by Mayor Opdyke, Myndert Van Schaick, and others.—*N. Y. 22 President Lincoln, replying to Horace Greeley's letter of Aug. 19 (q. v.), says: "If there be in it any statements or assumptions of fact which I may know to be erroneous, I do not now and here controvert them. If there be in it any inferences which I may believe to be falsely drawn, I do not now and here argue against them. If there be perceptible in it an impatient and dictatorial 1862 Aug. 22 tone, I waive it in deference to an old friend, whose heart I have always supposed to be right.

"As to the policy I 'seem to be pursuing,' as you say, I have not meant to leave any one in doubt.

"I would save the Union. I would save it the shortest way under the Constitution. The sooner the National authority can be restored, the nearer the Union will be 'the Union as it was.' If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save Slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy Slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or destroy Slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it; and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it; and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. What I do about Slavery and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save this Union; and what I forbear, I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I shall believe doing more will help the cause. I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors; and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views. I have here stated my purpose according to my view of official duty, and I intend no modification of my oft-expressed personal wish that all men, everywhere, could be free."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 25, 1862. Greeley answered on Aug. 24, reiterating his declaration that the laws should be enforced and that the slaves of the Rebels should be made free.—Ibid. See also Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 73–75.

" Brig.-Gen. Michael Corcoran, commander of the 69th and "hero of Bull Run," receives a great ovation on his return to New York after a year's confinement in southern prisons. He was welcomed at Castle Garden by Mayor Opdyke and escorted by a procession of military and civil officials and state troops to the St. Nicholas Hotel. The whole line of march was decorated with Irish and American flags and complimentary banners and thronged with cheering crowds. In the evening about 7,000 or 8,000 people assembled outside the hotel, calling and shouting until the general appeared and addressed them.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 22 and 23, 1862.

27 In response to a call by Mayor Opdyke, a war meeting is held in City Hall Park to urge enlistments in the veteran volunteer regiments, in the new regiments called for, and in the Corcoran Brigade. About 20,000 people are present, and there is great enthusiasm at the arrival of Corcoran and the 69th. Mayor Opdyke, Gen. Corcoran, Gen. Walbridge, Gen. Wetmore, Col. Nugent, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Times, Ag 28, 1862. The meeting had the desired effect in stimulating recruiting and donations of money. —Ibid., Ag 29, 1862.

— In this year was organized "The Citizens' Association," an organization that had for its object "to undertake the task of regenerating our City Government."—Address of the Citizens' Association to the Public (1871). In April, 1864, a subcommittee known as the "Council of Hygiene and Public Health" was organized to undertake investigations suggested by the city's "alarmingly high death-rate." This council divided the city into 29 districts for the purpose of making a thorough investigation. A leading physician was appointed as sanitary inspector in each ward, and for nine months a complete and scientific inspection was made, including a description of the soil, the number and character of the buildings, the character of the streets and sewerage, the construction and condition of the tenement-houses, the sickness prevailing, the death rate, etc. The results of this investigation were published in a report of more than 360 pages, accompanied by a map made by Gen. Egbert L. Viele showing the nature of the soil throughout the city and the underground streams and water 1863 courses.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 92–94. The Viele map is reproduced as Pl. 155-b, Vol. III.

— From 1863 to 1866 were published four volumes entitled The Old Merchants of N. Y. City, written by Jos. A. Scoville, under the pseudonym of "Walter Barrett."

— The custom-house having been moved into the merchants' exchange (see 1862), the old custom-house building on the northeast corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see My 1, 1842) is now remodelled, under the supervision of Wm. A. Potter, and is occupied by the sub-treasury, which formerly occupied the old building of the U. S. Branch Bank.—Statutes at large, XII: 534, 749; XIII: 25; House Ex. Docs., 38th cong., 136; Hardenbrook, Financial N. Y., 254; L. M. R. K., III: 975; descrip. of Pl. 166, III: 848.

— A bronze group, "Eagles and Prey," by Fratin Vetheuil, is presented to the city by G. W. Burnham. It was placed west of the north end of the Mall in Central Park.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City.

— In this year, Alfred Tallis issued a series of views entitled Tallis's New York Street Views, Showing A Correct View of All the Principal Stores in the City With The Name, Business, And Address Of The Most Prominent Merchants In Each Street, etc. There is a set in N. Y. H. S. See also descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719 (note).

— In Valentine's Manual for 1863, were published the following views: the U. S. iron-clad steamship "Roanoke" (the first turretted frigate in the U. S.), 56; the Metropolitan police headquarters, in Mulberry St. near Bleecker St., 71; the Clendening mansion, on 90th St., bet. Bloomingdale Road and Eighth Ave., 264; interior of Somerindyke house (in which Louis Philippe taught school), 272 (vide infra); the General Theological Seminary, bet. 20th and 21st Sts., Ninth and Tenth Aves., 298; Ladies Union Aid Soc., on W. 42d St., east of Eighth Ave., 316; Perritt's mansion, on Bloomingdale Road, near Hudson River and 75th St. (known as Maj. Thompson's, in part of which Talleyrand lived), 352; the Somerindyke estate, on Bloomingdale Road, near 75th St., 380; Paisley Place, in W. 17th St., bet. Sixth and Seventh Aves., 630; private residence of the late Mayor Tiemann's father, on the south side of 23d St., bet. Fourth and Madison Aves., 682; junction of Canal and Walker Sts., near Centre St., 728.

— In this year, Jean Joseph Etienne Lenoir, a Frenchmen, invented the hydro-carbon motor. "Some authorities credit Lenoir with having driven a vehicle about Paris, using his internal-combustion engine for motive power."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 479.

Jan. 1 President Lincoln issues his Emancipation Proclamation, freeing the slaves in all the states and parts of states which are in rebellion.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 2, 1863. See also Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 212–15. For his preliminary proclamation, see S 22, 1862.

2 The postage currency has been counterfeited with such great success that it is quite impossible for any except experts to detect the difference.—Leslie's Weekly, XV: 227.

5 Mayor Opdyke submits his second annual message to the board of aldermen. He congratulates it on the fact that business, which had suffered severely at the beginning of the war, has sensibly recovered in all departments. He estimates that the city has furnished 80,000 soldiers from the commencement of the war, and has contributed to the support of the same not less than $300,000,000. This heavy drain on the city's resources has produced "no apparent inconvenience or diminution of the capital employed in trade and commerce." He states "the net amount of the Corporation debt" as $15,305,663.55, "the aggregate value of taxable property" as $571,967,345, and "the amount of expenditures during the year, on city account," as $6,908,096.36, of which $609,760.82 was "in aid of soldiers' families [see My 23, 1862] and for other extraordinary purposes." He urges retrenchment in expenditures, expressing his belief that "the burdens of the war . . . point to the propriety of a diminution rather than an increase" of salaries to city officials; especially does he recommend "a careful revision of the list of employés in each department . . . with the view of diminishing the number in all cases where it may be found practicable without detriment to the public service." The mayor deplores the absence of a "proper system of sewerage" in the city, applications to the common council "for the reconstruction of overburdened and defective sewers" being frequent. Therefore he recommends an appropriation of $5,000 for the employment of a competent engineer to make the necessary surveys and prepare plans. The mayor also shows how badly it works for the "Croton Aqueduct Department" to have charge of the paving of streets while the setting of curb and gutter belongs to the "Street Department," and recommends that the department first named have charge of all these matters. The trap-block or Belgian pavement had been adopted in all the recent city ordinances, and its durability, evenness, cleanliness, and safety for both horses and vehicles give it "great superiority over any other pavement that has been used." A year's experience, he says, confirms his views as to the defects in the present charter (see Ja 6, 1862) and suggests the propriety of a joint committee of the common council conferring with the mayor on charter revision. If a measure has their "joint approval," there would be greater assurance of "its passage in the Legislature and the approval of the Governor." The mayor declares it is his "fixed purpose to neither ask nor accept a re-election."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., LXXXIX: 11–46. Jan. 5

The negroes of New York hold a jubilee at Cooper Institute to celebrate the emancipation edict.—Leslie's Weekly, XV: 275. "

For the purpose of building the West Washington Market, the city acquires land at West Bloomfield and Gansevoort Sts. In 1881 and 1882, the purchase of adjoining land completed the area required.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing libers of conveyances. 20

The upper stone step of the old city hall, in Wall St., which has been preserved as a relic since the demolition of that building, has now been placed by the commissioners of charity and correction in the wall of Bellevue Hospital, near its main entrance. It bears an appropriate inscription.—Leslie's Weekly, XV: 275. 24

This year is the time for the return of the 17-year locusts. They appeared last in the spring of 1846, and were very destructive to trees.—Leslie's Weekly, XV: 339. The locusts came in 1865 (q. v., Jl 8). 21

Col. Robert Nugent, of the 69th Volunteers, is appointed provost-marshal of the Southern District of New York State, which includes the cities of New York and Brooklyn. His special duty was to take charge of the draft which was about to be made.—Fry, N. Y. and the Conscription of 1863, 14–15. Spring

The Enrollment Act, providing for the drafting of male citizens between the ages of 20 and 45 to suppress the rebellion, becomes law.—Laws of U. S., 37th cong., 3d sess., chap. 75; Dodd, Expansion and Conflict, 305. Mar. 3

A meeting is held at the Chamber of Commerce "to further, and bring to completion, the great Atlantic Telegraph enterprise." Mayor Opdyke is chosen chairman and John Austin Stevens, Jr., secretary. After addresses by Peter Cooper, Cyrus W. Field, Wm. E. Dodge, E. Cunard, and A. A. Low, it is unanimously resolved, "That in the opinion of this meeting a cable can, in the present state of telegraph science, be laid between Newfoundland and Ireland with almost absolute certainty of success, and, when laid, will prove of the greatest benefit to the people of the two hemispheres, and also profitable to the shareholders; it is, therefore, recommended to the public to aid the undertaking." Several 4

1863 present also subscribe to the enterprise.—Proc. of a Meeting Called
Mr 4 to Further the Enterprise of the Atlantic Telegraph (1863).

6 A meeting to support the Union cause is held at Cooper Institute. Speeches are made by Gen. Prosper M. Wetmore, Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, James T. Brady, David Dudley Field, Judge Daly, John Van Buren, and others.—Loyal Meeting of the People of N. Y., to Support the Gov't (1863); N. Y. Times, Mr 7, 1863. See also Ap 11.

10 The British consulate and the ships in the harbour are gaily dressed with flags and bunting in honour of the marriage of the Prince of Wales to Princess Alexandra of Denmark. At 12 o'clock a salute of 21 guns is fired from the "Africa." In the evening, Mr. E. M. Archibald, British consul at New York, gave a dinner to celebrate the event.—N. Y. Times, Mr 11, 1863.

23 Lord Campbell, in the house of lords, advocates the recognition of the Southern Confederacy "as an independent Power," but Earl Russell opposes it as "unfriendly to the United States."—Hansard's Parl. Debates, CLXIX: 1714–41.

3 The legislature amends the city charter, lengthening the term of office of department heads from two years (see Ap 14, 1857) to four, and providing that "such heads of departments shall hereafter be subject to removal from office only for the causes and in the manner now provided by law for the removal of the comptroller." The amendment in no way affects the Croton aqueduct board.—Laws of N. Y. (1863), chap. 68. Inasmuch as the removal of the comptroller is possible only "by the governor for cause" (see Ap 14, 1857), a degree of independence is secured for department heads that is deplored by Mayor Gunther (see Ja 4, 1864) and makes him powerless in the case of City Inspector Boole (see O 24 and N 14, 1864).

7 The legislature authorises the city to acquire lands north of 170th St. for another reservoir in connection with the Croton water works and to borrow, by the creation of public stock, a sum not exceeding $200,000 to defray the expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1863), chap. 95.

" Mayor Opdyke presides at a meeting, held in the Academy of Music, in aid of the suffering poor of Ireland. Gen. McClellan and Archbishop Hughes are among the speakers. A committee to solicit subscriptions throughout the city is appointed.—N. Y. Times, Ap 8, 1863.

11 A grand mass meeting of the citizens of New York, "regardless of party affiliation," is held in Union Square. The object of the meeting is "to reiterate in the ears of Southern traitors, and before the eyes of Northern sympathizers, the loyalty of New-York to the Union, its confidence in the Administration, its desire for an aggressive war-policy, its extreme abhorrence of all Confederates and absolute detestation of all Copperheads." Maj.-Gen. Frémont, Postmaster-Gen. Blair, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Times, Ap 12, 1863. See also view of meeting, in Harper's Weekly, VII: 260, 270.

14 The New York Medical College for Women is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1863), chap. 123. For a brief history of the college and a discussion of the early antagonism toward women doctors, see N. Y. Times, Ap 9, 1916; and Ann. Rep., N. Y. Med. College & Hospital for Women (1914), 13.

19 Mayor Opdyke estimates that New York City has contributed to the national treasury, since the opening of the war, at least $400,000,000.—Opdyke, Official Docs., 223.

May Gen. Stonewall Jackson surprises part of Hooker's army in the 2 Wilderness and routs them. After his victory, however, he is fired upon by mistake by his own soldiers and mortally wounded. The next day, the Union troops were again defeated by Lee, in the battle of Chancellorsville.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 260–65.

5 The legislature grants to nine men (named in the act) the privilege "to establish and maintain a ferry from the docks now known as Wilson or Mott's docks, at Mott Haven, in the county of Westchester to the foot of Tenth street, and also to Peck slip" for 25 years. "Safe and skillful persons" must attend the same, and ferriage shall not exceed "seven cents for each and every passenger."—Laws of N. Y. (1863), chap. 499.

9 "The New York Board of Aldermen has decided that two stone piers be erected—one on the East river and another on the North river. . . . New York is behind every important commercial city in the world in the character of her wharves."—Leslie's Weekly, XVI: 99. May 9

Preparations are in progress at the different forts in New York Harbour for the reception of a great number of big guns, now on their way from Pittsburgh to this city.—Leslie's Weekly, XVI: 114. 16

The legislature passes "An Act providing for relief to the indigent families of volunteers and persons who may be ordered into the military service of the United States." In cities, the common council is constituted a "board of relief" with power to grant such relief.—Laws of N. Y. (1863), chap. 514. 17

The 200th anniversary of the birth of Wm. Bradford, the first New York printer, is celebrated under the auspices of the N. Y. Historical Society. During the day, special services are held in his honour in Trinity Church, and a new marble monument is erected over his grave in Trinity churchyard. In the evening there was a large meeting at Cooper Institute, where John Wm. Wallace of Philadelphia, one of Bradford's descendants, made the principal address.—Wallace, An Address at the Celebration by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. . . . of the 200th Birth Day of Mr. Wm. Bradford (1863); Leslie's Weekly, XVI: 162. 20

A Democratic mass convention is held in New York, which adopts resolutions declaring fealty to the Constitution and to the sovereignty of the states and of the people; that under the Constitution there is no power to coerce the states by military force; that the war is contrary to the Constitution and should be put an end to; that the dogma of unlimited submission to the executive branch of the government is unworthy an American citizen; that the banishment of C. L. Vallandigham is cowardly, inhuman, and despotic; and that hostilities should cease and a convention be called to determine the manner of settling differences between the contending sections.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1863), 689; N. Y. Daily News, Je 4, 1863. June 3

The 71st Regiment starts on its third campaign at the front, this time in the vicinity of Harrisburg, Pa.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Je 18, 1863. On account of the draft riots in New York (see Jl 13), it was recalled from the front, arriving on July 18. It remained on duty, detailed at its armory, the state arsenal, Harlem, and High Bridge, until mustered out of service on July 22.—Whittemore, Hist. of the 71st Reg't, 74–78. 17

The 8th Regiment for the third time is called into service, and leaves for the front.—Grand Opening of the New Armory (1890), 22. "

Mayor Opdyke appoints Alderman Boole of the 12th Ward as city inspector, a previous appointment having been rejected by the common council; this second appointment is confirmed.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XC: 709–10, 752. The editor of the Tribune remarks: "His [Boole's] appointment is one that we could not have advised. . . . Boole has brains enough to know that he can do better in the long run by serving our City faithfully than by robbing her; and until he proves the contrary, we shall trust that he means to do the right thing. The sweepings and garbage of this city might be so disposed of as to half defray the cost of street-cleaning; and there is room for great improvements in machinery and transportation."—N. Y. Tribune, Je 25, 1863. 22

Mr. Boole tendered his resignation as alderman, but the board, instead of accepting the same, passed an extraordinary resolution permitting him "to participate in the deliberations . . . until the expiration of the term . . . but without the privilege of voting on any question."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XC: 752, 760–61. Boole was a commanding figure in the board and became the candidate for mayor of the combined Tammany and Mozart Hall Democrats in the December election (see D 1). Horace Greeley characterized him at that time as a man of ability, but "the uniform accomplice, catspaw, convenience, of jobbers and plunderers," the mayoralty candidate of "The Ring," which wants" a Mayor of its own," because it is "inconvenient to have its jobs severally vetoed and their enormous rascality held up to general reprobation in Veto Messages." With a mayor of its own "The Ring" can "gouge the city out of Hundred Thousand after Hundred Thousand by all manner of Lowber, West-Washington, Fort Gansevoort and Japanese jobs, while incurring far less odium than now."—N. Y. Tribune, N 27, 1863. Boole continued to hold office as city inspector despite the appeal of "The Citizens' Association" to Gov. Seymour to remove him (see Je 3, 1864), and despite Mayor Gunther's action in suspending him (see O 24, 1864). His incum-

1863 Je 22 bency ended only with the abolition of the office of city inspector by the legislature in 1866 (q. v., F 26).

29 It is announced that Gov. Seymour is sending forward from New York and Brooklyn 19 regiments armed and equipped for field service, to aid in repelling Lee's invasion of Maryland.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Je 29, 1863.

30 Mr. Roebuck presents a petition to the house of commons "praying the House to enter into negotiations with the great Powers of Europe, with the object of recognising the independence of the Confederate States of America." Long debates were held on the subject, but no action was taken.—Hansard's Parl. Debates, CLXXI: 1771–1841; ibid., CLXXII: 67, 177, 252, 661–73.

" Mayor Opdyke telegraphs to Gov. Seymour that the military force in the city must be strengthened, and asks that Gen. Sandford be authorised to organize new regiments forthwith. This request was made in anticipation of disorder in connection with the draft which was soon to be put in operation.—Opdyke, Official Docs., 259. On the same day, Gov. Seymour took the necessary steps to raise 30 regiments in New York and Brooklyn.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Jl 2, 1863.

July 3 After a three days' battle, Lee's army is defeated at Gettysburg by the Union forces under Gen. Meade, and the Confederate invasion of the North is finally checked.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 282–93. For the part played by New York troops in effecting the Union victory, see Townsend, The Honors of the Empire State in the War of the Rebellion (1889), 93 et seq.

11 The drawing for the draft begins, at the enrolling offices at Third Ave. and 46th St., and on Broadway near 28th St. No difficulty was experienced at either place on this day.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1863), 811–13.

The drawing began in the 22d Ward, in the third sub-division of the 9th Congressional District of New York, of which Capt. Charles E. Jenkins was provost-marshal. About 9 a. m., a large hollow wheel was placed on a platform within the railing. Soon afterwards Capt. Jenkins stepped upon the platform and in a clear voice read his instructions from the president of the United States and from Provost-Marshal Gen. Fry. At 9:45 a. m. George W. Southwick began to turn the wheel. After several turns, Charles H. Carpenter, blindfolded, put his arm into the box and drew out one of the little rolls on which the names of those liable to be drafted had been written. Captain Jenkins opened the ballot and read: William Jones, 46th St. near Tenth Ave. The crowd shouted: "Poor Jones," "Good for Jones," etc. The drawing went on until 4 p. m. with an intermission of an hour at 12.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Jl 13, 1863.

13 A draft riot occurs, beginning at the provost-marshal's headquarters on the corner of Third Ave. and 46th St. (No. 677 Third Ave.), which is set on fire by the mob. Mayor George Opdyke thus describes it:

"I arrived at the Mayor's office on the morning of the 13th, about 10½ o'clock; I had been there not more than fifteen minutes before a messenger arrived stating that there was a serious riot in the upper part of the city; in about five minutes more another messenger came, and said they were demolishing the Provost Marshal's office . . . that the police had been driven back, and Superintendent Kennedy was very seriously injured, and that they had set fire to the premises; thereupon I at once addressed a note to the President of the Police Commissioners, also to General Sandford, and another, soon after, to General Wool; General Sandford came over, and after some conversation on the defenseless condition of the city, in consequence of the regiments having been sent to Pennsylvania to repel the invasion [Lee's invasion—see Jl 3], said he would do the best he could; we mutually agreed that it was best it should be done immediately, that the only way to put down the riot was to meet it in its inception with rigor, and to use no blank cartridges . . . Major-General Wool . . . ordered out what troops he had in the vicinity, and joined me in efforts to collect them from the adjoining country . . . we sent a messenger to the Governor of New Jersey, understanding that there were regiments at Newark; we sent to West Point, to Utica, to Rochester, and to the eastward for a regiment that had just passed through the city. . . . All this time [during the day] the alarm was very general; hundreds came to me saying that their premises were threatened; having no force to protect them, I stated to them very frankly that we had not police and military to meet the rioters actually at work, and it was therefore impossible to defend premises only threatened . . . up to 8 or 10 o'clock that evening we had failed to get the State militia under arms to the extent of more than 700 or 800 men, and there was some uncertainty whether they would be trustworthy; the thing threatening to assume a party aspect, the Commissioners felt unwilling to arm the police without the sanction of the Governor [Gov. Seymour did not reach the city till about noon the next day] . . . meanwhile, during the afternoon, my own dwelling was attacked and there was no police force to protect it, but the eloquence of some of our leading citizens dissuaded the mob and they went away; next morning it was again attacked; no police were there to defend it; . . . my wife and youngest son were driven out and made their escape through the back door into the basement of a neighbor's house; they got into a carriage, were chased by the mob, who shouted murder after them, and came down to where I was."—The Great Libel Case Geo. Opdyke agt. Thurlow Weed (1865), 112–14. July 13

During July 13, the residences of Abolitionists were attacked and burned, and negroes were subjected to brutal treatment, several being put to death. The coloured orphan asylum (see Ap 16, 1838, and D 29, 1842) was burned; the Tribune building was attacked; and the Hudson River and Harlem R. R. tracks were partially torn up. Many buildings were on fire, and only a heavy fall of rain at midnight prevented a general conflagration. The mob held the city from Union Square to Central Park. On the following day the rioting was even worse. Troops collected from West Point, the Navy Yard, and the forts in the harbour, and fighting occurred in Broadway, in Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Aves., and on the cross streets from 27th to 32d St.; also on 42d St. Only word from the government at Washington to suspend the draft in New York and Brooklyn, the announcement of which appeared in the newspapers, checked the riot, which lasted four days. About 1,000 were killed or wounded, and property estimated at $1,000,000 was destroyed.—Rhodes, IV: 321–28; The Metropolitan Police: Their Services During Riot Week, by David M. Barnes (1863); Harper's Mag., Jan., 1867; N. Y. Times, Jl 14–18, 1863. See also Barnes, The Draft Riots of N. Y. (1863), and views and descriptions of riots, in Harper's Weekly, VII: 467, 484, 485, 494.

There were 233 children in the coloured orphan asylum when it was burned, and all their clothing, bedding, and the records of the society were destroyed. The children, under guard, were conducted to the almshouse on Blackwell's Island. The managers afterwards sold the grounds by the city's permission and bought a plot at Tenth Ave. and 143d St., where the corner-stone of a new asylum was laid in August, 1867 (q. v.).—Richmond, N. Y. & Its Institutions, 302; Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 762. The draft was resumed on Aug. 19, 1863 (q. v.).

15 The board of aldermen, in special session, passes an ordinance "to relieve the city of New York from unequal operation of conscription, and to encourage volunteers." It provides that the city shall pay "to the proper officers" the $300 which exempts a drafted person from going into the service in case such person "shall be found to be unable to pay the said sum." A second provision is that the city, in case the drafted person "shall volunteer to serve for three years or the war," shall pay $300 "to such person or for the benefit of his family or relations." An appropriation of $2,500,000 was made to carry these provisions into effect. A further provision is that the corporation counsel "shall take immediate steps" to test the constitutionality of the "Draft Act."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 80–83. See Jl 18.

18 The board of aldermen at another special session adopts the following resolutions: Because of the report that it is Mayor Opdyke's intention to veto the ordinance of July 15 (q. v.), and because "the alarms created by the resistance to the draft in the city are not yet totally allayed," the members present pledge themselves to vote to override such a possible veto "after the expiration of the period of ten days, as required by the Charter."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 88–89. See Jl 27.

27 Mayor Opdyke returns to the aldermen their ordinance of July 15 (q. v.) with his veto. After declaring that the vague wording of the measure would lead to "infinite abuses," and that it violates "the 33d section of the Charter," the mayor has the courage to say: "This [draft] act was passed on the 3d day of March of the present year. The ordinance before me was introduced and passed through both branches of the Common Council on the 15th

1863 July. If there was anything in the act which called for action on July your part, there was ample time after the 3d of March and before
27 the 15th instant to prepare a careful plan, with all proper guards against fraud and abuse. It would seem, therefore, that it was not so much the assumed defects of the act of Congress as the existence of the riot which broke out in this city on the 13th instant [q. v.], which prompted the action of your Honorable Body. Your ordinance was introduced and adopted during the riot, and was calculated to interfere with and partially nullify the law against which the rioters' resistance was made.

"The money it proposes to appropriate was therefore, in effect, a price offered to a lawless mob to desist from further assaults upon the lives and property of our citizens." The mayor adds that "the character of the riot" was not such as to "induce the government of this city to adopt with unusual haste an ordinance not authorized by the charter." He maintains that "the rioters themselves were not, in general, persons liable to be drafted. A great proportion of them were persons under twenty years of age, and many were convicts, thieves, and abandoned characters—the scum of this great city and the hasty importations from other cities. . . . It is impossible to believe that the riot was anything else than the outbreak of traitors who made the draft a pretext for their own crimes, and an occasion for inciting others to become criminals with them. . . . A riot is never to be propitiated, but a riot begun under such circumstances is to be met with nothing but defiance. Any concession to it, real or seeming, is full of danger. For my own part I will have nothing to do with it but to employ whatever power I possess to aid in crushing it at all hazards."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 92–105. Editor Greeley praises the message and says: "We trust that some one will, on the retirement of our present Mayor from office, collect and print in a volume his Veto Messages [see Official Documents, Addresses, Etc., of George Opdyke, pub. in 1866]. So vivid and truthful an exhibit of the corrupt and sordid influences that too generally sway Municipal legislation, but which have reached their acme in this city, has seldom or never been presented."—N. Y. Tribune, Jl 28, 1863. On the other hand Mr. Bennett ridicules the "trash" the mayor has included in his message, declares that his "incompetency is proverbial," and that "the public will hardly give him the credit of possessing sufficient brains to write the message referred to."—N. Y. Herald, Jl 29, 1863.

Friends of Mr. Opdyke, on Jan. 4, 1864, after his retirement from office, tendered him an impromptu reception; on that occasion the chairman declared there was one page in the Opdyke administration deserving "especially illumination," namely that which "records your firm, courageous, and successful actions when, in July last, murder, robbery, and incendiarism, organized by Northern allies of Southern treason, and sustained by ignorance, cowardly depravity, and a savage brutality which would disgrace the hyena, held high carnival in this dishonored city."—Official Documents, Addresses, Etc., of George Opdyke, 362–68.

Aug. 15 The common council again (see Jl 15) passes an ordinance "making additional provision for the families of persons who may volunteer or be drafted." There is a provision for an appropriation of $3,000,000.—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 15, 1863; Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 227. As before, the measure does not meet the mayor's approval. He says "the distribution of money by so large a committee as the Mayor, Controller, and whole Common Council (43 members), would be subject to abuse from want of responsibility." Another objection he offers is that the money "may be paid to men who do not need it, and who may pocket it and not go after all;" further, the ordinance "compels the payment of $300 to every man who gets a substitute, though he may be a millionaire."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 26, 1863. Mr. Greeley declares the argument is unanswerable, and would put the "members of that honorable body [common council] to shame, if they were not long since destitute of that emotion."—Ibid.

17 The mayor and common council agree to tender the freedom and hospitalities of the city to Rear-Admiral David G. Farragut, who is temporarily residing in New York, and to request him to attend at the governor's room in the city hall to receive the congratulations of the municipal authorities and the citizens.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 439–42. See D 31, 1864.

19 The draft, which had been stopped because of the riots (see Jl 13), is resumed.—Fry, N. Y. and the Conscription, 44–45.

" Four "ornamental gas lamps" are ordered placed in front of the city hall to replace four old ones.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXI: 260.

Aug. 19 The draft impels the county board of supervisors to legislation. 28 An ordinance is passed quite different in its tenor from that which emanated from the common council (see Jl 15 and Ag 15). Inasmuch as it is "deemed necessary for the maintenance of public order and the security of its inhabitants" that the city should not lose the services of members of the fire department and of the police force, as well as members of the active militia force of the state in the city, it is provided that the city shall pay for a substitute in case any such member is drafted. Another provision concerns citizens other than those enumerated above who chance to be drafted; if they have dependent families in indigent circumstances limited pecuniary assistance shall be rendered by the city, but only after careful investigation by a committee of the board. In a case "of peculiar hardship," the committee would be authorised to pay the exemption fee for the head of the family. The ordinance carries with it authorisation to borrow $2,000,000 to effect its execution.—Proc., County Bd. of Supervisors (July–Dec., 1863), 215–19. Mayor Opdyke approves the ordinance the same day.—Ibid., 221. Mr. Greeley's comment is: "The Common Council has been subjected to a flank movement. Its conspiracy to defraud the government and defeat the draft is not only checked but checkmated. The Supervisors appear on the stage with a suddenness which is not more dramatic than it is effectual. The apparently hopeless controversy between the Mayor and the Common Council is ended by the complete triumph of the former, and the just vindication of the cause both of the Government and the People, which he represented."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 29, 1863.

Under the caption "TWO MILLION DOLLARS LOAN OF THE CITY 31
OF NEW YORK," the comptroller invites subscriptions. Such a loan is authorised by the board of supervisors and approved by the mayor in connection with "certain citizens . . . who have been or may hereafter be drafted" (see Ag 28).—N. Y. Herald, Ag 31, 1863.

" The common council, "somewhat embarrassed as to the course to pursue by the unexpected action of the Board of Supervisors" (see Ag 28), and believing theirs "the legitimate body to act in the premises," requests the corporation counsel "to inform this Board without delay whether the action taken by the Common Council or the Board of Supervisors is in accordance with the law passed, Chapter 514 of the Laws of 1863" (see My 17).—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 292–93.

Sept. 5 The common council passes resolutions directing the street commissioner to remove the national troops quartered in the public squares and parks of the city, and demanding that the United States pay damages to the city for injuries resulting from the presence of these troops. Mayor Opdyke vetoed these measures.—Oypdyke, Official Docs., 284–85, 311, 314–15; N. Y. Tribune, S 7, 1863. The troops were removed almost immediately, and the federal authorities took steps to restore the property to its condition before their arrival.

The common council overrides the veto of Mayor Opdyke of the ordinance appropriating $3,000,000 "to equalize the Conscription Act" (see Ag 15).—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 365, 402.

" The corporation counsel, in answer to a resolution of inquiry (see Ag 31), communicates to the common council his opinion that "the Supervisors of the county of New York, in which there is no town, have not been vested with any power in regard to the granting of relief" (under chap. 514 of the laws of 1863) to persons who have been drafted. He is informed, he says, that "it is not at all under this law the Supervisors have taken action; but under what they consider the necessity of the case, and a firm conviction that the next Legislature will ratify these proceedings."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 362–64.

12 An injunction from the supreme court is issued against the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty to restrain them from attempting to carry into effect "An ordinance making additional provision for the families of persons who may volunteer or are drafted into the service of the United States" (see S 7).—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 399–404. "This movement does not affect the $2,000,000 exemption ordinance passed by the Supervisors under the approval and concurrence of the Mayor and Controller, and which has thus far been entirely successful in its application to the proper objects of an exemption measure—in exempting members of the Fire Department, New-York State National Guard, Policemen, and the 1863 S 12 heads of families who are in indigent circumstances."—N. Y. Tribune, S 14, 1863. See S 14.

14 The aldermen pass a resolution directing the corporation counsel to take the necessary steps to have the supreme court injunction (see S 12) "dissolved forthwith."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 408. The resolution was vetoed by the mayor (see S 28).

20 The Union army under Gen. Rosecrans is defeated at Chickamauga.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 397–98.

25 The common council resolves that the street commissioner be directed to proceed with the work of improving and regulating Mt. Morris Square, as soon as the present lessee of a portion of the square surrenders his claim to the premises according to agreement (see D 12, 1861).—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXI: 296. See 1867.

28 The aldermen receive from Mayor Opdyke a message vetoing their resolution (see S 14) which sought to dissolve an injunction from the supreme court restraining the city magistracy from carrying into effect the draft relief ordinance (see Ag 15). "If that ordinance should be carried into effect," says the mayor, "it could not fail . . . to add largely to the burdens of our tax-payers, and at the same time obstruct rather than aid the Government in its efforts to procure the recruits so urgently needed to replenish our armies." The ordinance of the board of supervisors (see Ag 28) "appropriates one million dollars less" and "affords relief in every case in which it seems proper for the public authorities to grant it."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 528–30. The resolution was repassed over the mayor's veto by the aldermen on Oct. 16 (ibid., XCII: 172–73), and by the councilmen on Oct. 20 (N. Y. Tribune, O 21, 1863).

" The aldermen concur with the councilmen in directing the street commissioner to estimate the damage done to "the parks and public places . . . formerly occupied [see S 5] by the military forces of the United States . . . to the end that proper steps may be taken to have said damages, and the cost of putting the same in a proper condition, repaid to the corporation."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCI: 559. This measure was vetoed by Mayor Opdyke on Oct. 8 (q. v.).

30 A large Union mass meeting is held at Cooper Institute. Speeches are made by Sen. Morgan, Vice-Pres. Hamlin, Admiral Farragut, Gen. Cochrane, and others.—N. Y. Times, O 1, 1863. A similar meeting took place on Oct. 16.—Ibid., O 17, 1863. The last rally of loyal citizens prior to the election was held on Oct. 29.—Ibid., O 30, 1863.

Oct. 8 Mayor Opdyke, in vetoing the resolution of the common council of Sept. 28, says he has "good reason to believe" the presence of the soldiers has saved us "from a repetition of the scenes of arson, pillage, and murder which characterized the riot in July last" (see Jl 13). He speaks of the damage as "comparatively trifling," and declares that the "good and orderly conduct" of the soldiers was "the theme of high commendation from their superior officers and the citizens generally."—Official Documents, Addresses, Etc., of George Opdyke (1866), 319–20.

9 "There has been no result of the war so extraordinary, and so unlooked for, as its effect on the cities of the North. Those of us who remember—and who does not?—the pathetic earnestness with which previous to the secession movement, our Pro-Southern Democrats warned us all that if the South left us, our towns would go to decay, the grass grow in our streets, and our ships rot at the wharves, must witness the actual condition of things with a good deal of amusement. One superstition, in particular, which was deeply rooted in the minds of the denizens of Tammany and Mozart Halls—that the hotels of the North were all kept up by Southern planters and 'merchants'—must, by this time, have received a tolerably severe blow. There has probably been hardly a Southern planter seen in the North for the last two years, or a Southern merchant, unless Hambleton, of blackmail fame, be entitled to that designation; and yet we believe the hotels are at present fairly patronized. There are few of them which do not turn away every day nearly as many guests as they receive. Even the New-York Hotel, the very headquarters of plantocracy, and which ought to be ashamed to survive the outbreak of the war, manages to flourish as bravely upon the greenbacks of the Northern customers as ever it did on the gold and silver of the South. The demand for houses, too, is unprecedented. There are none to rent, and few for sale, and the tide of population, nevertheless, continues to pour into every one of our great towns with undiminished impetuosity."—N. Y. Times, O 9, 1863.

Oct. 12 The common council has before it for consideration a memorial of John Randel, Jr., who, when a young man, in 1807 (q. v., Ap 3), was appointed by the commissioners on city plan as chief engineer, and was responsible for the "Randel Maps." He now proposes to reproduce those maps, at four times their original scale, "with the addition of his original field notes of the courses, distances, angles, &c., of fences bounding real estate, written down in their proper places." The committee of arts and sciences emphatically commends the proposal, believing the city government should "perfect that which was so judiciously begun by their predecessors more than fifty years ago, thereby furnishing to posterity a perfect map of the city." The "field notes," which Mr. Randel has copyrighted, "themselves are worth what he estimates will be the entire cost of the work," namely, $73,600, an expense that "will be spread over years of time" (seven years being Mr. Randel's estimate). The committee also declares that the advantages of such a work "are almost beyond computation; interminable litigations would be avoided by making certain and beyond dispute what is now in doubt and uncertainty, and one of the most fruitful sources of the most bitter and worst contested law-suits. All litigation saved saves the time of the courts and the money of the city."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCII: 116–20. However, the measure was defeated by the board of aldermen.—Ibid., XCII: 278–79. Randel's "field notes" are now preserved in the N. Y. H. S. (see Vol. III: 565).

17 The board of brokers, it is said, has purchased a piece of property on Broad St., for the purpose of building a new stock exchange of larger size than the present one. The new building will have entrances on Wall, New, and Broad Sts.—Leslie's Weekly, XVII: 51.

21 The ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the new Academy of Design on the n. w. cor. of 23d St. and Fourth Ave. takes place at 3 p. m. Addresses are made by Wm. Cullen Bryant, Geo. Bancroft, and others.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, O 22, 1863. Peter B. Wight is the architect of the building.—N. Y. Times, O 22, 1863. See also L. M. R. K., III: 957. The building was opened on April 27, 1865 (q. v.).

26 The "Committee on Substitutes and Relief," appointed from the county board of supervisors to assist in carrying out the ordinance of Aug. 28 (q. v.), renders a report. They declare that they acted upon the principle that "the Government wanted men and not money in their stead; that the armies of the Union were to be filled up; that the war was to be prosecuted with untiring vigor; that with well filled ranks our Grand Divisions must march on to victory after victory, until the rebellion was finally crushed and the Union restored to its original status." In the prosecution of their labours they found that "a poor man who had been enrolled seemed to have formed the idea that he had but to appear before your Committee, relate his history and go free," that a member of the militia thought "he had only to bring his warrant or commission to be relieved," that a policeman or fireman need only show "they had been appointed such, and the conscript's badge would fall to the ground." It was only "after a thorough examination under oath, as to the correctness of his several statements, certified to and vouched for by one or more respectable persons, also under oath," that a person was declared entitled to relief, and as a regular thing this relief "involved the furnishing of a substitute."

The committee reports the total number relieved as 1,888, of whom 95 were policemen, 419 firemen, 576 militiamen, and 798 indigent; of this number, four finally "elected to go to the War," and in the case of 1,785, substitutes were furnished. The report closes with a complete list of the names of persons relieved.—Proc., County Bd. of Supervisors (July–Dec., 1863), Doc. 11.

— In this year, the Progress Club, a Jewish organization, was founded. It was incorporated in 1865. In March, 1890, it opened its club-house at the north-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 63d St.—King's Handbook (1893), 551; L. M. R. K., III: 938. The club is now (1926) at 88th St. and Central Park West.

— In the Eighth Annual Report of the Board of Com'rs of the Central Park (1864), pp. 45–46, a "Central Park Guide," with map, was first published, in which the various gates were designated as the "Scholars' Gate," "Merchants' Gate," "Artizans' Gate," etc. This designation was continued in some of the later reports, and then discontinued.

— A view of Central Park, drawn by H. Geissler and lithographed by Henry C. Eno, dates from this year; it is reproduced as Pl. 151, Vol. III.

— About this time, a lithograph of Printing House Square was made by Endicott & Co. and published by Baker & Godwin. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 152-b, Vol. III.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1864, were published the following map and views: map of N. Y. City, County and vicinity, frontispiece; old Half Way House, at junction of Broadway, Eighth Ave. and 59th St., 40; terrace, Central Park, 72; old house, cor. Houston and Cannon Sts., formerly part of Delancey estate, 128; old shanties, cor. Ludlow and Delancey Sts., 160; the N. Y. State soldiers' depot, at 50–52 Howard St. (5 views), 164, 166 (bis), 168, 170; former residence of John Jacob Astor, on 88th St., near East River (where Washington Irving wrote Astoria), 208; Union home and school for soldiers' children, on 58th St., near Eighth Ave., 352; the Varian tree in Broadway, bet. 26th and 27th Sts., 552; the Fifth Ward Museum Hotel, cor. W. Broadway and Franklin St., 598; the public room in this hotel, 602; residence of John Edwards, west side of Green St. near Spring St., 766; and old frame houses at cor. of Water and Jackson Sts., 793.

Jan. 4 Mayor Gunther sends his first annual message to the common council. He deems the machinery of the city government "vast and intricate," and finds no adequate means under his control "to check the grossest irregularities, or secure an adequate protection to health, comfort, and property." The subdivision of functions, he says, and the "severance of the tie of responsibility among the parts, have naturally led to extravagance and the multiplication of offices. Bodies, independent of control in their power to draw and expend money from the city treasury, will seldom hesitate to exercise the same without regard to the maxims of frugality, and will usually provide for their personal and political friends to the utmost extent of public forbearance." He is sure clerical aid in the city offices could be "employed to better advantage;" the aid required "in a single city Department will nearly suffice to perform the business in all the others in addition to its own."

The mayor advocates the removal of slaughter-houses entirely from the island, "as its entire area must before many years be required for dwellings, when, if not now, the Abattoirs will be regarded as nuisances." He is also concerned about the congestion of traffic, which has been increased by the recent introduction of "heavy trucks . . . drawn by two horses;" he recommends a revision of the ordinances "relative to the licensing of vehicles," a limit to be fixed to "the size of trucks," the investigation of "the prices charged by all carriers, including expressmen," and that policemen detailed as inspectors "see that hacks and coaches contain the tariff of fares in view of the passengers." Jan. 4

Mayor Opdyke's recommendation to sell the markets, ferries, wharves, piers, and slips, and therewith pay off a large part of the city debt, does not appeal to the new mayor. The fact that the income from these sources is "disproportionately small," he says, "shows defects in the present mode of management, but does by no means demonstrate the expediency of giving into private hands the ownerships and control over this valuable, though perhaps much mismanaged, public property."

The mayor assumes a pessimistic tone when he says: "More than twenty years ago one of my predecessors complained of the encroachments of the State Government. There is left so little to encroach on, that some might consider it advantageous to abolish altogether the city government and transfer the seat of administration to Albany. It is there that the appropriations are finally determined, the tenure of office fixed, and the question decided who shall and who shall not live upon the proceeds of city taxation. . . . The Mayor is in theory intrusted with a supervision over the Executive Departments, but that supervisory action which is exerted over officers completely independent is a nullity. . . . The Mayor may call on the Departments to report to him their acts, but they may do so or not at their pleasure. He may enter his protest against the legislative acts of the Common Council or the Supervisors, but the result will probably be only to swell the bills for printing his objections in the newspapers." (The repeated passage of ordinances over Mayor Opdyke's veto is undoubtedly the basis for the last statement.) The mayor concludes: "To combat corruption and fraud, and prevent by my influence, and in every honorable way, a continuance of those abuses which have been perpetrated on the rights and patience of the public, will be my constant endeavor. I entertain the hope that I may secure your co-operation to this end, and thus with you obtain the approval of my fellow-citizens."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCIII: 11–31.

Most of the mayor's recommendations appeal to Mr. Greeley as "judicious and well-timed;" particularly does he like the "idea of removing the Abattoirs or slaughtering establishments entirely from our City." He regrets, however, that the new mayor does not concur with the former incumbent regarding the sale of the markets, etc., asserting that "our Markets are tumble-down abominations that at once tax and shame us; because they belong to the municipality and are managed by office-holders." The chief market business, he says, "is done at the Washington—a square acre or so of shanties and hovels that would disgrace Abomey or Timbucto. We ought to have a lofty, spacious, beautiful, cleanly commodious chief market; we should have if the City would sell out and let the Market business regulate itself."—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 5, 1864.

Committees of citizens and cartmen send a memorial to the legislature asking that there be no further extension of railroads in the city until a commission shall be appointed to inquire into the state of transit facilities, and protect the residential streets from the further encroachment of car lines. There were at the time eight railroads in the city, three of them with steam-power and the rest operated by horse-power.—Memorial in Relation to Railroads in the City of N. Y. Mar. —

The remains of the Pitt statue (see Ap 26, 1847) are presented to the N. Y. Hist. Society.—From the records of the society. There they still remain (1926), bearing a card with this inscription: 1

"This Statue was erected by the Colony of New York, Sept. 7, 1770, at the intersection of Wall and William Streets. It was mutilated by the British Soldiers, soon after their occupation of the City in 1776.

1864 Mar. 21 The Metropolitan Railway Co., projected by Hugh B. Willson, is incorporated under the Railroad Act of 1850. A few days later, a bill was introduced in the state senate to give this company the right to build an underground railroad in Broadway from the Battery to 34th St. and then under Sixth Avenue to Central Park. This project, apparently the first suggestion for a subway in the city, was reported unfavourably by the senate committee on April 8, and such report was adopted.—Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 10–13; Plans & Proposals of the Manhattan Ry. Co. (1866), 3; Leslie's Weekly, XVIII: 34. For comment on this, see Ap 11.

Apr. 4 The Metropolitan Fair, in aid of the U. S. sanitary commission, opens, with elaborate ceremonies, in the 22d Regiment armory on West 14th St. and in another building on the north side of Union Square. It netted over $1,000,000.—*N. Y. 11 "The defeat of the Underground Railroad in the Legislature [see Mr 21], coupled as it was with the rejection of Mayor Gunther's proposal to compel the street railroads to pay 10 percent. of their receipts to the city treasury, is a fresh and alarming illustration of the enormous power over our property and comfort which is now wielded by the omnibus proprietors, railroad corporations and political jobbers. The Legislature on which we have been in the habit of relying seems to have surrendered itself completely to their hands.

"The Underground Railroad promised to be an immense boon to the city. It was perfectly feasible; a similar road has been in successful operation in London for one year; it encroaches on no vested interest; takes no one's land or house; interferes with no traffic or thoroughfare; offers cheap, comfortable and speedy transit from one end of the island to the other; requires no money from the public, will add nothing to municipal taxation and is undertaken by men of the highest character and standing both social and commercial. In short, there is not a single objection to be made to it on the part of the public or the Government, and yet the Committee of the Senate has reported against it, under the lead of a Senator from this city, and it has been laid on the table, for what reason is not stated. We wonder how much longer the people of this city will permit themselves to be thus plundered by men who are ostensibly their servants and dependents."—N. Y. Times, Ap 11, 1864; Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 13–14. See Ap 7, 1865.

12 A "Map of Kip's bay farm" is published bearing this date: "Showing the original farm lines, subdivisions into lots and parcels and the old streets and the present streets and avenues. May 18 The Journal of Commerce and the World are suppressed by order of Pres. Lincoln, and their editors are ordered arrested. The two papers printed a bogus presidential proclamation intimating that Union affairs were in a desperate state and calling for 500,000 more troops. The Herald printed it in part of its edition, but suppressed it on finding it a forgery. When the authors of the proclamation, Joseph Howard and F. A. Mallison, were discovered and arrested, the editors were freed by the president's order.—Eve. Post, My 18–22, 1864; N. Y. Times, My 19–22, 25, Je 14 and 29, 1864.

June 3 "The Citizens Association" (see 1863) applies to Gov. Seymour to remove City Inspector Boole. R. B. Roosevelt, secretary of the association, argues that $180,000 has been expended unnecessarily to dispose of the city's ashes and garbage during the past year, an offer of a respectable citizen to do it "free of cost" having been rejected; that Mr. Boole employed, in the months prior to the charter election in which he was a mayoralty candidate (see D 1, 1863), 250 men to do the work 10 men had done before, 150 of whom were dismissed after the election; and also that 45 of the number now on the payroll "draw their pay, but perform no other service for the city." The "new system of street cleaning" introduced by Mr. Boole is thus graphically described: "First comes a notice distributor, then a bell ringer, then the cart, then another bell ringer, then another cart, and then a special inspector to watch the two carts. They march down to the dumping grounds, and there they find, or probably don't find, an inspector and assistant inspector, and probably a special assistant, who keeps a liquor store near by, and has political influence. Thus we have nine or ten men to the two carts, and this is the present admirable system of spending the people's money."

Another speech in support of the charges against the city inspector is made by Thomas N. Carr, who was a subordinate officer in the department during the first months of Mr. Boole's term. Among other things Mr. Carr states that "one-third at least of the last affidavits sent in by Boole are perjuries and frauds," that "not a disinterested person has ventured his reputation in behalf of the delinquent official." "First came members of the Board of Aldermen: to save the City Inspector was to save themselves. Between the members of the Board of Aldermen and the heads of the several departments, there exists the strongest fraternal feeling. These men are indebted for their places to bargains made with the Board. . . . It was by bargain that the present City Inspector obtained his place [see Je 22, 1863]. It was bargain that enabled him to fill his department with useless employees, with salaries from $600 to $2,750. It was bargain that gave to him the unchecked control of hundreds of thousands of dollars. It was bargain that gave to the Board . . . the patronage of that department, and these mutual and pecuniary obligations make it not only a necessity, but an act of self-preservation with that body to pronounce, as innocent, a man whose guilt is too clearly established by the mass of evidence. . . . Our Aldermen call themselves the representatives of the people, and guardians of the public, but, as a general rule, they only represent a system that seeks for its end their own enrichment, and they are the public guardians only over the plunder which they extort from the people. . . . Following these men, came street-sweeping contractors, cash and dirt freighters, who, with the City Inspector, are engaged in operating upon the treasury."—Citizens' Association of New York, Miscellaneous Publications, Vol. I.

Under the caption "The Augean Enterprise" Mr. Greeley writes: "The Citizens' Association have resolutely asaulted, with good prospect of future abatement, those innumerable civic abuses about which there has been so much writing and talking and fretting for so many years. . . . For years we have suffered City Hall swindling and street smells, and we all said, If these men or those men, if men of property and standing, would only come forward and inaugurate a reform we should no longer suffer under these rascalities and reproaches. Unfortunately, the men did not come forward. Fortunately, the evil at length reached such a hight that honest men, who wish to live in New-York and to invest their money here, have been forced to make their influence felt. . . . They not only seek to diminish taxation, but a frightful waste of human life. They would renovate not only the Municipal offices, but thousands of homes which are full of squalor and disease and wretchedness. . . . We pay nearly $500,000 annually for cleaning the streets, and as our noses, and our lungs, and our graveyards testify, they are not cleaned, but left to be trodden in discomfort by thousands and tens of thousands all walking to most untimely tombs. . . . People say that the City is too unclean ever to be made clean. The Citizens' Association say it is not."—

1864 June 3 N. Y. Tribune, Je 3, 1864. Gov. Seymour took no action to remove the city inspector, and the next move was Mayor Gunther's (see O 20).

9 A special committee to investigate charges against school trustees in the Fourth Ward makes its report to the board of education. It has been found that "early in the present year a perfect system was inaugurated by a majority of the Trustees of the Ward to extort money from School Teachers and others in their employ." This "ring" took advantage of the erection of a new school building in the ward to sell the teaching positions therein "to the highest bidders," the amounts paid "varying from $50 to $600, according to the position sought." The principal appointed to the new school was the clerk of the "ring" and performed his duty "with alacrity and with a heartlessness worthy of the employers." This system, declares the committee, "brings lasting injury and disgrace on our school system and our city, and particularly on the citizens of the Fourth Ward, whose children are suffering through the gross mismanagement of these corrupt public servants, who have violated their oath of office and the common feelings of humanity." Resolutions are recommended removing from office seven trustees, as well as the principal and four other teachers, these latter having acted "in a manner disreputably and discreditably to themselves as teachers." The name, also, of Felix Murphy, a member of the board of education and ex officio a trustee of the fourth ward, is recommended to be stricken from the rolls. The report of the committee is adopted unanimously.—Jour., Bd. of Ed. (1864), 165–70; Wholesale Corruption! Sale of Situations in Fourth Ward Schools, Citizens' Ass'n of N. Y. Misc. Publications, II, doc. 19; N. Y. Tribune, Je 11, 1864 (covering testimony given during the investigation).

Greeley makes comment: "The wonder is not that the keepers of low grogshops should sell offices, but that such men should be put in positions where they can have any offices to sell. Such a question should be raised above and beyond the influence of party politics, and the people taught—as even the most ignorant and misled no doubt can be—that, for the sake of their children and the privilege of education, which none are so benighted as to despise, a system in which such abuses can exist must needs be reformed. There can be little hope for the future of a community which can quietly tolerate such a state of things as this report exposes, and no limit to the mischief that may follow unless it is corrected in time."—N. Y. Tribune, Je 11, 1864.

18 Thurlow Weed, editor of the Albany Evening Journal, makes serious charges against ex-Mayor Opdyke as a war profiteer, one statement being: "This man has made more money by secret partnerships in army cloth, blankets, clothing, and gun contracts, than any fifty sharpers, Jew or Gentile, in the city of New York."—Albany Eve. Jour., Je 18, 1864. At the time of the draft riots (see Jl 13, 1863) the mayor "was said to be interested in the manufactory of guns for the government. The mob made this factory the object of their special vengeance, and utterly destroyed it, together with all its contents. . . . A claim was made upon the county for the loss of this property and the Board of Supervisors allowed it."—The Great Libel Case, Geo. Opdyke agt. Thurlow Weed (1865), 7. In another article in the June 25 issue, Mr. Weed imputed to the mayor the selling of the office of surveyor of the port for $10,000.—Albany Eve. Jour., Je 25, 1864. Mr. Opdyke brought suit against Mr. Weed for libel, and the case came before the supreme court on Dec. 13 (q. v.).

July 1 The committee on national affairs is directed "to procure for the use of the Keeper of the City Hall, to be displayed from said building, a full set of flags, including State, City, and National flags, and pennants."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXII: 213.

25 Mr. Lindsay asks, in the house of commons, "If, considering the great sacrifice of life and property occasioned by the war still raging between the United States of America and the Confederate States, and considering the loss the people of this Country have suffered by the war, it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government, in concert with the other Powers of Europe, to use their endeavours to bring about a suspension of hostilities?" Viscount Palmerston answered that the government thought it was useless to propose mediation.—Hansard's Parl. Debates, CLXXVI: 2018–19.

22 Prompted by evidence presented by Henri Dunant, a Swiss gentleman who had observed and lectured upon the inadequate care available for wounded soldiers at the battle of Solferino (June 24, 1859), the "Society of Public Utility," of Geneva, held a meeting in Feb., 1863, to consider "a proposition relative to the formation of permanent societies for the relief of wounded soldiers." This was followed by an international convention in Geneva in Aug., 1864, in which the "Geneva Treaty," signed on Aug. 22, established a permanent international committee, with headquarters at Geneva, and adopted a fundamental plan of permanent national relief societies. It adopted as its sign or badge a red cross on a white ground, to be worn on the arm by all persons acting with or in the service of the committees enrolled under the convention. This was the origin of "The Red Cross." There are no "members of the Red Cross," but only members of societies whose sign it is. There is no "Order of the Red Cross." On March 1, 1882, the United States acceded to the Treaty of Geneva.—The Red Cross, by Clara Barton (Wash., 1898). Aug. 22

Mayor Gunther transmits to the common council copies of affidavits substantiating charges that certain offices in the department of City Inspector Boole (see Je 22, 1863) were "put up for sale" and "actually purchased for sums varying from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars each."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCVI: 118–19. The city inspector made answer on Oct. 24 (q. v.). 20

City Inspector Boole, in a letter to the board of aldermen, declares the mayor's charges against him "ridiculous," and says that officer is "actuated by a cowardly and contemptible vindictiveness" towards him. He defies him "to prove one iota reflecting upon the honesty and efficiency with which the affairs of this Department have been conducted." 24

At the same meeting of the board a communication is received from the mayor suspending from office the city inspector. Nine reasons are given including the following:

1. Mr. Boole has caused a loss to the city of about $188,000 in neglecting to accept or bring before the common council a written proposal "to remove free of cost to the city its dirt, ashes, and garbage."

2. The names of 88 persons are found on the payrolls of his department who either "had no existence or could not be satisfactorily identified by Mr. Boole."

3. During the first year of Mr. Boole's administration he has expended about $800,000 "for work that under his immediate predecessor" cost but $414,000.

Mr. Boole's power with the board is so great that that body immediately questions the mayor's power to suspend and requests an opinion from the corporation counsel.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCVI: 128–30, 135–38. Mr. Bennett comments: "Gunther raises an awful dust in the Inspector's department; Boole raises a dust in the streets; but refuses to take up the gauntlet which the Mayor has thrown down. Boole in short refuses to be moved under any provocation; but Gunther attempts to move him out of office by an order of suspension, which the City Inspector takes no notice of, and continues to sweep the streets indefatigably, paying far more attention to the dirt than to the Mayor."—N. Y. Herald, O 25, 1864. See N 14.

1864 Nov. 2 Wm. H. Seward, secretary of state, informs Mayor Gunther that he has information from the British provinces that a conspiracy is on foot to set fire to the principal cities of the north on the night of election day.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1864), 584. See N 4 and 25.

4 Maj.-Gen. Butler arrives from Fortress Monroe and takes command of New York City. On the Monday preceding the election, 7,000 soldiers arrived under command of Maj. Hawley. On election day they were placed on steamers which were stationed at various places opposite the Battery and in the North and East Rivers. They were within call on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, and could be marched to any point in the city within half an hour.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1864), 584.

8 Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson, the Republican candidates, are elected president and vice-president, defeating George B. McClellan and George H. Pendleton, Democrats.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., IV: 538–39; McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 121–30.

14 The corporation counsel communicates to the board of aldermen his opinion that neither the mayor nor the common council has the power "to suspend a head of department" (see O 24).—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCVI: 187–90. So City Inspector Boole remained in office. The Citizens' Association tried unsuccessfully, in 1865, to get the new chief executive, Gov. Fenton, to remove him, but the end was secured only by a charter amendment abolishing the city inspector's office, Feb. 26, 1866 (q. v.). Despite the protest of the Citizens' Association (ibid., CI: 155) the common council reimbursed Boole (see F 12, 1866) "for legal disbursements" in his defense "of charges against him as City Inspector."—Ibid., CI: 370–71.

15 An editorial in the Herald speaks disparagingly "of the persons now seeking nominations for the offices of Aldermen and Councilmen," declaring that we could "improve our city government by importing nine first class burglars from Sing Sing to fill the vacant seats in the Board of Aldermen, together with twenty-four common pickpockets from the same institution to act as our high and mighty Board of Councilmen for the next year." The candidates include "notorious baggage smashers, bounty jumpers, fighting men, shysters, pocketbook droppers, gamblers, fancy men, policy dealers, loafers, bounty swindlers, watch stuffers, and vagabonds generally." The editor thinks "a respectable, non-partisan commission, to be appointed by the State for the government of this metropolis," might be "a decided improvement on the present system, under which we have been so long plundered and disgraced."—N. Y. Herald, N 15, 1864.

Dec. 13 The libel suit, George Opdyke vs. Thurlow Weed (see Je 18), comes before the supreme court for trial. 24 Mr. Bennett devotes a column to a proposed "Reorganization of the City Government." He advocates a mayor elected annually, with a salary of $20,000, and with power "to appoint, and to remove for cause [for Mayor Gunther's helplessness, see N 14], all the heads of departments." With all the subordinates "responsible to the heads of department," and these heads "responsible to the mayor," and the latter "responsible to the people;" then, if anything goes wrong in any department, the mayor is immediately called upon to explain and correct the abuse. "The Mayor sends for the head of the department at fault. The head of the department picks out the guilty subordinate and punishes him. That ends the evil and the complaint. If, on the other hand, the head of the department refuses to reform the matter complained of, then the Mayor removes him at once. If the mayor should refuse to do that, then in the course of a few months the people would turn out the Mayor at the yearly election." The belief is expressed that "the people can be relied upon to elect an honest Mayor, and that the best men in the city would be ready to take the office at its increased salary." —N. Y. Herald, D 24, 1864.

Dec. 24 The mayor and the board of aldermen approve a resolution of 31 the board of councilmen voting the "Freedom and hospitalities of the City of New York" to Vice-Admiral David G. Farragut and Capt. Percival Drayton, who are at present in the city.—N. Y. H. S. Collections (1885), 442. Farragut had previously been voted the freedom on Aug. 17, 1863 (q. v.).

9 Mayor Gunther communicates to the common council his annual message. At the outset he expresses his conviction that the city government is "fundamentally defective," observing that "the functions and importance of the Common Council have been year by year abridged and diminished." As one prominent cause for this he cites the common council's bicameral arrangement and advocates a single board instead. He declares it to be "notorious that combinations have existed for years in our legislative bodies in this city, for the most shameful and mercenary ends that selfishness could prompt or corruption carry out," the only remedy for which is an "absolute veto" of the executive. Then again, the power of removal properly belongs "in the hands of an officer on the spot [cf. Editor Bennett's suggestion of Dec. 24, 1864] rather than in those of the Governor, whose varied duties can scarcely enable him to give timely attention to charges of corruption, negligence or misconduct."

Later in his message the mayor calls attention to the "increasing number of large one and two horse trucks, which under the present regulation, only pay the same amount as carts;" a "judicious system of rules and license fees" is necessary. The mayor deprecates the "puerile jealousy" that exists in reference to the police; he would have that department "perform all the duties of health wardens, inspectors of meats, and similar functions, which they would discharge more efficiently than the present officials, and save the city a great and very needless expense." Another way to diminish expense that he recommends is to hold the charter election at the same time as the general election, declaring: "If the object of the separation is to exclude local matters from the influence of State and general politics, it is notoriously a failure."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., XCVII: 30–50. The message receives scant praise from either the Tribune or Herald. Mr. Bennett takes the opportunity to reiterate his suggestion of Dec. 24, 1864 (q.v.) as to how to improve the city's government, without calling attention, however, to the striking similarity between Mayor Gunther's plan and his own. Mr. Greeley is confident the charter needs amending, but thinks that "everybody outside the Mayor's office and the Board will agree . . . that it is fortunate, at this moment, that no more power is lodged in their hands."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 10, 1865; N. Y. Tribune, same date.

10 The N. Y. State senate appoints a committee to investigate the following departments in the city of New York: tax commissioners' department, city inspector's department, street department, comptroller's department, Croton aqueduct department, and surrogate's office; also, to examine the past proceedings of the board of supervisors of the county of New York. A resolution introduced in the senate near the close of the session empowering the committee "to sit after adjournment and hear further proof" was lost.—Senate Docs. (1865), Vol. II, No. 38. 6 The Chamber of Commerce sends a memorial to the legislature, "asking its action towards the completion of the Battery Extension, and to devise a plan by which the piers and wharves of the City shall be kept in order, and revenue yielded to the City from the rent of the same." The whole subject of encroachments on the harbour, "and especially that known as the Battery Extension," was reviewed in this memorial, and the bill recommended was afterwards passed, placing the control of this alteration in the water front in the hands of the pilot commissioners of this city, the object being to push the work to early completion. The memorialists stated that in 1859 there was "an alarming report that vessels had struck upon the shoal of the Battery, where there was supposed to be ample depth of water;" and, further, that one "needs only to ask of any New York merchant, pilot or sailor of the now passing generation, and to compare the harbor as it was previous to 1815, when at every wharf water was at all seasons abundant, and sailing vessels starting from them beat out to sea unaided by the now inevitable steam-tug, with the present intricate and dangerous navigation, when even steamers with their power and independence, often hang off the point of the Battery for a half-hour, waiting an opportunity to pass from one river to the other." Regarding the character of the improvement, it was proposed "to transfer the present Barge Office to the Battery, where a handsome building, similar in character to that of the Union Ferry Company, will be erected by the Government for revenue purposes, and a large basin will be made, which will furnish accommodation to the numerous barges and small boats for a landing."—*Rep. of a Special Com. of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. The wires of the Western Union Telegraph Co. are connected with the Pacific Line, and direct communication is established between New York and San Francisco, a distance of 4,000 miles.—Leslie's Weekly, XX: 3. 5

All that part of Hamilton Square lying between Third and Fourth Aves., 66th and 69th Sts., is set apart as a parade-ground for the first division of the N. Y. S. N. G., and the street commissioner is directed to have it properly graded for the purpose.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 84. See Ap 16, 1866. For a history of the parade-grounds of the city, see 13th Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs of Central P'k (1869), 154–58. 6

Commissioners are appointed for erecting a public market on the land bounded by 16th and 17th Sts., Ave. C and the East River.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 120. 15

The legislature orders that 90th, 91st, 92d, and 93d Sts., formerly part of Observatory Place, as laid down on the Commissioners' Map of 1811, be extended from Fourth to Fifth Aves. Observatory Place is thus abolished.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 135; L. M. R. K., III: 971. "

The legislature directs that all original documents bearing date prior to and inclusive of the year 1699 which are now deposited in the several public offices of the city and county of New York shall hereafter be preserved in the city clerk's office, and that he shall have copies and translations thereof made to be filed in the offices from which the said records shall be taken.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 171. 22

The old volunteer fire department, long the object of much thoroughly deserved criticism, is abolished, by an act of the legislature, and the "Metropolitan Fire District," which includes both New York and Brooklyn, is established. The control of the new paid department is put in the hands of four commissioners appointed by the governor. Firemen are hereafter to wear uniforms and badges.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 249; N. Y. Times, Mr 31, 1865. See also descrips. of Pl. 96, III: 586, and Pl. 143-b, III: 713. The amended charter of April 30, 1873, took the control of the fire department from the governor and gave it to the mayor.—Laws of N. Y. (1873), chap. 335. 1865 Mr 30 chap. 12. The organization of the new department was completed by Nov. 3 (q. v.).

Apr. 2 Gen. Lee evacuates Richmond. It was immediately occupied by the Union forces.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., V: 114–20.

6 The name of Hoboken St., from Washington St. to West St., is changed to Canal St.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXIII: 92.

7 A bill to permit the Metropolitan Railway Co. (see Mr 21, 1864) to build an underground road in New York City is passed by the state senate. It was passed by the assembly on April 27, but was vetoed by Gov. Fenton on May 20.—Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 30–35. See My 22.

Apr. 8 Prominent citizens of New York draw up an address to Pres. Lincoln congratulating him on the recent victories of the Union armies.—N. Y. Times, Ap 10, 1865.

9 Gen. Lee surrenders the army of Northern Virginia to Gen. Grant at Appomattox Court House, and the Civil War virtually ends.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., V: 123–30. News of the surrender reached New York at 11:30 p. m. On April 10, the city was gaily decorated with flags and bunting, cannon were fired, and a grand "Te Deum" was sung at Trinity Church.—N. Y. Times, Ap 10 and 11, 1865. The entire North was filled with rejoicing,—soon to be turned to horror and sadness.—See III: 747, and Ap. 14.

CHAPTER VII

B.—PERIOD OF POLITICAL AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

1865–1876

1865 Apr. 14 PRESIDENT LINCOLN is shot by John Wilkes Booth in Washington.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 15 and 16, 1865. The funeral was held in the White House on April 18. On April 19, funeral observances were held in New York, and April 20 was set apart as a day of national fasting and humiliation. The funeral cortege left Washington on the morning of Friday, the 21st, and, after stops at Baltimore, Harrisburg, and Philadelphia, arrived at New York on the morning of the 24th, enroute to Springfield, Ill. The ferry-boat "Jersey City" transported the party across North River, to the foot of Desbrosses St., and, with the escort of the 7th Regiment, a procession accompanied the hearse to the city hall. The coffin was placed on a catafalque erected in the wide space opposite the principal entrance to the governor's room. Visitors were admitted to the Park through the gate near the register's office; thence passing through the eastern basement door, two abreast; and thence, along the corridors, to the stairs in the rotunda; thence up the stairs, turning to the right, passing in front of the catafalque; thence down and out through the rear door. About 120,000 people thus passed the body during the 24 hours it remained here. Funeral obsequies were held on April 25, when a procession moved from the city hall to the Hudson River R. R. depot. At the close of the municipal procession, the citizens of New York held a meeting in Union Square, where Gov. King presided, prayer being offered by Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D. D., and an oration by Hon. George Bancroft, with other ceremonies. During the period immediately preceding and following the ceremonies at New York, the city was in deep mourning, many private as well as public buildings being draped in black.—The Obsequies of Abraham Lincoln, pub. by order of the Com. Coun., O 19, 1865; N. Y. Times, Ap 25, 1865. See also views and descriptions in Harper's Weekly, IX: 257, 260, 261, 275, 278, 284, 285, 296, 297. A lithograph about five ft. long, showing the procession, is in the Colt collection. See also Pyne catalogue (1917), item 173.

15 Andrew Johnson, vice-president, takes the oath of office as president.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., V: 150–51.

21 The consent of the state is given to the purchase, by the U. S., of the land bounded by Wall, William, and Hanover Sts. and Exchange Place, together with the exchange building and improvements erected thereon, to be used as a custom-house.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 523. See Ap 29.

22 The legislature fixes the compensation of members of the common council at $2,000 a year, effective from Jan. 1, of the present year. This compensation is to cover "carriage hire and all other expenses."—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 533.

24 Sixth Ave. between 110th St. and the Harlem River is ordered widened 25 feet on each side under the supervision of the commissioners of Central Park.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 564.

" The commissioners of Central Park are authorised to lay out streets and avenues north of 155th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 565.

27 The new building of the National Academy of Design, at the north-west corner of 23d St. and Fourth Ave. (see O 21, 1863), is formally opened on the occasion of the 40th annual exhibition.—Natl. Acad. of Design. Ceremonies on Laying the Cornerstone, etc. (1865). See also L. M. R. K., III: 957. This building was occupied until 1898 (q. v.).

28 The University Club is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 594. It opened headquarters in this year at No. 9 Brevoort Place.—L. M. R. K., III: 939.

29 The merchants' exchange (see 1862) and site are purchased by the United States for $1,000,000, for a custom-house.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1875), 19. Though the government sold the property on July 3, 1899 (q. v.), the custom-house remained here until 1907 (q. v., O 1), when it moved into its new quarters at the foot of Broadway. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925. Apr. 29

Parliament, by unanimous vote, resolves to present an address to Queen Victoria, expressing the "deep Sorrow and Indignation" with which both houses have learned of the assassination of Pres. Lincoln, and to request "that in communicating her own Sentiments on this deplorable Event to the Government of the United States, Her Majesty will also be graciously pleased to express . . . their Abhorrence of the Crime and their sympathy with the Government and People of the United States."—Hansard's Parl. Debates, CLXXVIII: 1219–28, 1242–47. May 1

Commissioners are appointed, to act in conjunction with the commissioners of Central Park, to purchase a plot of ground in the park and to erect thereon a monument to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, all expenses to be defrayed by voluntary contributions.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 656. "

The legislature directs the city to complete the Battery extension. If the work is not commenced within 30 days and prosecuted with despatch, the commissioner of pilots may continue it or remove so much of the work as is an encroachment on the harbour.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 661. "

Benjamin Altman establishes his business, on the east side of Third Ave. (at No. 39), between 9th and 10th Sts. In the early 70's he removed to Sixth Ave. between 21st and 22d Sts.; in 1876, the business of B. Altman & Co. was established at the corner of Sixth Ave. and 19th St., and from time to time was extended until the entire block front between 18th and 19th Sts. was occupied. In 1906, the business was moved to the east side of Fifth Ave. between 34th and 35th Sts., where he built his present store, after removing the ruins of Christ Church (L. M. R. K., III: 932) at the 35th St. corner. Later the firm occupied the entire block.—Information supplied by the company. "

The assassination of Pres. Lincoln by John Wilkes Booth (see Ap 14) was a crushing blow to Booth's brother Edwin, who writes from New York, under this date, to an intimate friend: "I have been, by the advice of my friends 'cooped up' since I arrived here, going out only occasionally in the evening. . . . My position is such a delicate one that I am obliged to use the utmost caution. Hosts of friends are stanch and true to me here and in Boston I feel safe. . . . I wish I could see with other's eyes; all my friends assure me that my name shall be free and that in a little while I may be where I was and what I was; but alas! it looks dark to me." Later, under date of July 31, he wrote to the same friend: "I have no idea when, if ever I shall act again. . . . It rests with my friends entirely. My heart is against it for at least a year." The disaster seemed the more overwhelming to Booth, for he had been rejoicing over the end of the Civil War. Writing from New York to a friend, under date of March 10, 1865: "Our news (no news now, though) is indeed glorious. I am happy in it and glory in it, although Southern-born. God grant the end, or rather the beginning, is now at hand. For when the war ceases, we shall only have begun to live—a nation never to be shaken again, ten times more glorious, a million times firmer than before." On January 3, 1866, he appeared again on the stage in New York, in the part of Hamlet.—Grossman, Edwin Booth Recollections and Letters (N. Y., 1894), 171–75. 6

The N. Y. Law Library is established by act of the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1865), chap. 722. 12

1865 May 17 Peter Cooper and 39 other prominent citizens and firms of New York, in an address (written on vellum) to Pres. Andrew Johnson, ask him to accept a coach and horses as a token of their high appreciation of his fidelity to the country. The president replied on May 22, thanking the citizens of New York, but declining the gift, in view of his belief that such presents should not be accepted by those occupying high political positions.—From the original document, sold with a collection of Johnson letters, documents, and books, at The Anderson Galleries, Nov. 26, 1919.

19 "Some of our most prominent and influential citizens have formed an organization for the purpose of sustaining the administration of President Johnson."—N. Y. Times, My 19, 1865. See also ibid., Jl 7, 1865.

22 "We are sorry that Governor Fenton has refused his signature to the bill authorizing an underground railroad in this city [see Ap 7]. We have always regarded such a road as the only measure which would afford substantial relief to our over-crowded streets and facilitate transit from one part of the city to another. It is perfectly certain that there is not room on the surface of the city to accommodate the traffic which its business requires. Being situated on a long and narrow island, its surface is restricted and its streets are narrow. A careful calculation shows that, even with its present population, enough railroads cannot be placed in its streets to accommodate all who wish to ride, without stopping its business traffic. This evil of necessity increases from year to year, and will absolutely compel, sooner or later, resort to such a road as that which the Governor has just refused to permit. We think his action will be regretted by all classes of people in this city, except those who are interested in existing and prospective street railroads."—N. Y. Times, My 22, 1865. See also Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 35–39. See Ja 11, 1866.

27 The Stuyvesant pear-tree in Third Ave. is in full blossom for the 220th season.—Leslie's Weekly, XX: 147. See F 27, 1867.

29 Pres. Johnson grants an amnesty to states recently in rebellion.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., V: 525–26.

" "The French residents of this city, professing the Jewish faith, about eight years ago, organized under the name of the 'Commenanti [Communanté] Israelite Francaise,' and met for worship at a synagogue in Ninth-street. The numbers being greatly increased lately, they decided upon erecting a more commodious edifice in Sixth-street, near Second-avenue. The building is just only completed. . . . On Friday morning [May 26] the synagogue was consecrated with the usual imposing ceremonies."—N. Y. Times, May 29, 1865.

June — The Fifth Avenue Baptist Church (see F 13, 1841) is completed on the south side of 46th St., just west of Fifth Ave., on lots purchased in Oct., 1859. Services were commenced here in 1860 in a temporary lecture-room.—21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 145.

5 The state census shows that the population of New York City is 726,386, which is 87,283 less than in 1860.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1865), 615.

7 Gen. Grant arrives in New York and is welcomed enthusiastically by the citizens. After a day of receptions, parades, dinners, speeches, and serenades, he left for West Point.—N. Y. Times, Je 8, 1865.

" A large meeting in support of Johnson's administration is held at Cooper Institute. Gens. Grant, Logan, Blair, and Hunt are among the speakers.—N. Y. Times, Je 8, 1865.

15 The first Hebrew free school, at No. 36 Avenue C, near 4th St., is opened and dedicated.—N. Y. Times, Je 17, 1865.

19 The board of aldermen grants to the City Gas Company of New York, for a term of 50 years, the right to manufacture and sell gas, and lay the necessary pipes and mains in the streets and avenues.—N. Y. Times, Je 20, 1865.

29 The New York Dry Goods Exchange at Nos. 49 and 51 Park Place is opened for business.—N. Y. Times, Je 30, 1865.

July 8 In some parts of New York the 17-year locusts are devouring everything that is green.—Leslie's Weekly, XX: 243.

13 Barnum's Museum, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Ann St., is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Jl 14, 1865; Costello, 267; L. M. R. K., III: 982. See also views and descriptions in Harper's Weekly, IX: 467, 472, 473; descrip. of Pl. 81a, III: 550; and Pyne sales catalogue, items 121 and 122.

After the fire, the property was sold to James Gordon Bennett, who erected the Herald building on the site (see 1866).—N. Y. Times, Ja 6, 1895. Barnum opened a temporary museum on Broadway (see S 6, 1865). July 13

The old Warren mansion, near the intersection of Charles and Bleecker Sts., which was built by Sir Peter Warren about 1740 (q. v.) and later occupied by Abraham Van Nest, is torn down. Its lawns extended to the North River.—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 590; N. Y. Eve. Post, Ag 31, 1881. See also L. M. R. K., III: 953; descrip. of A Pl. 5-b, III: 866, and Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 528. A view of the house as it was in 1864 is in Greatorex, Old N. Y., opp. p. 68. Aug. —

The 71st Regiment at this time occupied or used an armory at the corner of 13th St. and University Pl., also the old Centre Market Armory. "In the summer of 1869, they removed to a building on 32d Street, which afforded better facilities than the old Armory, but even this was inadequate to their wants. In the fall of 1870 the 37th Regiment, which occupied the Armory on Broadway between 35th and 36th Street, was disbanded, and soon after this the 71st Regiment obtained possession of the building and removed thence [thither]."—Whittemore, Hist. of the 71st Regt., 80, 89. The site of this building was that later occupied by the Herald. For a short time the regiment occupied a building on the site of the New York Theatre, on the east side of Broadway between 44th and 45th Sts., and for a few years was in the skating-rink at 107th St. and Lexington Ave.—Letter to the author from W. G. Bates, colonel of the regiment. In 1892 (q. v.) the regiment erected its first building at the south-east corner of 34th St. and Park Ave. See also L. M. R. K., III: 923. —

Comptroller Matthew F. Brennan reports to the state assessor the assessed valuation of property in the county of New York, as fixed by the board of equalization, as follows: 26

Years commencing Oct. 1	Assessed valuation by the board of equalization of taxes & assessments
1860	$550,078,778
1862	549,624,306
1863	547,416,031

He also shows that for a number of years this county has paid nearly 40% of the entire quota of the sale tax.—From letter-book of comptroller's office, No. 153, p. 19.

The temporary museum which Mr. Barnum has fitted up at Nos. 539 and 541 Broadway is opened to the public.—N. Y. Times, S 6, 1865. The building is known as "Chinese Hall," and the new museum consists of five large salons and a lecture room.—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 7. See also sketches of the museum in ibid., XXI: 20. It was destroyed by fire on March 3, 1868 (q. v.). Sept. 6

The synagogue erected by the Congregation Bnai Jeshurun in 34th St. is consecrated.—N. Y. Times, S 15, 1865. 14

An embassy from the Bey of Tunis arrives in New York on its way to Washington.—N. Y. Times, O 5, 1865. Oct. 4

New York City has a fund of about $60,000, to be appropriated to the support of families of murdered policemen.—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 35.

"At this moment in the city of New York, there are many thousands of stalwart and educated men wandering the streets, utterly unable to procure employment, even though their ideas of remuneration be ever so modest. This arises mainly from the vast influx of labor suddenly let loose upon the community by the mustering out of our armies, and by the hard but truthful fact that there is a prejudice in the minds of employers against returned soldiers."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 39. "

The corner-stone of the Church of the Divine Paternity is laid at Fifth Ave. and 45th St.—N. Y. Times, O 12, 1865. See L. M. R. K., III: 937. It was dedicated on Dec. 3, 1866 (q. v.). 11

The spire of St. Paul's Church, which was scorched at the burning of Barnum's Museum (see Jl 13), has been repainted.—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 71, 76. 21

"A discovery of a deposit of alum has been made on First avenue, between 47th and 48th streets, in this city. It was found 10 feet below the surface of the earth, in layers between the rocks."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 82. 28

Nov. 3 The organization of the paid fire department (see Mr 30) has been completed. The entire force of the metropolitan fire department consists of 35 steam fire-engine companies and 12 hook-and-ladder companies for the city proper. In the city organization each engine company consists of 12 members, a foreman, assistant-foreman, engineer, driver, stoker, and seven privates. The hook-and-ladder companies have the same number of members, but, not requiring an engineer or stoker, the privates are increased to nine men. In the suburbs the companies consist of 50 members, and are not paid, a company fund being given them for incidental expenses, the machines being drawn by hand. The whole department consists of a board of commissioners and the board of engineers, with 40 steam-engine and 13 hook-and-ladder companies. Very soon there will be a complete revolution in the fire-alarm system. Instead of the bell-towers and their attendant ringers, the city will be watched by a telegraph system.—N. Y. Times, N 3, 1865. The new department established headquarters in Firemen's Hall, 127 Mercer St.—Man. Com. Coun. (1865), 139. See also pictures of various kinds of apparatus used by the new department, in Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 227, 232–33. See also descrip. of Pl. 96, III: 586, and Pl. 143-b, III: 713.

" "General Egbert L. Viele has published a very interesting work, together with a valuable map, showing the topography and hydrology of the city of New York, and defining the healthy and unhealthy sections of the metropolis. It will prove of great value to persons about purchasing residences or building sites upon which to erect the same. . . .

"The map shows the water courses, streams, meadows, marshes, ponds, ditches, canals, &c., that existed and now exist upon the site upon which New York is built. . . ."—N. Y. Herald, N 3, 1865. Gen. Viele's Report of the Council of Hygiene and Public Health of the Citizens' Association of New York upon the Sanitary Condition of the City (1865) is in N. Y. P. L., and his map is reproduced as Pl. 155-b, Vol. III.

4 "The one agitating subject just now among all classes is the inflation in prices of all articles of necessity and the want of corresponding inflation in wages. In 1863, when wages had reached a very high point, and mechanics all over the country were holding out for higher, the prices of food were as follows: flour, $5 70; coal, $8 60; pork, $13 90 per barrel; butter, 22 cts.; lard, 10 cts.; codfish, $5 75 per cwt. . . .

"This year, in peace, flour is $9; coal, $13 50; pork, $37 per barrel; butter, 50 cts.; lard 27; and codfish, $8 12 per cwt."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 98.

13 Gen. Grant and his family arrive in New York and take up their residence at the Metropolitan Hotel.—N. Y. Times, N 15, 1865. See also ibid., N 16, 17, 19, and 20, 1865. A great reception, attended by about 2,000 people, was held in his honour at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on Nov. 20.—Ibid., N 21, 1865. See also views in Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 185; and Harper's Weekly, IX: 774. Grant left the city on Nov. 21.—N. Y. Times, N 22, 1865.

" A large number of prominent and influential men in the Democratic party have just completed the organization of a club to be called the Manhattan. The objects of the members are to advance the doctrines of their political creed, promote social intercourse, and provide themselves with the conveniences of a club-house. The number of the resident members is limited to 500. The following officers have been chosen: pres., John Van Buren; vice-pres., Augustus Schell; treas., W. Butler Duncan; sec., Manton Marble.—N. Y. Times, N 13, 1865. For the organization of the Manhattan Club and the original list of members, see Watterson, Hist. of the Manhattan Club (1915), xxii, xxiii–xxvii, 12–16. See also Fairfield, Clubs of N. Y. (1873), 139–66. From 1865 to 1890 (q.v., Mr 1), the club building was at 96 Fifth Ave.—L. M. R. K., III: 938. It is described in Harper's Weekly, XII: 436.

14 St. George's Church on Stuyvesant Square is seriously damaged by fire, the steeples, however, being saved.—N. Y. Times, N 15 and 16, 1865. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, IX: 758. It was rebuilt to conform as nearly as possible with the original plans of Blesch and Eidlitz, and was reopened Sept. 29, 1867 (q.v.).—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church, 232, 234–35.

23 The drives and bridle paths in Central Park are completed, the last section to be finished being the drive from Mt. St. Vincent to Seventh Ave. and 110th St.—9th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1866), 110.

Nov. 23 The exchange built by Amos R. Eno in 1862 (q.v.) on West 24th St. having failed, George Christy opens the building as a minstrel hall.—Brown, II: 399–400; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See, further, S 2, 1867.

30 Meyerbeer's opera "L'Africaine" is performed for the first time in America, at the Academy of Music.—Brown, II: 52.

Dec. 1 "Within the past few years, at certain times of the day . . . the Fifth avenue rivals Broadway seriously as a promenade. We have no doubt that the time will come, within a quarter of a century, when fashion will change from Broadway to Fifth avenue entirely . . . and that the now fashionable avenue will be nothing but a row of stores for retail, while in Broadway the wholesale trade will have monopolized everything below 14th street.

2 "Fifth avenue, at present, is a street of 45 blocks, more than twice the length of the promenade part of Broadway. It has upon it 340 residences, all of the finer class, except a few shanties near the Park. . . . It may safely be said that of these 340 houses not one cost less than $20,000."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 162. Anthony's stereoscopic views, now scarce, show the avenue at this time.

5 At the annual charter election, John T. Hoffman, the Tammany candidate, is elected mayor. Hoffman's plurality over Roberts, the candidate of the Union party, is very small. There were two other candidates, Hecker and Mayor Gunther; the latter was again the candidate of the McKeon Democracy but polled a very small vote; the former was put forward by the Citizens' Association (see 1863) as a "Reform" candidate. Horace Greeley characterized Hoffman as the tool of "Ringmaster" Tweed, and supported Hecker.—N. Y. Tribune, N 23 and D 6, 1865. Hoffman was re-elected in 1867 (q. v., D 3). For a brief account of the man, see Stephen Fiske's Off-Hand Portraits of Prominent New Yorkers (1884), 186 et seq.

9 The Stock Exchange moves from Lord's Court into the new building at 10 and 12 Broad St., owned by the N. Y. Stock Exchange Building Co.—N. Y. Times, D 10, 1865; Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 50. See also interior and exterior views of building, in Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 227, 229; and descrip. of Pl. 159-b, III: 842.

18 Official announcement of the ratification of the 13th amendment and the abolition of slavery in the U. S. is made.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., V: 539–40.

23 Lucy Rushton opens "what she calls the New York Theatre, located on the site of the Unitarian Church, lately the Athenæum, on Broadway just opposite the New York Hotel, and between Fourth st. and Astor place, on the east side of the street."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 259. See also L. M. R. K., III: 984. See, further, Jl 26, 1880.

30 The annual report on Central Park states: "The buildings at Mount St. Vincent, having been for more than three years occupied as a hospital for wounded soldiers [see N 16, 1862], were vacated in the month of September last. . . .

"A portion of these buildings have been put in condition, and will soon be ready for use as a place of refreshment. The Board will proceed with the erection of at least one other house of refreshment, commensurate with the extent of the demand that is likely to arise for its use; in connection with it, it is proposed to provide a spacious hall and a winter garden."—9th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1866), 38; Harper's New Monthly Mag., Nov., 1866. See D 31, 1867.

" The Hopper house at 83d St. and Second Ave., built in 1630, was still standing at this time.—See view and description in Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 237. See also L. M. R. K., III: 950.

31 The number of men furnished for the war by the city of New York, according to the report of the chairman of the board of supervisors, was 116,382, for terms of one, two, three, and four years, the total number of years' service being 267,551. The average cost per man under each call was, for bounties and hand-money, and other expenses, including expenses for the family relief fund, $150.47.—Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1865), 611. See also Townsend, The Honors of the Empire State in the War of the Rebellion (1889).

" "Some notion of the extent of travel on the city or horse railways of New York may be gathered from the fact that the aggregate of fares received on them for the six months ending December 31st, was $1,887,525."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 306.

— In this year, the Princeton Alumni Association of New York was founded.—Year Book of Princeton Club (1888). See 1886.

— In this year, the Manhattan Railway Co. proposed to construct an underground road from the Battery to Central Park, similar to the subways in London. For detailed description of the project, see Plans and Proposals of the Manhattan Ry. Co. (1866). The first subway in the world was begun in London in 1853 and opened in 1863.—Encyclop. Am., XXV: 776; Encyclop. Brit., XVI: 944.

— In this year, Old New York: or Reminiscences of The Past Sixty Years, by Dr. John W. Francis, was published with a memoir of the author by Henry T. Tuckerman.

— In this year, David T. Valentine prepared and published A compilation of the existing ferry leases and railroad grants made by the corporation of the city of New York, together with the grants from the legislature of the state to use the streets of the city for railroad purposes. Also the various ordinances, resolutions, &c., passed by the Common Council, relating to, or affecting the same. The period covered is 1856–1866. An earlier edition compiled by Charles T. McClenachan was published in 1860.

— In this year, Dickel's Riding Academy, a fashionable resort in the "70's," was opened on the north-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 39th St. The Union League Club was later built on the site.—L. M. R. K., III: 939, 962.

— In this year, the morgue was erected at the foot of East 26th St.—Richmond, N. Y. and Its Institutions, 388.

— Regulations were adopted for the use of Central Park as a playground for children.—10th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1867), 34–40; and Doc. No. 58, in Min. and Docs. of the Bd. of Com'rs of the Dept. of Public Parks for the year ending April 30, 1875.

— A list of 64 buildings commenced in this year, with their locations, dates of completion, names of owners, and costs is given in N. Y. Times, My 17, 1867.

— The supt. of buildings describes the following buildings among those commenced (either projected by filing of plans, or begun) this year: The School of Mines of Columbia College at the south-east corner of Madison Ave. and 50th St.; the Herald building at the south-east corner of Broadway and Ann St. (see Jl 13, 1865, and Ja 6, 1895); the American Jockey Club (alteration of the Jerome residence), at the south-east corner of Madison Ave. and 26th St.; Pike's Opera House, on the north-west corner of Eighth Ave. and 23d St.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Buildings (1862–1872), 218–21.

— In this year, Geo. W. Smith surveyed the Common Lands from Third to Fifth Ave. and from 75th to 82d St.—See map No. 151 in real estate bureau of comptroller's office. For earlier surveys of various parts of the Common Lands, see 1796; F 15, 1817; 1822; 1837; Ag, 1838; 1852. See also the following maps of the Common Lands, without date, in the same office: Nos. 86 and 93.

— The view of Nassau St. and the Middle Dutch Church, reproduced as Pl. 150-b, Vol. III, and attributed, in the plate description, to Wm. B. Holmes, was one of a series of stereoscopic photographs of views of N. Y. City, made at about this time by E. Anthony.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1866 were published the following map and views: map of N. Y. and vicinity, frontispiece; Spuyten Duyvel Creek, Kingsbridge Road near Dykeman's Farm, 74; original cottage and later residence of the Jones family at the foot of 82d St., East River, 178; Brevoort estate and vicinity bet. 54th and 55th Sts. near First Ave., 482; east and west angles of an old earthwork on Chittenden's estate (2 views), 640, 657; Riker estate at the foot of 75th St. on the East River, 688; Rapelyea estate (the property of Mrs. Carns, called the "White Cottage"), foot of 35th St. on the North River, 712; last of the Lennert estate, bet. 49th and 50th Sts., near Tenth Ave., 736; Grenseback estate, cor. Third Ave. and 75th St., 760; residence of the Schermerhorn family, foot of 73d St., East River, 784; residence of the Schermerhorn family, foot of 84th St., East River, 808.

Jan. 1 Mayor Hoffman communicates his first message to the common council. Like his immediate predecessors, he complains that the mayor has been divested "of much of the power which of right belongs, and ever should belong, to him," and he lays down two propositions:

"1st. The city should be permitted to choose its own officers, carry on its own government, and manage its own affairs. Its chartered rights should be preserved, its privileges maintained, and never, under any circumstances, should the State Legislature attempt to saddle upon it a commission to govern and control it. Jan. 1

"2d. Its mayor should be clothed with power commensurate with his responsibilities. A concentration of power and of responsibility should be the end and aim of all legislation relating to its government. It is the division of power and the division of responsibility which causes all or nearly all of our municipal evils; and the sooner this great truth is universally recognized and acted upon, the better for the common interest of all."

In view of the "present comparative high prices of unimproved real estate, and the present low prices of city securities," the mayor recommends "a judicious sale at public auction of large portions of the unimproved real estate of the city," the proceeds to be used in purchasing city securities. However, unlike most of his immediate predecessors, he does not recommend "the sale of the markets, wharves, piers, and ferry franchises belonging to the city," believing that "by judicious management they can all be made to yield greatly increased revenues." At present, he says, "New York, the great commercial city of this continent, has not a single wharf or pier which is not a disgrace to it." The markets, too, he calls "miserable structures," and he wishes to see new ones erected that will be "an ornament and credit to the city."

He anticipates that the legislature will "agitate" a "health bill" (see F 26), and declares any such measure should not "transfer to a State Commission the control and management of the sanitary interests of the city." A pestilence of cholera is likely to be checked by the institution of "proper receptacles for all . . . refuse and garbage," and by the vigilance of every police officer and every citizen "in ascertaining and reporting and (as far as possible) removing and abating, all nuisances, and sources and causes of disease;" the organization of "health committees" in every ward would give "aid to the work of purification."

Finally, the mayor promises to do all he can "to thwart imprudent legislation, to check extravagant expenditures, and to redeem the character of our local government."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 11–45.

A large meeting is held at Cooper Institute "for the avowed purpose of reaffirming the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine and of expressing a sympathy with the feebler and struggling Republics of the continent." Speeches are made by Wm. Cullen Bryant, S. S. Cox, and others.—N. Y. Times, Ja 7, 1866; Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 293. 6

The semi-centennial anniversary of the battle of New Orleans is celebrated at Tammany Hall "with something more than regal splendor." Speeches are made by Hon. John Van Buren, Admiral Farragut, Col. Murray, and others.—N. Y. Times, Ja 9, 1866. 8

The state senate passes a resolution requesting Alfred W. Craven, the engineer of the Croton aqueduct, "to report his opinion as to the practicability of constructing a railroad under Broadway in the city of New York [see Ap 7, 1865], and especially as to the effect of the attempt to construct the same upon the Croton and other pipes and the sewers, and the damage if any which may be caused to the city and to the individual property owners thereby, and what precaution ought to be taken to guard against the same, and to provide for the payment of damages, and what legislation is necessary in reference to that object." Craven reported adversely on Feb. 2.—Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 43–50. 11

"Notwithstanding the two great reservoirs of Croton water in the Park, and the distributing reservoir in the city, the requirements of New York are not yet satisfied. A new one is to be built at Manhattanville, near Washington Heights, to supply water to parts of the city that cannot be supplied from existing reservoirs. A plat of ground has been selected between 172d and 175th streets, 10th avenue and Harlem river, embracing eight acres, for this purpose."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 258. The new reservoir had been proposed in 1863.—Ibid., XV: 355. 13

Charles St. between 4th and Bleecker Sts. is to be designated Van Ness Place.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXIV: 7. 16

The consistory of the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church has decided to dispose of the materials of the old North Dutch Church, corner of Fulton and William Sts., and to lease the ground for business purposes.—N. Y. Times, Ja 20, 1866. For a history of the church, see ibid., Ja 21, 1866. Protests against its removal appeared in ibid., Ja 22 and 31, 1866. Silver plates and other relics, once attached to coffins placed in the burial-ground of the church, were exhumed in this year and removed to Greenwood Cemetery.— 20

1866 Ja 20 Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 593; Greatorex, Old N. Y., 43. The church was not demolished until 1875 (q. v., Jl 7).

" "There will be, early next year, now [no] fewer than eleven theatres in this city, to wit: Wallack's, New York, Winter Garden, Olympic, Niblo's, Wood's, Broadway, French (in Fourteenth street), Old Bowery, New Bowery, and the German."—Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 275.

25 The centenary of American Methodism is celebrated at St. Paul's M. E. Church with appropriate ceremonies.—N. Y. Times, Ja 26, 1866. See also views in Leslie's Weekly, XXI: 322–23. Another celebration was held at Cooper Institute on Sept. 25, at which speeches were made by Rev. C. D. Foss, Rev. Thos. Sewall, and others.—N. Y. Times, S 26, 1866.

" "The incapacity of Broadway to adequately meet the requirements of so important a thoroughfare has long had the consideration of the community. It is notorious that the peculiar formation of Manhattan Island, with heavy bodies of water on each side running its extreme length, confines the extension of the city to one direction alone, while into the lower or more commercial part of the city is thrown an amount of traffic so vast that its superficial extent is not equal to the demands made on it. This concentration needs the most direct available communications, and Broadway, according to one view, necessarily becomes the main channel.

"Seriously, we are in favor of the relief of Broadway whenever a proper plan is suggested. We have none of our own but we believe that in the end the real relief of the thoroughfare will be found either in an overground railroad or in two broad avenues constructed on each side of the great highway."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 25, 1866. See F 2.

Feb. 2 "H. G." writes to one of the papers: "Several hundred thousand persons—rich and poor, male and female, wise and simple—earn their living by personal effort in that narrow corner of this island which lies south of Grand street. We can not live here; for most of this area is needed for stores, banks, offices, factories, workshops, etc.; and it is inconvenient to live across the arms of the sea on either hand. We want to live up-town, or in the adjacent county of Westchester; and we want facilities for getting quickly, cheaply, comfortably, from our homes to our work and back again.

"Street Railroads and Omnibuses have their uses; but we have reached the end of them. They are wedged for hours at night and morning with men, women, boys, and girls, sitting, standing, and hanging on; . . .they are unchangeably too slow; and their capacity is exhausted. To put on more cars or construct more roads is only to monopolize our streets and . . . drive all carriages out. . .

"Gentlemen of the Legislature! Give us both the Underground and the Aërial Railway! Don't let their promoters kill each other's project; for we badly need them both, and with them we may come and go ten to twenty miles per day in forty to eighty minutes, instead of thrice the time, as at present. Don't let the lobby make the bills, but make them yourselves, and see that they are framed in the interest of the public and not of the stockholders exclusively. Let the city have a slice of the profits, if profits there shall be; and let those who ride feel that their comfort, safety, and advantage have been considered in the premises. Such roads, made ten years ago, would have saved to our State millions of taxable property, which has been absolutely forced over into Jersey in search of room to live on. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 2, 1866. See Mr.

3 The city leases, for 99 years, 20 lots on the block bounded by 81st and 82d Sts., Madison and Fourth Aves., to the Roman Catholic archbishop, for the use of the industrial school of the Sisters of Mercy.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763.

9 The city leases to the German Hospital a plot on 77th St., between Lexington and Fourth Aves., embracing 18 lots, for 50 years, at $1 per year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763. The corner-stone of the hospital was laid on Sept. 3 (q. v.).

12 A great Fenian demonstration is held at Cooper Institute. The meeting is "a scene of continuous enthusiasm, rising at times to pitches of dramatic intensity." Chas. S. Spencer, Fernando Wood, G. F. Train, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Times, F 13, 1866.

" The regular annual publication of the "Corporation [Valentine's] Manual" is threatened by Mayor Hoffman's veto of the common council's resolution "directing the Clerk to prepare and cause to be published ten thousand copies of the Corporation Manual for 1866, and providing that he shall be paid for the compilation of the work the sum of three thousand five hundred dollars." The mayor objects to the "gratuitous distribution" of so large an edition at the public expense, each volume last year having been published at a cost of about $5.70. He also disapproves of the rejection by the common council of an economy measure that provided for giving to the lowest bidder the contract for publishing; he declares his inquiries lead him to believe the work can be done for $3 a volume.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 355–57. The Times editor sides with the mayor, saying: "There is no man connected with the City Government so universally respected as 'Uncle David.' For more than thirty years he has been intimately connected with municipal affairs, and to him more than to any other man our ever-changing law-makers have looked for information and guidance. His 'manual' is a valuable work and should be continued in a proper way. But a thousand copies are amply sufficient for official purposes, and no more should be allowed."—N. Y. Times, F 27, 1866. The resolution was passed over the veto.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 536; Proc., Bd. of Councilmen, CI: 590–91. See 1867. Feb. 12

" The common council authorises the payment of $9,650 to City Inspector Boole "for legal disbursements in the matter of the several investigations before the Committee of the Board of Aldermen, Governor Seymour, the Senate Investigating Committee, and Governor Fenton, during the last two years."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 370–71. The Citizens' Association had protested against such action (ibid., CI: 155).

19 The New York Tract and Mission Society is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 63.

22 A great Union meeting is held at Cooper Institute to indorse Pres. Johnson's veto of the bill for the continuance and enlargement of the Freedmen's Bureau. Resolutions to this effect are passed. Henry J. Raymond, Postmaster-Gen. Denison, Francis B. Cutting, Sec. Seward, and others make addresses.—N. Y. Times, F 23, 1866.

" Gen. Grant and his family arrive in the city and stay at the Metropolitan Hotel.—N. Y. Times, F 22, 1866.

26 The legislature creates "The Metropolitan Sanitary District of the State of New York," an area identical with the metropolitan police district (see Ap 15, 1857). Four "Sanitary Commissioners" appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate are to govern the district. One must be a resident of Brooklyn, and three of the four must be physicians; the regular term of office is to be four years, but the terms of the first commissioners are to be adjusted so that only one commissioner retires from office in a given year. They shall each receive $2,500 a year, and may be removed by the governor on charges. Together with the metropolitan police commissioners and the health officer of the port they shall constitute a "Board of Health." This board shall elect a president who "shall have all the power and authority given [hitherto] to the 'City Inspector,' . . . in respect to the making, awarding or executing of a contract or contracts for street cleaning, or any matter thereto pertaining." The board shall have power to appoint a "Sanitary Superintendent," who must be "an experienced and skillful physician, resident in said district," and whose annual salary shall not exceed $5,000. This officer shall execute the orders of the board and report "the condition of the public health in said district, and any causes endangering life or health."

The "City Inspector's Department" is entirely abolished, as well as "all other boards and officers now existing in said district" that are concerned with public health, the health officer of the port and the board of quarantine commissioners excepted. The city inspector's powers all pass to the board except the inspection of weights and measures which is conferred upon the mayor. "All public books, records, statistics and papers" in possession of the city inspector must be delivered to the new organization.

"In the presence of great and iminent peril to the public health in said district, by reason of impending pestilence," the board may exert extraordinary powers and incur extraordinary expenditures with the written approval of the governor. The police board and the health board are required to "coöperate for the promotion of the public health and the safety of human life in said district."

The health board together with the mayors and comptrollers of the cities of New York and Brooklyn shall comprise "a Board of Estimate," whose business it shall be annually to "make up a financial estimate and statement" and to apportion "to the several cities, counties and towns in said district" their share of the expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 74.

1866 Feb. 26 — In its course through the legislature this had been known as the "Health Bill." Interest in such a measure, says the Times editor, was aroused by "the threatened approach of the cholera, and the fearfully unsanitary condition of our City," and the bill was drafted last November at "a large meeting of our most prominent citizens, without distinction of party . . . at the house of Dr. Willard Parker."—N. Y. Times, F 9, 1866. Dr. Parker was one of the four commissioners subsequently appointed by Gov. Fenton according to the terms of the act.—N. Y. Tribune, Mr 1, 1866. The metropolitan "Board of Health" was organized on March 3 (q. v.).

" — "There is now on exhibition at Brady's Gallery, No. 785 Broadway, a collection of pictures, specimens of the progressive skill and labors during five and twenty years of this patriarch of photography; portraits of remarkable men in all the ranks of life, whose genius, near or remote, links them in some degree with the history of the Republic. To this collection has been lately added a remarkable array of scenes and incidents of the late rebellion."—N. Y. Times, F 26, 1866.

Mar. — — I. P. Goodsell, state engineer, and three other engineers make the following recommendation to the railroad committee of the state senate: "Having examined drawings and models of an elevated railway on which the cars are to be propelled by means of a cable or wire rope attached to a stationary engine, we are impressed with the novelty and practicability of the method proposed, and think it worthy of a suitable enabling act from the Legislature to permit the formation of companies to use it, and also of the attention of capitalists in reference to the actual construction of the same."—Exposé of the Facts Concerning the Proposed Elevated Patent Ry. Enterprise (1866), 29. A law in relation to this was passed on April 20 (q. v.).

2 — The "Metropolitan Board of Health," for which provision was made by a recent act of the legislature (see F 26), is organized with Mr. Jackson S. Schultz as president, and Mr. Benjamin F. Manierre as secretary.—N. Y. Times, Mr 3, 1866. City Inspector Boole, whose office is now abolished, declares this board to have been created through the efforts of "an unscrupulous partisan clique . . . under the specious pretext of preserving the public health;" that the act "declaring this Department abolished" simply adds "one more to the encroachments upon our right to govern ourselves," and is intended "to transfer the power and patronage hitherto possessed by this Department from Democratic to Republican control."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 578–79. City Inspector Boole had successfully resisted all efforts to dislodge him since his appointment, June 22, 1863 (q. v.).

5 — The board of aldermen requests one of its committees to investigate the desirability of paving "the entire surface of the City Hall Park, thereby converting it into an open piaza, thus affording additional carriage-way in the surrounding streets, and greatly facilitating the transaction of business in the lower part of the city."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 548. The Times editor the next day writes: "The inclosure, at present, is useless for practical purposes, and about as great an eyesore as would be a few acres of the great African desert covering the same ground. What is needed to redeem this valuable piece of land from its present unornamental condition is the erection of public buildings thereon which would be architectural adornments to the City. For instance, a fine Post-office might be erected [see Ag 25, 1875] at the lower end of the Park, a Merchants' and General Exchange on the Broadway side, a Hall of Records and offices for the Corporation Counsel, Surrogate and other officials on the Park-row side, while the City Government and all the Courts could be accommodated at the northern end. Thus the Park might be transformed into the fountain head of all the great business interests of the City, it being already the center of the news. Such a disposition of the ground could not fail to be an inestimable boon and public convenience. In Liverpool there is just such a concentration of important public buildings on just such a space, which our authorities might do worse than to model after."—N. Y. Times, Mr 6, 1866.

" — Mr. F. I. A. Boole, late city inspector, informs the common council that "this day a demand has been made upon me by Jackson S. Schultz, Esq., President of the new Board of Health" (see Mr 2), for the "books, papers, &c." of my office, and I have "complied with the demand," but request permission "to retain the use of the offices now occupied" for a short time, so that I may close up all my business and "give such information to the new Board as they may desire."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 579. A resolution of the board of aldermen granting him such permission "until May 1, 1866," was vetoed by Mayor Hoffman, but a subsequent measure allowing two months' additional salary to him and ten assistants was allowed by the mayor to be adopted.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXIV: 196–97.

Mar. 5 — Agents of the newly constituted "Health Board" remove from the city inspector's office "one hundred and forty-one volumes of the late City Inspector's reports, a cart-load or more of Coroners' inquest papers, and lots of other documents" and deposit the same in one of the "Health Commission's rooms."—N. Y. Times, Mr 6, 1866.

6 — The "Free Academy of the city of New York," now under the supervision of the board of education, is made a body corporate with the title of "The College of the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 264. On April 17, the trustees were directed "to select a suitable site upon the lands of the corporation of the city of New York, north of Fortieth street in said city, for the future use of the college."—Ibid. (1866), chap. 637.

30 — The New York Soldiers' Depot at Nos. 50 and 52 Howard St. is closed. "After a successful career for over four years, the depot goes out of existence, full of honor. . . . Nearly 150,000 soldiers have been hospitably received at the Home since its first establishment, and in a multitude of cases protection has been afforded our returning heroes from the sharpers who infest our thoroughfares."—N. Y. Times, Ap 2, 1866.

31 — Pres. Johnson celebrates the anniversary of the fall of Richmond (see Ap 2, 1865) by officially proclaiming the Civil War at an end and peace restored throughout the Union. The proclamation was published in New York on April 3.—N. Y. Times, Ap 3; N. Y. Herald, Ap 3 and 4, 1866.

Apr. 2 — The Y. M. C. A. is incorporated. The incorporators include Wm. E. Dodge, Jr., Wm. Harman Brown, J. Pierrepont Morgan, James H. Fay, James Stokes, Jr., and Morris K. Jessup.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 350. See O 31.

3 — The commissioners of Central Park are required by the legislature to lay out "Avenue St. Nicholas" and Manhattan St. immediately.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 367. Work on the ground began in 1869 (q. v.).

4 — Having previously created "The Metropolitan Sanitary District" (see F 26), the legislature now passes a measure forbidding any one to "throw, cast or lay any ashes, offal, vegetables, garbage, dross, cinders, shells, straw, shavings, dirt, filth or rubbish in any gutter, street, lane, alley or in any public place." The law is made to apply to Albany and Buffalo, as well as to New York and Brooklyn.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 377.

" — The American Hotel, on the corner of Broadway and Barclay St., is consumed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ap 8, 1866. See L. M. R. K., III: 976.

6 — The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 469. The society was founded by Henry Bergh of New York City and was the first of its kind in the United States.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 846–49.

10 — The Union Trust Co. is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 501.

11 — The commissioners of Central Park are directed to have a survey made of the land bounded on the north by 155th St., on the east by Eighth Ave. north of 82d St. and Ninth Ave. south of 82d St., on the south by 72d St. east of Tenth Ave. and 67th St. west of Tenth Ave., and on the west by the Hudson river, and to mark thereon such changes in the width, direction, and grades of the streets and avenues and in the pier and bulkhead lines as shall be beneficial to the property affected and to the public interests.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 550.

13 — Tompkins Square is declared a public parade-ground for the use of the first division, N. Y. S. N. G., and the street commissioner is directed to remove the fountain, trees, and other obstructions and to have it graded and levelled before July 1.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 593. In 1868 (q. v., Je 3), the square was ordered paved. In 1865 (q. v., Mr 6), the parade-ground for the National Guard was fixed at Hamilton Square.

1866 Apr. 20 The legislature passes an act providing for the formation of companies to operate railways by means of cables or wire rope attached to stationary engines (see Mr).—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 697. This law was passed in the interest of Chas. T. Harvey, "the father of the elevated roads," who had invented and patented this mode of propulsion. In July, 1866, Harvey and his associates organized and incorporated the West Side and Yonkers Patent Ry. Co. They proposed to build a line, 25 miles long, from the Battery by way of Greenwich St. and Ninth Ave. and other streets to Kingsbridge and Yonkers.—Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 58–59, 71–72. See also Exposé of the Facts Concerning the Proposed Elevated Patent Ry. Enterprise (1866), 3–5. On July 24 (q. v.), the company applied for permission to build an experimental line in Greenwich St.

" The state senate appoints a committee "to sit during the recess, with the Mayor of New York, the State Engineer, and the Engineer of the Croton Board, to ascertain and report to the Senate the most advantageous and proper route or routes for a railway or railways suited to the rapid transportation of passengers from the upper to the lower portion of the city of New-York, having in view the greatest practical benefit and safety to the public, and the least loss and injury to property on or adjacent to said route or routes."—Exposé of the Facts Concerning the Proposed Elevated Patent Ry. Enterprise (1866), 26. The committee made its report on Jan. 31, 1867 (q. v.).

25 By act of legislature every railroad in the state is prohibited "from issuing free passes . . . or carrying persons or property free of charge," except in the case of employees, sick and disabled soldiers, or such persons as may be injured in an accident.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 798. While the bill was under discussion, the Times editor remarked: "The issue of passes has grown into a monstrous abuse alike oppressive to shareholders and corrupting to the recipients of railroad bounty. Every third man you meet in the cars is free on the road, and rides at his pleasure at the expense of the shareholders. The system has been so extended as to embrace all classes of people. Every member of the Legislature rides for nothing, and as often as suits his convenience, during the session. The Judges are all deadheads—municipal officers of every description have no traveling expense to pay—State officers all ride for nothing, and every man among them feels aggrieved if his pass does not include his family and all his relations, near and remote."—N. Y. Times, F 21, 1866.

30 The legislature authorises the commissioners of the land office and the city of New York to cede to the U. S. the easterly end of the Battery extension for the purpose of erecting a barge office and other buildings for the transaction of the business connected with the revenue service.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 862.

1 The Croton aqueduct board is directed to supervise the improvement of the pavement of Broadway between the Battery and 14th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 867.

" The legislature authorises the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery R. R. Co. to extend its tracks with a double track from Greenwich St. through Desbrosses St. to the North River and with a double track from Greenwich St. through Cortlandt St. to the North River, and through Fulton St. to Broadway, with a single track from Washington to Greenwich St., and a double track from the latter to Broadway. The Ninth Ave. R. R. Co. is to be permitted to use these new tracks upon certain conditions.—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 868.

4 The legislature passes an act "to amend and reduce to one act the several acts relating to buildings and the keeping and storage of combustible materials in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1866), chap. 873. Under this act the "Department for the Survey and Inspection of Buildings" was reorganized on June 1, with office at No. 2 Fourth Ave., opposite 6th St. The superintendent of buildings was James M. Macgregor.—Man. Com. Coun. (1866), 66.

University Medical School at 145–147 East 14th St. (see 1851), and St. James's Lutheran Church are destroyed by a fire which consumes almost the whole of the block bounded by 14th and 15th Sts., Irving Place and Third Ave. The loss is estimated at over $1,000,000.—N. Y. Times, My 22 and 23, 1866; Harper's Weekly, X: 360, 366. The Academy of Music was rebuilt in the same year and opened on March 1, 1867 (q. v.).—N. Y. Times, Je 22, 1866; Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1862–1869), 234. The Tammany Society purchased the site of the Medical School in 1867 (q. v., Mr 21 and Jl 4) and erected the present Tammany Hall there. The school first took temporary quarters in the N. Y. Hospital and later removed to its present site in 26th St. (see 1869 and 1876).

24 The directors of the West Side and Yonkers Patent Ry. Co. (see Ap 20) and of other subsidiary companies present the following petition to both branches of the common council: "The undersigned Memorialists, being citizens of and property-holders in the city of New-York, respectfully beg leave to represent that they are impressed with the belief that the greatest public want of the city is a new method of transit between points on Manhattan Island and the northern suburban villages, and which shall afford more capacity and rapidity than is presented by existing roads. . . .

"Your Memorialists, while heretofore realizing these facts and their importance, have felt constrained to oppose the various projects for underground and elevated locomotive railways, as impracticable or unjust to public or private interests.

"The first would obstruct our streets for years in construction, if seriously attempted.

"The second would injure our streets in appearance, and become a nuisance in attempting to have locomotive power applied as proposed.

"The attention of your Memorialists has lately been called to a patented system of elevated railway which in the opinion of eminent engineers whom the undersigned have consulted, offers a solution of this difficulty, and is not liable to most of the objections urged against other plans previously made public.

"No locomotives are used on the proposed railway, as the motive-power is confined to a series of noiseless, endless, propelling wire-ropes, which is driven by engines made stationary beneath the street pavements, consequently neither smoke, cinders, oil, or noise can be offensive to the ordinary uses of the public streets.

"The structure will project less than thirty inches over the side wall, or likewise over the carriage-way, and will occupy less than fifteen inches in diameter, or its equivalent, once in not less than twenty feet of length, which actually is no more obstruction than is now common along our streets.

"The speed and capacity of the proposed railway is superior to any of the projects heretofore agitated, if it should prove a mechanical success, as engineers almost unanimously predict will be the case.

1866 July 24 "Your Memorialists have investigated the patents, and find the experts consider them as valid, and comprehending the principles necessary to the operating of a street railway by such means.

"Competent legal authorities have also been consulted, and report that the Legislature has granted full authority for the construction of railways upon this system, (and this only as to new routes,) in the city of New York by act of April 20, 1866 [q. v.], to which your attention is respectfully invited, and in accordance with which the undersigned propose to obtain corporate existence, and to receive your legal permission for prosecuting the contemplated enterprise.

"Your Memorialists have negotiated with the patentee [Chas. Harvey], and have obtained the control of the patents on the principal routes of this city, provided the same can be brought immediately into use.

"They now propose to erect an experimental section upon Greenwich street, of one half mile in length, which shall be made the means of judging of the value of the system, and which will satisfy your Honorable Body, the public, and themselves, on that point, and finally decide all questions of the expediency of its extension or its removal.

"If it does not answer the purpose, it will be for the interest of your memorialists to abandon the project, and remove the trial-line at their own expense.

"But if it does supply the want now becoming an absolute necessity in our city, then every resident on this island will feel interested in its extension as rapidly as possible.

"Your Memorialists are willing to take the risks of failure and loss on the trial, for the right to proceed in its extension without delay, in case of success, which is submitted to your Honorable Body and to the public as a reasonable and just consideration for making the experiment, and assuming the risks incident thereto. . . .

"Your Memorialists beg leave to add, that they are willing that a reasonable percentage of receipts of proposed railways shall go into the city treasury, to increase as the present national and State taxes are reduced, and to aid in lightening the burdens of our city taxations.

"Your Memorialists also beg leave to state that they desire your Honorable Body to pass a resolution which shall protect the interests of the city in an explicit manner as to the occupancy of the streets by such railway, but at the same time leave the constructors at liberty to modify and improve the plans and mode of construction, and operating as experience shall be gained and improvements suggested by practical operation of the experimental section proposed.

"No expense will be spared in rendering it effective and ornamental to the city.

"In view of the fact that farther State legislation may be needed to perfect the mode of acquiring property for such enterprises and otherwise developing their usefulness, your Memorialists will suggest the importance of obtaining your early consent to the trial section proposed, that the same may be put into operation by the time when the next Legislature will assemble, and afford practical proof to the committee which the Honorable Senate has appointed to especially consider this subject in its relation to our city, and to report at the next ensuing session of the Legislature, which will convene in less than six months from this date." The petition was referred to a committee, which reported favourably on July 31, and on that day both branches passed resolutions permitting the West Side and Yonkers Ry. Co. to construct the experimental line in Greenwich St. If this proved successful, this company was to be permitted to extend the line along Ninth Ave. to Yonkers. The Broadway and Yonkers Patent Ry. Co. was to be permitted to construct a similar line from Battery Park along Broadway to Yonkers, and the East Side and New Rochelle Patent Ry. Co. was to be allowed to build one along Pearl St. and Third Ave. to New Rochelle. This was granted in return for 5% of the gross earnings of the several railways. The resolutions, however, were vetoed by the mayor on Aug. 13, and before the board could repass them, A. T. Stewart applied for and obtained an injunction to prevent the council's acting on the veto, on the ground that the proposed roads would depreciate the value of his property on Broadway.—Exposé of the Facts Concerning the Proposed Patent Ry. Enterprise (1866), 5, 35–46. See, further, Ja 31, 1867.

The mayor and common council direct the street commissioner "to remove the unused railway-track, switches, sleepers, turn-outs, &c., now incumbering Greenwich street, in front of premises formerly known as Atlantic Garden [see S 2, 1860], and heretofore used by the Hudson River Railroad Company, as the same are a nuisance, and the street being almost impassable for vehicles."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXIV: 317. The Bowling Green building now covers the ground. See L. M. R. K., III: 967, 976, and descrip. of Pl. 98, III: 590. 28

Pres. Johnson, the secretary of state, the secretary of the navy, and the postmaster-general, are welcomed to New York with a monster demonstration. The ships in the harbour and most of the down-town buildings are decorated with flags and bunting, and patriotic inscriptions and mottoes are everywhere. Through streets lined with people, the procession passes from the pier to City Hall Park, where the presidential party is conducted to the governor's room and formally welcomed by Mayor Hoffman. From the city hall the party drove to Delmonico's. Here the president reviewed the troops and addressed the people. In the evening a great banquet in his honour was held at the hotel.—N. Y. Times, Ag 30, 1866. On Aug. 30, after a drive through Central Park, the president went to West Point.—Ibid., Ag 31, 1866. 1867

— In this year, negotiations between Austria and Hungary for harmony and unity ended with the "Compromise of 1867," and the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary replaced the former Austrian Empire. Francis Joseph was crowned king of Hungary.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 393 et seq.

— In this year, the Dominion of Canada was established by the union of Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. The other provinces of British North America were admitted at various times later.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 528–30.

— In this year, Jas. Fisk, Jr., in connection with Jay Gould, succeeded in making a large sum of money in Erie stock. "By an unscrupulous combination, . . . they got control over stock to the amount of $10,000,000, and were thus able to depress the general value of Erie stock from 72½ to 35. Mr. Fisk's share of the profits . . . amounted, it is said, to $1,300,000. An arrangement was then entered into by which Fisk and Gould obtained absolute possession and control of the Erie Railroad, the other conspirators receiving enormous sums of money as their portion of the plunder." From that time until Fisk's death (see Ja 6, 1872), the road was under their management.—Harper's Weekly, Ja 20, 1872; N. Y. Times, passim.

— Valentine's Manual was not published in this year. See 1841; F 12, 1866.

— In this year was published, by Frederik Muller, in Amsterdam, A Bibliographical and Historical Essay on the Dutch Books and Pamphlets relating to New Netherland, and to the Dutch West-India Company and to its possessions in Brazil, Angola, etc., as also on the maps, charts, etc. of New-Netherland, with facsimiles of the map of New-Netherland, by N. I. Visscher and of the three existing views of New-Amsterdam. Compiled from the Dutch public and private libraries, and from the collection of Mr. Frederik Muller in Amsterdam, by G. M. Asher, L. L. D., Privat-Docent of Roman law in the University of Heidelberg. Although not published until 1867, it was ready for the press in 1853.

— In this year, the first parts of A Dictionary of Books relating to America, from its discovery to the present time, by Joseph Sabin, were published. The subject-matter is arranged alphabetically under the names of authors, and, in the case of anonymous writers, under the most obvious subject. The parts were later collected into volumes, the first of which appeared in 1868. Mr. Sabin died in 1881, at which time 13 volumes had appeared. The work was suspended until Mr. Wilberforce Eames persuaded the son, Jos. F. Sabin, to continue it, Mr. Eames assisting in collecting and arranging material. Mr. Eames began work at "Pennsylvania" and edited Vols. XIV to XX which appeared between 1884 and 1892. Succeeding parts were issued from time to time up to 1892, when 19 full volumes and a portion of the twentieth (comprising in all 116 parts) had appeared, carrying the dictionary through "Henry H. Smith." As this goes to press (1926), Mr. Eames is working on the remainder of Vol. XX ("Smith" to "South"), and hopes to issue it in the near future.

1867 — In this year was published Colonial Records of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784, ed. by John A. Stevens, Jr.

— In this year, John A. Roebling published a Report . . to the president and directors of the New York Bridge Company, on the proposed East River Bridge. The author was appointed chief engineer for the erection of the New York and Brooklyn Bridge. This is a report of plans proposed by him, which were eventually brought to fruition in the successful operation of New York's first suspension bridge.

— In this year was published a "Map of the boulevard, as established by act of legislature, and plan of grand entrance to Central park, with grades along the line of 8th avenue, from 59th to 110th street; compiled and drawn by J. Crofton, 1867;" size 11½ x 86 in. See also N 25.

— In this year, The Evening Telegram was founded by James Gordon Bennett.—King's Handbook (1893), 622.

— In this year, The News was founded, edited by Benjamin Wood. —King's Handbook (1893), 622.

— The stock quotation instruments called "tickers" are first introduced.—Eames, N. Y. State Stock Exchange, 51.

— In this year, the county (or Tweed) court-house, begun in 1861 (q.v., D 26) but not yet completed, was occupied. It stands on the site of the second almshouse.—15th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1910), 398–99; L. M. R. K., III: 974. In addition to the appropriation made for this building in 1862 (q.v., Ap 9), further sums for its completion and furnishing were authorised in 1868 and later years, and by 1872, through the peculations of the Tweed Ring, it had cost many millions.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 854; (1869), chap. 875; (1870), chap. 382; (1871), chap. 583; Disturnell (1876), 54; Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 39–98. The court-house is shown on Pls. 155-a and 163, Vol. III; Harper's Weekly, XV: 836, 839; and Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 639. There is in the author's collection a photographic panorama, about 10 feet long, taken from Jersey City and showing the county court-house under construction.

— The Walton House, at 326 Pearl St., "is still standing, although in a dilapidated state. . . . An inscription (The Old Walton House), coarsely painted in dingy white on its muddy red walls, arrests the eye of the passing stranger." The mansion-house was built in 1752 (q.v.). "The Walton House is indeed a most interesting relic of 'the good old colony time.' Now that the Hancock House [in Boston], once the abode of the great New England merchant and patriot, has been destroyed by the march of improvement, the New York building remains sole witness to the power and state of the merchant of the last century." Reference is here made to John Pintard's description in the N. Y. Mirror of March 17, 1832 (q.v.), where a picture was published as the house then appeared. "To-day the house is but a ruin. Its pitched tilings have given place to a flat roof; its balustrades are seen no more; its portico and columns, its carvings and hatchments, even its doorways, are gone. The broad halls and spacious chambers where the courtly aristocracy of the Province was wont to meet in gay and joyous throng, have been broken into small rooms which now serve as petty shops for tailors and cobblers, or the humble abode of seamen. The fluted pillars in the hall are fast rotting away, yet in their decay convey, to an eye not unused to massive structures, a sense of stately grandeur; while without, only the dull and stony stare of the dilapidated old lion, who still wearily looks down as he did a hundred years ago upon the everlasting movements of the seething life below, serves to mark this once princely mansion from its vulgar and upstart neighbors."—From "Biographical Sketches," by John Austin Stevens, Jr., in Col. Rec., Chamber of Commerce, 1768–1784 (pub. 1867), 61, 63–64. The house was demolished in 1881 (q.v., N 12).

— In this year, the commissioners of Central Park commenced

1867 — the long-delayed development and improvement of Mount Morris Square (see My 10, 1836; Mr 4, 1841; 1854; D 12, 1861; S 25, 1863). The work was prosecuted under supervision of the chief landscape gardener, Ignatz A. Pilat. He died Sept. 17, 1870, but the work was carried out according to his designs.—1st Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Pub. Parks, 1870–71. See Ja 8, 1874.

— During 1867–1868, definite progress was made in laying out streets north of 155th St.; and Sixth and Seventh Aves. north of Central Park were being opened. The Circle at Eighth Ave. and 59th St. was opened on March 2. The square between 58th and 59th Sts., west of Fifth Ave. was laid out, and the following year was filled in. The "Road or Public Drive" (the Boulevard) was being regulated and graded from 59th to 155th St. Eighth Ave. was being graded, but this work was hampered by extraordinary legislation of a contradictory character.—12th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1868), 51, 53, 57, 59; ibid. (1869), 73.

— The superintendent of buildings reports the following buildings among those "erected" this year (plans filed or work begun): National Park Bank, at 214 and 216 Broadway (adjoining the Herald building); the depot of the Hudson River R. R. Co. on St. John's Park; the Colored Orphan Asylum, on the north side of 143d St., west of Tenth Ave.; Edwin Booth's Theatre, at the south-east corner of Sixth Ave. and 23d St.; Tammany Hall on the north side of 14th St. between Irving Place and Third Ave.; a fire alarm bell-tower octagonal in form, 124 ft. high, on the north side of 25th St., between Second and Third Aves.; the Fourth Ave. addition to A. T. Stewart's store, between 9th and 10th Sts.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1862–1872), 298–99, 300, 302–8.

— In this year, Eliza Greatorex made an etching of Bloomingdale Village and Church, which was reproduced, in 1875, in her book Old N. Y. from the Battery to Bloomingdale. It is shown on Pl. 153-a, Vol. III.

— In this year, a photograph was made of the New York Hospital; it was demolished in 1869. It is reproduced and described as A. Pl. 27 C, Vol. III, from an original in the author's collection.

— In this year was published, by J. F. Lloyd, Lloyd's mammoth map of the business portion of New York city.

Jan. 16 The West Washington Market, extending from Fulton to Dey St., is almost wholly consumed by fire. The former market on this ground burned in 1860 (q.v., Jl 11). Though Washington Market proper, or at least the nucleus of it, dates back to 1812, the property burned in 1867 was not used for market purposes until 1853, the ground on which it stood having been reclaimed a year or two before.—N. Y. World, Ja 16, 1867. The L. M. R. K., III: 960, erroneously states that it was Washington Market proper that was burned in 1867.

21 A public meeting in favour of impartial suffrage is held at Cooper Institute. The Rev. Mr. Garnett, a negro preacher, makes the principal address.—N. Y. Times, Ja 22, 1867.

25 A large meeting is held at Cooper Institute "to consider the subject of the destitution and suffering now prevailing in several of the Southern states, and to adopt measures of relief." Speeches are made by Peter Cooper, Henry Ward Beecher, Horace Greeley, and others, and resolutions are passed that a committee be appointed to take up subscriptions, and that the clergymen of all churches be asked to appeal to their congregations.—N. Y. Times, Ja 26, 1867.

31 The committee of the state senate appointed in 1866 (q.v., Ap 20) to consider the subject of rapid transit on Manhattan Island reports that, "Among the plans for an elevated railroad, that presented by Mr. C. T. Harvey [see Ap 20, 1866] appeared to be the best, and the commission recommended that the privilege of constructing one-half a mile in the southern part of Greenwich Street [see Jl 24, 1866], as an experiment, be granted by the Legislature." The committee also states "That in the opinion of this Commission the best method of speedily attaining the design contemplated by the senate resolution . . . is by the construction of underground railways.

"That in view of the prospective increase in travel there should be one line of such railway from the Battery to City Hall Park, under Broadway, connecting at the City Hall Park with two or more lines of underground railway, each with double tracks, east and west of the line of Broadway.

"That to accommodate the larger passenger transportation the following routes are recommended, each connecting with the said first mentioned track at the City Hall Park:

Jan. 31 "One under Chatham street to the Bowery and Third Avenue to the Harlem River.

"The other under Park Place (or Murray or Warren street or by the most feasible route) to Hudson street, thence under Hudson street to Eighth Avenue, thence under Eighth Avenue to Broadway, thence under Broadway to Ninth Avenue, thence under Ninth Avenue to the Harlem River.

"The line under Broadway between the Battery and City Hall Park to be constructed only as part of one or more of the through lines."—Statutes and Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882), in N. Y. P. L.; Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 60–70. The committee's recommendation in regard to the elevated road was carried out by the legislature on April 22 (q.v.).

Feb. 12 The building erected in 1840 by the Society Library at the south-east corner of Broadway and Leonard St., but now occupied by S. B. Chittenden & Co., is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Herald, F 13, 1867; L. M. R. K., III: 957. See also view and description in Harper's Weekly, XI: 140, 142.

27 "The well-known pear-tree planted by Gov. Stuyvesant, and which has stood for two centuries, came at last to a sudden demise during the latter part of last week. This old and famous tree stood on the corner of Thirteenth-street and Third-avenue, in a circular inclosure of iron railing, erected, we believe, by Mr. Wainwright, a descendent of the old Dutch Governor. . . . The destruction of this old landmark is stated to have resulted from a collision of vehicles, one of which was thrown against the tree with sufficient force to break it down. Laborers were engaged in removing the limbs and trunk yesterday, which were proclaimed obstructions to travel."—N. Y. Times, F 27, 1867. See views in Man. Com. Coun. (1861), 532, and Greatorex, Old N. Y., opp. p. 89. In 1838 (q.v., Je 15), the tree was enclosed with a wooden railing. The N. Y. Historical Soc. owns a cross-section of this tree.

Mar. 1 The rebuilt Academy of Music (see My 21, 1866) is opened.—N. Y. World, Mr 2, 1867; L. M. R. K., III: 982. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 683.

14 Comptroller Connolly reports to the legislature, in detail, regarding unexpended appropriations. Among these items are the following in the street department:

Battery enlargement	$19,718.42
" improvement	8,366.52
Bridge over Broadway	14,661.00
Coenties Reef, blasting, etc.	11,756.00
Diamond " "	4,438.00
Fourth Avenue Parks	7,271.48
Grading Hamilton Square	10,729.00
Madison Park, iron railing	39,847.00
Mount Morris, improvement of	98.56

19 The New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects is organized.—Proc., Ann. Convention A. I. A. (1867), 25; Eve. Post, Mr 20, 1867. The Institute was founded as a local organization in 1857 (q.v.), and re-organized into a federal body in 1867.—President's address in Third Ann. Convention, 1869. See also Sturgis, Dict. of Arch. and Building (1902), under "Societies of Architects."

20 The Evening Post publishes the following description of the city: "Manhattan Island, from the Battery to the Spuyten Duyvil Creek, is thirteen and a half miles long, an average of one and three-fifths miles wide, and contains about fourteen thousand acres of land, of which less than a thousand are taken up by parks and public places. It has about thirty miles of water front upon two of the finest estuaries in the world; on the opposite shores of which lie two great tracts, capable of accommodating each a population twice as large as that New York now has.

"By its situation and other advantages New York is destined to remain the centre of commerce for the American continent. It has already nearly a million inhabitants, miserably accommodated for the most part. There are probably three thousand families who derive their support directly from daily labors performed by some of their members in the city.

"At present New York is the most inconveniently arranged commercial city in the world. Its wharfs are badly built, unsafe, and without shelter; its streets are badly paved, dirty, and necessarily overcrowded; its warehouses are at a distance from the ships, and for the most part without proper labor-saving machinery for 1867 Mar. 20 the quick and inexpensive transfer of goods; its railroad depots have no proper relations to the shipping or to the warehouses; transportation, needlessly and enormously increased by this ill-arrangement, is made more costly yet by uneven pavements, which waste the strength of horses. Its laborers are badly lodged, and in every way disaccommodated; the means of going from one part of the city to the other are so badly contrived that a considerable part of the working population—which includes nearly all the youth and men, and thousands of women and girls—spend a sixth part of their working days on the street cars or omnibuses, and the upper part of the island is made almost useless to persons engaged in daily business of any kind in the city." The rest of a long account is given to a prophetic description of what the city will be "thirty or fourty years hence." This would be about the year 1900, and many of the improvements here suggested have been realized, some of them in a far better way (particularly the transportation facilities) than was foretold in 1867.

" Tammany Hall, on the corner of Nassau and Frankfort Sts., is sold to Charles A. Dana for $150,000. It is to be transformed into a newspaper office.—Harper's Weekly, XI: 211; N. Y. Com. Adv., Mr 21, 1867. The Sun occupied the building from 1868 until 1915 when it was demolished.—L. M. R. K., III: 939; descrip. of Pl. 163, III: 846. For a brief account of Dana, see Stephen Fiske's Off-Hand Portraits of Prominent New Yorkers (1884), 85 et seq.

21 The Tammany Society purchases, for $80,000, the property of the N. Y. University Medical College on 14th St. between Third Ave. and Irving Place.—N. Y. Com. Adv., Mr 21, 1867; and see My 21, 1866. The corner-stone of the present Tammany Hall was laid on July 4 (q. v.).

22 George Peabody gives a dinner at the Fifth Ave. Hotel in honour of Gen. and Mrs. Grant and the trustees of the Southern Educational Fund.—N. Y. Times, Mr 23, 1867.

23 A disastrous fire occurs, resulting in the complete destruction of the Winter Garden Theatre (formerly the Metropolitan—see S 14, 1859), and considerable damage to the Southern Hotel, formerly known as the Lafarge House (see Je 16, 1866). The total loss is estimated at $250,000.—N. Y. Times, Mr 24, 1867. The Grand Central Hotel was built on the site of the theatre.—L. M. R. K., III: 986.

29 The legislature passes an act "to provide for a Convention to revise and amend the Constitution." Arrangements are made for the election of 160 delegates to that convention, on April 23.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 194.

" An act is passed reducing the size of Hamilton Square, as laid out in the map of 1807, by discontinuing that part lying between Fourth and Fifth Aves., and 66th and 68th Sts.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 196; L. M. R. K., III: 970. The square was closed in 1868 (q. v., Ap 20).

30 Alaska is purchased from Russia for $7,200,000.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 211–13.

" The site of the U. S. Revenue Dock (Barge Office) on the south-east end of the Battery is bought by the government from the city for $10,000. The cost of construction work, etc. to June 30, 1875, was $214,778.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Architect, U. S. Treasury Dept. (1875), 19; Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXIV: 395.

Apr. 11 On this day, the author was born, in the brown stone house still standing on the south-east corner of Madison Ave. and 37th St., at that time the residence of his grandfather, Isaac N. Phelps, and now occupied by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan.

Much of my playtime in early childhood, Spring, Autumn, and Winter, was spent in the pleasant garden which stretched from street to street back of my grandfather's house, and during most of this time my family occupied the "dower-house," on the corner directly across the avenue. From the upper windows of this house I used to watch the ships passing up and down the East River. Lexington Avenue was still a pretty rural district, and there were but few signs of civilization to the north, although from my nursery window, looking north-east toward Zion Church, the view was almost the same as that which existed fifty years later, when we finally left the house.

" The city conveys to the U. S. government, for $500,000, the lower end of City Hall Park, bounded by Broadway, Mail St., and Park Row, as a site for a post-office (see Je 26, 1866). The property embraces an area of 65,259 sq. feet. The conveyance is made "Upon the express condition, however, that the premises above described and every part and parcel thereof, and any building that may be erected thereon shall at all times hereafter be used and occupied exclusively as and for a postoffice and court-house for the United States of America and for no other purpose whatever, and upon the further condition that if the said premises shall at any time or times cease to be used for the purposes above-limited or for some one of them or if the same shall be used for any other purposes than those above specified, the said premises hereby conveyed and all right, title, estate and interest therein shall revert to and be reinvested in the said parties of the first part, their successors and assigns and the said parties of the first part shall thereupon become the absolute owners of the said premises and every part thereof with the appurtenances and they may then re-enter the said premises and every part thereof in the same manner and to the same extent as if these presents had not been executed."—Liber Deeds, MXII: 142 et seq.; *Ann. " The Rutgers Female Institute (see 1860) receives a full collegiate charter and is hereafter known as the Rutgers Female College.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 323. See 1883.

15 "The foot-bridge at the junction of Broadway and Fulton streets" is ready for public use. It has been erected at a cost of $14,000.—N. Y. Times, Ap 16, 1867. This was the Loew bridge and was built by the city because Broadway, "particularly the narrow portion of it below the Park," was so overcrowded with vehicles that it was "impossible at certain times of the day to pass from one sidewalk of the street to the other without imminent danger of life and limb."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CI: 394; CII: 607, 690; CVI: 151; CIX: 260, 394. See also L. M. R. K., III: 926, and Harper's Weekly, XI: 353. A bridge across Broadway at Fulton St. had been proposed as early as 1852.—Man. Com. Coun. (1856), 424. The bridge proved a failure and in 1868 (q. v., Jl 21) was ordered removed.

16 The legislature incorporates the New York Bridge Co. with an initial capital of $5,000,000, and authorises the cities of New York and Brooklyn to subscribe for stock. This company was organised for the purpose of building a bridge across East River.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 399. See My 23.

" Madison Ave. is extended from 86th to 120th St., and the extension declared a public street.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 403.

22 The legislature passes "An Act to provide for the construction of an experimental line of railway in the counties of New York and Westchester" (see Ja 31). This authorises the West Side and Yonkers Patent Railway Co. (see Ap 20, 1866) to build within one year an experimental line of elevated railroad on Greenwich St., to be operated by cables attached to stationary engines. This is to be examined by commissioners and, if their report is favourable, the line is to be extended along Greenwich St. and Ninth Ave. to Yonkers.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 489. See Jl 2.

23 Delegates to the forthcoming constitutional convention (see Mr 29), 160 in all, are chosen at a special election. Their names appear in the journal of the convention. The convention opened on June 4 (q. v.).—Journal of the Convention, 3–14.

24 An act of the legislature authorises the acquisition by the city of lands comprised in the present Riverside Park.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 697. The city obtained possession in Aug., 1872, and on March 29, 1873, Frederick L. Olmsted completed a map of the park. Additional lands were acquired in 1891, 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902.—3d Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs of Dept. of Pub. P'ks (1872–73), 6, 59, 299; Rep., Dept. of P'ks (1902), 10–11; Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51. See also 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 165–66, and L. M. R. K., III: 971.

" The legislature passes an act "to alter the map or plan of certain portions of the city of New York, and for the laying out and improvement of the same." It defines the powers of the commissioners of Central Park in laying out, widening, grading, and improving streets, avenues, roads, public squares and places, between 59th and 155th Sts., west of Eighth Ave.; also new pier and bulkhead lines from 55th St. to Spuyten Duyvil Creek. Such powers shall cease on May 1, 1872.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 697.

May 10 The N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co. is directed to construct within two years, up to the grade of Fourth ave., "a substantial stone or brick wall, with suitable coping upon each side of their road, upon a line not extending twenty-six feet in the clear at any point of 1867 May 10 measurement below the tunnel at Ninety-second street. . . . and from the north side of Seventy-ninth street to the south side of Eighty-eighth street, where the road bed or track is below the grade of the avenue, and where the same is not arched or covered, and shall also, within said period, erect upon said wall (except at street crossings, where bridges are, or shall be constructed) a substantial iron fence for the protection of persons using said avenue." The company is also to construct "an arch of masonry work over the track of the road . . . in Fourth avenue . . . from the south line of Eighty-eighth street to and connecting with the rock cut so called on Ninety-second street."—Laws of N. Y. (1867), chap. 880.

13 Jefferson Davis, having been brought before the U. S. circuit court at Richmond, Va., for trial on a charge of treason, is released under $100,000 bail. Horace Greeley heads the list of 16 bondsmen. —Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 50–59. The Union League Club objected to Greeley's action, and, on May 23, he wrote defending himself on this point, and also for advocating clemency toward the recent rebels.—Letter of Horace Greeley, etc. (1867), in N. Y. P. L.

14 The first New York tenement-house law is passed by the legislature. After defining a tenement-house, this law provides that every such building shall have a fire escape approved by the building inspector, a ventilator in the roof over the main hall, receptacles for garbage and other refuse, and proper sewage facilities. In addition, no basement or cellar rooms may be occupied without a permit from the board of health, and even then they must be at least seven feet high and one foot above the sidewalk, and have an open area in front, properly drained, and a window of at least nine square feet; all halls must open directly to the air; each habitable room must be at least eight feet high and have at least one window connected with the open air or a ventilator leading into the hall or into another room connected with the air; the storage of combustibles and the keeping of animals, except dogs and cats, are prohibited; there must be an open space, between buildings erected on the same lot, of 10 feet if they are one storey high and an additional five feet for each additional storey; new tenements must have a chimney or open fire-place for each set of rooms, and running water at one or more places in the house or in the yard; health officers must have free access to tenements at all times. Violations are punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.—Laws of N. Y. (1867), 908; De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 94–97. See Je 16, 1879. A census of tenement-houses in this year "revealed the the fact that 18,582 existed, of which 5,814 were reported in bad sanitary condition from neglect, and 9,846 in bad sanitary condition from any cause."—Gould, The Housing of the Working People (1895), 72.

18 The common council orders that action be taken against persons closing Little Water St. or Mission Place, and that the same be restored to public use.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXV: 109–10. See Ap 3, 1809; My 16, 1855.

23 The New York Bridge Co. (see Ap 16) appoints John A. Roebling engineer in charge of the construction of its bridge across the East River. Mr. Roebling was injured in the course of his work and died July 22, 1869. His place was filled by his son Col. Washington A. Roebling, under whose supervision the work was completed.—Green, Complete Hist. of the N. Y. and Brooklyn Bridge, 12. See My 24, 1883.

June — In this month, a map was made of the public drive (now Riverside Drive) from 156th to Dyckman St.—See original filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 2320. See also, in the same office, Map No. 2422, which was probably made in this year, and which shows the drive from 72d to 129th St., including the lay-out, elevations, and property.

3 At 12 o'clock on this day the competition for the plans for the new post-office (see Ap 11) ended.—N. Y. Times, Je 2, 1867. An exhibition of the plans submitted was held from June 6 to 8 in the rooms of the board of underwriters, 156 Broadway. One of the papers said of them: "There were fifty-one drawings with accompanying plans, of which several are worthy of examination. The majority, however, of the designs are wanting in originality and appositeness, and perhaps a result quite as satisfactory would have been reached at less expense, had an architect of standing been employed to select from among the public buildings of the world several of the most elegant, and combine their most excellent points. . . . as it is averred that our most distinguished architects have, for obvious reasons, declined to stake their reputations upon the decision of a Commission composed of men who are not necessarily competent judges of the art, it will not be wonderful if the very best result is not reached by the method that has been pursued." Prizes of $5,000, $3,000, $2,000, and $1,000 were offered for the four best plans, $500 each for the next five, and $300 each for the following five. The 51 plans were briefly described.—Ibid., Je 7–9, 1867. See, further, D 28, 1867, and F 29, 1868. The post-office was begun in 1869 (q. v., Ag 9).

4 The state constitutional convention, delegates to which were elected on April 23 (q. v.), opens in the assembly chamber at Albany, and Wm. A. Wheeler, of Malone, is chosen president of the convention. The work of the convention was not concluded until Feb. 28, 1868 (q. v.).—Jour. of the Convention, 15, 1261. "It sat nearly four times as long as the Convention of 1821, and twice as long as the Convention of 1846."—Lincoln, Const. Hist. of N. Y., II: 419. "The debates and proceedings of the Convention of 1867 [published in 5 vols.] . . . for their learning and breadth of discussion of Constitutional questions will always be of interest to students of the political history of this State."—Hill, *Development of Constitutional Law in N. 20 The Citizens' Association submits to the constitutional convention (see Je 4) some proposed "alterations in the fundamental law of the State." Many of these suggestions seem very modern, such as "an appointed instead of an elective Judiciary," the appointment, instead of election, of "the Secretary of State, the State Comptroller, the State Treasurer, the Attorney-General, the State Engineer and Surveyor, the Canal Commissioners and the Inspectors of State Prisons—said officers to constitute a cabinet for the Governor," "Manhood suffrage with educational qualifications," and "Representation of Minorities."—Alterations in the Fundamental Law of the State, proposed by the Citizens' Association of New-York.

July 1 The North German Confederation, composed of 22 states, is established. The king of Prussia is president.—Andrews, Hist. of Development of Modern Europe, II: 255–56.

2 Work is begun on the experimental elevated road in Greenwich St. (see Ap 22).—Harper's Weekly, XII: 477. 23 At a special meeting of the Union Republican general committee of New York at headquarters at the corner of Broadway and 23d St., Gen. Grant is nominated for president.—N. Y. Times, Jl 24, 1867. See D 4.

Aug. — The corner-stone of the new building of the Coloured Orphan Asylum (see Jl 13, 1863) is laid at the north-west corner of 143d St. and Tenth Ave. The building was completed in 1868.—Richmond, N. Y. and Its Institutions, 302 et seq. The present home of the Institution (1926) is at 261st St. and Riverdale Ave.

Sept. 2 Christy's Minstrel Hall, on West 24th St. (see N 30, 1865), is altered into a complete theatre by C. H. Garland and opened as the Fifth Avenue.—Brown, II: 400; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See Ja 25, 1869, for its next transformation.

Sept. 16 The board of aldermen passes a resolution directing the street commissioner "to remove the rail-tracks which were laid down on the Battery Grounds on Sunday, the 15th inst.; and to restore, or cause to be restored, the walks thereon to the condition in which they existed previous to laying down such railroad tracks."—N. Y. Times, S 17, 1867.

22 The Fourth Presbyterian Church on 34th St. near Broadway is dedicated.—N. Y. Times, Sept 23, 1867. See L. M. R. K., III: 931.

29 The reconstructed St. George's Church on Stuyvesant Square (see N 14, 1865) is opened for public worship. It was consecrated Dec. 19, 1867.—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Church, 235.

Oct. 16 The new iron bridge over Harlem River, begun in 1860, is formally opened to the public. The old bridge is to be removed soon. —N. Y. Times, O 17, 1867. A history of the construction and a description of the new bridge is contained in ibid.

22 The Fort Gansevoort property, bounded by Thirteenth Ave., Gansevoort St., West St., and West 12th St., is sold by the city at public auction.—N. Y. Times, O 23 and 25, 1867.

Nov. — "The Astor Library has been in existence fourteen years, and now possesses one hundred and thirty-five thousand volumes, while the capacities of the present buildings are equal to the accommodation of three hundred and fifty thousand. Four thousand volumes were added in 1867, and additions are constantly being made. . . . During the past year there have been about twenty-five thousand readers in the two halls, and about fifty thousand volumes read. Besides these, large numbers have been admitted to the alcoves—authors, statistical writers, members of the press, etc." —Hist. Mag., 2d ser., II: 319.

19 Chas. Dickens arrives at Boston on his second visit to America. He comes to give a series of readings from his own works, in the principal cities of the U. S.—Dolby, Chas. Dickens as I knew him, 150–60. See D 7.

21 The 200 trees which recently adorned St. John's Park have all been felled and the stumps extracted. The temporary freight depot of the Hudson River R. R. (see O 20, 1866) will soon be erected.—N. Y. Com. Adv., N 21, 1867; L. M. R. K., III: 971; descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 609.

25 A plan for developing the west side of the city, from 55th to 155th St., is adopted by the board of commissioners of the Central Park, under the act of April 24, 1867. This district embraced property owned by more separate persons, and paid more taxes, than did all that part of the city above Astor Place in 1811, when the commissioners for laying out the city reported the plan which, in 1867, was amended by the new plan. The map accompanying the report of Andrew H. Green, comptroller of the park, shows the new streets, avenues, public squares and places, new pier and bulkhead lines, and the elevations above high water. The parts of former streets, avenues, and roads, not shown on the map, were abandoned and closed. By comparison with the Commissioners' Map of 1807–1811, it is seen that the Old Bloomingdale Road is thus finally abandoned and the "Road or Public Drive" (the Boulevard or extension of Broadway) is substituted in its place.—11th Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1867), 157–66. See also Map of the Boulevard, compiled and drawn by John Crofton, 1867, in Stuart collection. On June 15, 1868, the supreme court, having appointed commissioners on July 12, 1866, to open the boulevard, confirmed their report, but excluded from the plan of the boulevard certain angular pieces of land at the intersection of the road with Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Aves. During 1868 the work of regulating and grading the road was in progress, it having been commenced Sept. 21. It was hoped it would be opened for travel by Jan. 1, 1871.—12th Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1868), 59; 13th Ann. Rep. (1869), 64. See also map dated March 7, 1868, filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 2428.

28 The Fenian organizations of New York hold a public funeral ceremony in memory of the Irish patriots, Allen, O'Brien, and Larkin, who were recently hanged at Manchester, Eng. Fully 10,000 people parade.—N. Y. Times, N 29, 1867.

Dec. — Jas. E. Serrell, a civil engineer and city surveyor, publishes a Memorial . . . asking the action of Congress on the proposed change of the eastern boundary of the city of New York, by the construction of a new East River, and the filling up of Hell-Gate. He proposes this novel plan in the belief that, by 1899, the population of "New York and its vicinity" will be 7,000,000 of people.

In 1869, Serrell published a Plan and description proposed to re-model the city of New York and its vicinity, by making a New East River, filling up Hell-Gate, and annexing Brooklyn [etc.], also extending into Westchester county.

Dec. — John T. Hoffman is re-elected mayor. Two years before, both the Democratic machines, Tammany and Mozart, united in his support. This time Mozart withdrew its support and nominated ex-Mayor Fernando Wood. The Republicans nominated William A. Darling, but many members of the party feared that Wood might be elected and voted for Hoffman, whose plurality exceeded 40,000. —N. Y. Sun, D 4, 1867; N. Y. Tribune, D 4, 1867. 3

"The public feeling in favor of the nomination of Gen. Grant for the Presidency, which has been rapidly increasing in this vicinity for some time past," culminates in a large mass-meeting at Cooper Institute. Speeches are made by A. T. Stewart, Judge Hilton, F. B. Cutting, Gen. Sickles, Lyman Tremaine, and others.—N. Y. Times, D 5, 1867. 4

Dickens arrives in New York from Boston and puts up at the Westminster Hotel in Irving Place.—Dolby, Chas. Dickens as I knew him, 180–83. 7

Charles Dickens gives his first reading in New York, at Steinway Hall. The series opens with A Christmas Carol.—N. Y. Times, D 10, 1867. George Dolby, his secretary and manager, afterwards wrote: "The success of the Readings in New York far exceeded Mr. Dickens's most sanguine expectations, and but for the extra exertion in reading in so large a hall as the Steinway, under the burden of an influenza cold, everything would have been in the highest degree satisfactory. He described the New York audience as being 'far better than that at Boston,' which was saying a great deal for them."—Dolby, Chas. Dickens as I knew him, 184. See Ap 18, 1868. 9

The commissioners appointed to select a plan for the new post-office (see Je 3), after much deliberation, decide that none of the 52 designs submitted is wholly satisfactory or worthy of recommendation to the federal authorities, and that therefore no award of the first and second premiums ($5,000 and $3,000) shall be made. They agree, however, to award prizes to the best 15 designs, and to extract and draft from those designs to which premiums have been awarded such a plan as will, in their judgment, meet the approval of the authorities of the United States for the purposes contemplated. The awards given were: $2,000 each to John Correja for plan No. 18, Richard M. Hunt for No. 34, N. Le Brun for No. 36, Schultz & Schoen for No. 48, and Renwick & Sands for No. 51; $500 each to Wm. Field, Son & Co. for No. 16, Duncan J. Mac Rae for No. 23, Patter & Clinton for No. 28, Alex. Saeltzer for No. 29, and James H. Giles for No. 47; $300 each to Walter Dickson for No. 12, Hammatt Billings for No. 22, G. King & Wilcox for No. 25, Louis Burger for No. 26, and E. J. M. Derrick for No. 39.—N. Y. Times, D 29, 1867. See F 29, 1868. (This account of the competition is incomplete, and in some respects misleading. See Addenda.—I. N. P. S.) 28

The annual report on Central Park states that the work done during the past year includes the following: "The foundation-work of a structure [the Belvedere] contemplated as a lookout at the south-west corner of the old Reservoir has been commenced. . . . 31

"The interior of the portion of the brick edifice at Mt. St. Vincent [see D 30, 1865] formerly used as the chapel of the Convent, has been decorated and fitted for the reception of the statuary, and although this gallery is situated at a remote part of the grounds, it is much frequented, and is probably the most generally attractive collection and arrangement of statuary in the whole country."—11th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Cent. P'k (1868).

On this date, the comptroller submitted a printed report to the commissioners of the sinking fund in response to a resolution passed on May 21, 1867, calling for a report on the condition of the wharves, piers, and slips belonging to the city. This report is in two volumes, one covering the East River from Whitehall to 130th St., and the other the North River, from Albany St. to 155th St. The report is illustrated by careful drawings of all wharves, piers, and slips, giving dimensions, construction, cost, present value, recommendations for alterations, extensions, repairs, etc. "

In this year, Gladstone became prime minister; his "Great Ministry" lasted until 1874.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 464–66. —

In this year, Léon Gambetta came into prominence in France as an opposer of Napoleon III and the Empire. He was one of the — Painting*, 255 et seq.

— In this year, with the widening of the Bloomingdale Road into the new Boulevard, an old house was torn down on the west side of Broadway, between 75th and 76th Sts., which was erected before the Revolution, and in which Louis Philippe taught school during his exile in New York. It was formerly the homestead of the Somerindyke family, who once owned nearly all the surrounding part of the island not included in the extensive Harsen estate. For a description of the house, see Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, 597–98. See also Greatorex, Old N. Y., 184–90, and L. M. R. K., III: 952.

— In this year, the Bloomingdale Reformed Dutch Church (see Ag 4, 1816) was demolished.—Greatorex, Old N. Y., II: 142; L. M. R. K., III: 934. A view of the church shortly before its demolition is reproduced as Pl. 153-a, Vol. III.

— The P. E. Church of the Heavenly Rest at 551 Fifth Ave., between 45th and 46th Sts., was erected in this year and opened in 1869.—L. M. R. K., III: 932. The parish originated in services held in the hall of Rutgers Female College in 1865.—King's Handbook, 532. The church was demolished in the early summer of 1925.—N. Y. Times, Ap 20, 1925.

— In this year, the bronze statue of Abraham Lincoln, by Henry Kirke Brown, in Union Square, was given to the city.—Cat. Works of Art Belonging to the City, 137; L. M. R. K., III: 964. The railing was erected in 1872–73.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XL: 232; XLI: 14. For view and description, see Harper's Weekly, XIV: 133.

— Bulkhead lines are established around the north end of the island, from 55th St. on the Hudson River to Third Ave. on the Harlem River.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 388; 3*d Ann. Rep. of the Park Com'rs* (1872–1873), 224.

— Among the buildings reported by the supt. of buildings as "erected" this year (plans filed or work begun) are the following: The N. Y. Life Insurance Company's 5-storey brick building on the east side of Broadway, from Leonard St. to Catherine Lane; the Equitable Life Assurance Society's 5-storey granite building, at the south-east corner of Broadway and Cedar St.; a new wing of St. Luke's Hospital, at the south-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 55th St.; the Orphan Asylum for Church of St. Vincent de Paul, on the north side of 39th St., west of Seventh Ave.; and a "Belvidere or Festival Hall" in Jones's Woods.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1862–1872), 429, 430–31, 435, 436, 443, 447, 450–51.

— The theatres and large public halls in New York at this time were: Stadt Theatre, at 45 Bowery; Bowery Theatre, at 48 Bowery; Pastor's Opera-house, at 201 Bowery; Broadway Theatre, at 485 Broadway; San Francisco Minstrels, at 585 Broadway; Theatre Comique, at 514 Broadway; Niblo's Garden, at 578 Broadway; Olympic Theatre, at 624 Broadway; Kelly & Leon's Minstrels, at 720 Broadway; New York Theatre, at 728 & 730 Broadway; Wallack's Theatre, at 844 Broadway; New York Circus, on East 14th St.; Steinway Hall, at 109 & 111 E. 14th St.; Tammany Hall; Bryant's Minstrels, East 14th St.; Academy of Music; Wood's Theatre, at 1221 Broadway; Booth's Theatre; Pike's Opera House (see Ja 9), at the n. w. cor. of Eighth Ave. & 23d St.; French Theatre, at 75 W. 14th St.; and Brougham's Theatre, on W. 24th St. All of these are described in detail in the *Ann. at this time in the vicinity of Canal, Broome, Reade, and Duane —
Sts., see the Hist. Mag. of this date.

A meeting under the auspices of the Union Republican Cam- 18
paign Club is held at Cooper Institute. Its object is to ratify the nominations of Grant and Fenton for president and vice-president respectively.—N. Y. Times, F 19, 1868.

One hundred and twenty-five Pontifical Zouave recruits from 20
Canada, en route to Rome, arrive in New York, at the College of the Jesuits in West 16th St. They sailed for Europe on Feb. 22.—N. Y. Times, F 22, 1868.

The house of representatives resolves to impeach Pres. Johnson 24
"for high crimes and misdemeanors in office." He is charged with violating the Tenure of Office Act, and much friction exists between the executive and congress because of his opposition to the Reconstruction Acts.—Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 107–11, 114–157. The trial began on March 30 and lasted until May 26. Johnson was acquitted by a vote of 35 to 19.—Ibid., VI: 115–57.

The Presbyterian Hospital is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. 28
(1868), chaps. 15 and 44. It was founded by James Lenox, who donated the site in 76th St. and also contributed a large sum of money.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 774–75. The hospital was opened on Oct. 10, 1872 (q.v.).

The city acquires by condemnation proceedings land at Broad- " way and 59th St. Here Columbus Circle was developed.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 49; L. M. R. K., III: 969.

The state constitutional convention, which assembled on June "
4, 1867 (q.v.), concludes its labours and submits for the decision of the voters a revised constitution, accompanied by an "Address to the People."—Jour. of the Convention, 1202–6, 1214–53, 1254–61. This constitution, with the exception of the article on the judiciary, was disapproved by the people, Nov. 2, 1869 (q.v.). The Times anticipated this outcome in the following editorial:

"The framers of the proposed Constitution knew very well, or ought to have known, that the Legislature and our local municipality became corrupt, and have continued to be wholly corrupt, through the unceasing and powerful influence of the parties who project street railroads, and engineer such legislation as appertains to the general subject. The parties consist of a combination of leading Republicans and Democrats who . . . unlock the public purse to mutual plunder, and make equal division of franchises which if bestowed with a view to public advantage would lighten the heavy burdens of an oppressed community."—N. Y. Times, Mr 1, 1868.

Feb. 29 "The plan of the new structure to be erected in the City Hall Park for the departments of the Post-office and United States Courts has at last been fixed upon, and the work will be commenced just as soon as Congress makes the required appropriation." After the failure to secure a wholly satisfactory plan by competition (see Je 3 and D 28, 1867), a committee of architects was appointed to consider all the plans submitted and to draft a new one combining the best points of each. This committee consisted of Richard M. Hunt, chairman, Renwick & Sands, N. Le Brun, J. Correja, and Schulze & Schoen. They completed their work in this month and placed the final design in the hands of Postmaster Kelly who submitted it to the authorities at Washington, by whom it was approved. The plan is described in detail.—N. Y. Times, F 29, 1868.

Mar. 3 In the early morning of this day, Barnum's Museum at Nos. 539 and 541 Broadway (see S 6, 1865) was completely destroyed by fire. The loss was estimated at $400,000.—N. Y. Times, Mr 3 and 4, 1868. See also L. M. R. K., III: 982, and view in Harper's Weekly, XII: 188. This was on the west side of Broadway above Spring St.

10 "Humpty Dumpty" is produced in New York for the first time, at the Olympic (formerly Laura Keene's) Theatre, with George L. Fox as Clown and Charles K. Fox as Pantaloon.—Brown, II: 159; III: 116–17.

17 The tearing down of St. George's chapel on Beekman St. is in progress. "At present the graves of revolutionary heroes serve as a depository for ashes and rubbish, and vessels are emptied daily from the windows adjoining, on places where a hundred years ago, was carved the sacred words, never to be effaced, 'Requiescat in pace.'" The six lots comprising this property are to be sold. "The property purchased from Colonel Beekman for £500 [see Jl 11, D 21, 1748; Ja 23, Mr 23, 1749] is now worth, it is said, half a million dollars."—N. Y. World, Mr 17, 1868. The property was purchased by the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co.—Anstice, Hist. of St. George's Ch., 211–14. See also L. M. R. K., III: 933. An original sketch showing the church in process of demolition was made by Miss Greatorex and hangs in the parlor of the Chelsea Hotel on W. 23d St. It is reproduced as Pl. 153-b, Vol. III. See also Greatorex, Old N. Y., 39–41. See, further, 1871.

" The rebuilt St. Patrick's Cathedral on Mott St., which was burned down on Oct. 6, 1866 (q. v.), is dedicated.—N. Y. Times, Mr 18, 1868. See L. M. R. K., III: 936, under "St. Patrick's Pro-Cathedral."

18 Sorosis, the first women's club in New York, is founded. It was incorporated on Dec. 30.—Rep. of the 21st Anniversary of Sorosis (N. Y., 1890); Articles of Incorporation, Constitution, etc. (N. Y., 1892).

20 The commissioners of Central Park authorise Andrew H. Green, comptroller of the park, to acquire title to "the public squares and places laid out . . . south of a line drawn through Manhattan street from 12th avenue to 124th street and thence through 124th street to the 8th avenue."—21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 559. This was Morningside Park. The land was acquired, between 1868 and 1870, at a cost of $1,334,092.72.—Ibid. (1916), 560–61; L. M. R. K., III: 970. See also Prendergast, Record of Real Estate. See, further, O 11, 1873.

21 The first issue of the Real Estate Record and Builders' Guide appears.

31 The Union League Club (see F 6, 1863, and F 16, 1865) is formally installed in its new headquarters at the south-east corner of 26th St. and Madison Ave.—N. Y. Times, Ap 1, 1868. This was the Jerome residence (see 1865) which the club occupied until 1881 (q. v., Mr 5).—Descrip. of Pl. 136, III: 704; L. M. R. K., III: 939, 950. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XII: 605.

Apr. 8 The corner-stone of Edwin Booth's Theatre is laid at the south-east corner of Sixth Ave. and 23d St.—N. Y. Times, Ap 9, 1868. See L. M. R. K., III: 982. It was opened on Feb. 3, 1869 (q. v.).

" Butler's American Theatre on Crosby St. burns. This buildin which was formerly Mechanics' Hall, with entrance at 472 Broadway, had the Apprentices' Library on the second floor. It was still owned by the Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen, and leased to Robert W. Butler, previous to which it had been occupied by Bryant's Minstrels.—N. Y. World, Ap 8, 1868. Apr. 8

Nearly half the Battery sea-wall is finished, the coping-stones being laid on and the stone chain-posts in position for a considerable distance east of Castle Garden. A large amount of filling remains to be done.—N. Y. World, Ap 9, 1868. Prior to the building of this wall Castle Garden was connected with the Battery by a bridge. 9

The New York City Central Underground Co. is incorporated with the right to lay an underground railroad in New York City from the city hall to the Harlem River.—Laws N. Y. (1868), chap. 230; ibid. (1869), chap. 824; 1st Rep., N. Y. C. Central Underground Ry. Co. (Dec. 1871). See My 11, 1869 and Mr 9, 1870. 17

The New York press gives a farewell banquet to Charles Dickens at Delmonico's. Besides Dickens, the speakers include Horace Greeley, H. J. Raymond, G. W. Curtis, and Wm. A. Hurlburt.—N. Y. Times, Ap 19, 1868; Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 109–10. In his address, Dickens made an apology for his adverse comments, in American Notes and Martin Chuzzlewit, regarding New York and America, and promised to have this apology appended to all future copies of the works so long as he or his representatives should retain control of their publication.—Haswell's Reminiscences, 384–85. See Ap 20. 18

Charles Dickens gives his last reading in New York, at Steinway Hall. At this farewell appearance he read Christmas Carol and Pickwick Trial.—N. Y. Times, Ap 21, 1868. On April 22, he sailed for Europe.—Ibid., Ap 23, 1868. 20

An act is passed authorising the commissioners of the Central Park to set apart a site for a museum of history, antiquities, and art for the N. Y. Hist. Soc. on Fifth Ave. between 81st and 84th Sts., provided that if the museum be discontinued, the land shall revert to the park.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 478. "

The New York and Brooklyn Tubular Co. is incorporated with the right to make a tubular tunnel from New York between Wall and Jackson Sts. to Brooklyn between the foot of Montague St. and Hudson Ave.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 550. On April 20, 1869, the name of the company was changed to the N. Y. Tunnel Co.—Ibid. (1869), chap. 253. May 2

Memorial Day is first celebrated at New York, and elsewhere throughout the country, as a legal holiday.—N. Y. Times, My 31, 1868. 30

The Beach Pneumatic Transit Co. is incorporated to provide for the transmission of letters, packages, and merchandise in the cities of New York and Brooklyn by means of pneumatic tubes to be constructed beneath the surface of the streets and public places and under the waters of the East and North Rivers. An experimental tube, however, is first to be installed from the post-office in Nassau St. to 14th St., and put in successful operation.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 842. See My 3, 1869. June 1

The common council adopts resolutions of regret, on learning of the death of ex-Pres. Buchanan, at Wheatland, Pa., on June 1.—From original in metal file No. 373, city clerk's record-room. 2

The legislature appropriates $60,000 for paving Tompkins Square with Fisk concrete or other suitable material to make it available for parade purposes (see Ap 16, 1866).—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 853. See also 23d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 173–74. See Ap 16, 1879. 3

The legislature authorises the board of supervisors to levy a tax for county purposes, to provide certain sums for specified purposes. Among these is an allowance of $43,291.96 for completing "the new Harlem bridge."—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 854, p. 2031. "

The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in the Boulevard (Broadway), from 59th to 155th Sts.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 968. 15

A public banquet is given by the citizens of New York to the Chinese embassy, at Delmonico's, corner of 14th St. and Fifth Ave., at which the governor, lieut.-governor, the mayor, and many distinguished citizens are present.—Banquet to His Excellency Anson Burlingame, and his associates of the Chinese Embassy (1868). 23

1868 July 1 The state commissioners report that the elevated railroad in Greenwich St. (see Ap 22 and Jl 2, 1867) is a success, and the governor authorises its completion from the Battery to Spuyten Duyvel.—Harper's Weekly, XII: 477. See Jl 3.

3 A trial trip is made by Chas. Harvey on the new elevated railway in Greenwich St., and the rapid speed attained "leads the friends of the enterprise to hope that the problem of rapid and safe locomotion through the crowded streets of the city has been solved."—Harper's Weekly, XII: 477, and view on p. 476. See also N. Y. Times, Jl 4, 1868. A view of the trial is reproduced as A. Pl. 27B-b, Vol. III, where the date is erroneously given as 1867. See also descrip. of Pl. 133-a, III: 700. See, further, Jl 25.

4 Tammany Hall on 14th St. (see Jl 4, 1867) is first used when the Democratic national convention opens there on this day. During the convention, which lasted until July 9, ex-Gov. Horatio Seymour of New York was nominated for president, and Gen. Francis P. Blair of Missouri was nominated for vice-president.—N. Y. Times, Jl 5–10, 1868; Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, III: 84–87; Man. Com. Coun. (1868), 782 et seq. See also illustration and account of the new hall in Harper's Weekly, XII: 433, 438, and L. M. R. K., III: 939.

21 The supreme court declares the Loew bridge (see Ap 15, 1867) a public nuisance, especially injurious to Charles Knox (Knox, the hatter, Genin's rival), and orders that it be removed within 90 days and offered to the commissioners of Central Park. The bridge was "a failure as a public convenience" and "a serious obstacle to the free and uninterrupted uses of the streets," as well as damaging to adjoining property.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CXII: 76, 410, 530; Proc., App'd by the Mayor, XXXVI: 260–61. See also L. M. R. K., III: 926.

22 The city is authorised to lease a slip or basin, not exceeding 200 feet in front, at the easterly end of the Battery for the purpose of a salt water floating bath, and is directed to establish two free floating baths, one on the East River and one on the Hudson.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 879.

25 The Greenwich St. elevated road (see Jl 3) "is now in running order from the Battery to Cortlandt Street, and with the present machinery, the cars can be propelled, with little jar and oscillation, at the rate of fifteen miles an hour."—Harper's Weekly, XII: 477. See, further, Ap 23, 1870.

29 The common council is directed to construct piers on the Hudson River at the foot of each street from 13th St. to Hammond St.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 881.

Aug. 10 Eliza Greatorex thus describes the west side of the city above 59th St.: "Groups of what are called, on the outskirts of New York, 'squatters' shanties' are perched on the rocks, or nestled in the hollows, sheltered but malarious; the luxuriance of the vines over those small abodes is a comfort and refreshment to the eyes; grape-vines, trumpet-creepers, scarlet-runners, morning-glories,—big posies of sunflowers, subdued into almost delicacy of form and color by the deep green surrounding them, and the gray of the background. The market-gardens of the German people, who form so large a part of the suburban population, are set out with long rows of parsley, onions, carrots, each separate growth marked in form and tint, contrasting with the deep purple of the beet-roots and the red-brown earth, empty now, but soon to be filled with some later crop. . . . Farther on, the old mansions, degraded to restaurants and beer-gardens, are more numerous. . . . All the way up the avenue we have had beautiful vistas in the Park, through the high rocks on the western boundary. They have brought the park wall as far as this, and the sharp metallic 'clink, clink' of the drilling irons with their rhythmical ring tell the story of continual change and advance. At Elm Park (the former home of the Apthorpe family) we see what havoc has been made with the trees around it, within the last few months. Streets are rising from the low, irregular hollows; many deep places are being filled in; wagons come and go, the red shirts of their drivers making lovely points of color; the wheels crush through thick beds of weeds, yellow, purple and white; and everywhere the grass is of the brightest, freshest green, kept so by the rains which have fallen so plenteously all the spring and summer."—Greatorex, Old N. Y. (1875), 132–34. A view of Bloomingdale Village is in ibid., opp. p. 132.

20 Hamilton Square, created in 1807 and partially closed in 1867 (q. v., Mr 29), is finally ordered closed by the legislature, and the streets terminating in it extended through.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 885; L. M. R. K., III: 970. See also N. Y. Times, N 6, 1921

A survey of the square laid out in lots, made in 1869 by Edward Boyd, is filed as map No. 26 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office. See also map No. 35. Aug. 20

The first steps toward the organization of the New York Athletic Club are taken, at a meeting held on this day. The organization was completed Sept. 8, and the constitution adopted Dec. 1. Its first boat-house was built on the Harlem River in 1870.—N. Y. A. C. Jour. (Dec., 1896), 8. 27

By act of legislature the city charter is amended, provision being made for another change in the legislative body. The Dongan Charter (see Ap 22, 1686) provided for a law-making body of mayor, recorder, and 6 aldermen and 6 assistant aldermen representing the six wards, and this form continued for almost a century and a half, aldermen and assistants being added as the number of wards increased. The first bicameral council began its sessions on May 10, 1831 (q. v.), the two boards, constituted as before, sitting separately, and neither the mayor nor recorder being any longer included. The amended charter of April 12, 1853 (q. v.), retained the bicameral council, but a board of 60 councilmen "to be elected from as many districts" displaced the board of assistant aldermen. Four years later (see Ap 14, 1857) another experiment was tried, 22 aldermen from that number of wards being displaced by 17 aldermen from as many aldermanic districts, and the traditional one-year term was doubled. At the same time the very numerous councilmen were reduced to 24, six from each of the four senatorial districts. 31

Now, by this latest provision, the board of councilmen disappears, and a board of assistant aldermen comes into existence again, elected (like the aldermen) one from each assembly or aldermanic district, and having a term (like the aldermen) of two years. After necessary adjustments the terms of the members of both boards will end at the same time.—Laws of N. Y. (1868), chap. 887. The new arrangement had been in effect only a short time when it was changed by the "Tweed Charter" (see Ap 5, 1870).

Temple Emanu-El (see O 31, 1866), at Fifth Ave. and 43d St., is dedicated.—N. Y. Times, S 12, 1868; Jewish Encyclop., IX: 276; L. M. R. K., III: 929. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XII: 729. Sept. 11

The 100th anniversary of the opening of the John St. M. E. Church is commemorated with appropriate services.—N. Y. Times, O 26, 1868. 25

The corner-stone of the first building of the Y. M. C. A. (founded in 1852 and incorporated on April 3, 1866, q. v.) is laid, at the southwest corner of Fourth Ave. and 23d St. The building was dedicated Dec. 2, 1869 (q. v.).—17th Ann. Rep. of the Y. M. C. A. (1870); N. Y. Times, N 1, 1868. For description of the building, see Stone's Hist. of N. Y. City, 607–9. See Mr 27, 1903. 31

Soon after this date, the Coster mansion, erected in 1805 (q. v., Ap 30) at the corner of 30th St. and First Ave., and purchased in 1835 (q. v.) by Anson G. Phelps, was demolished. The site is now covered by tenements at Nos. 515–19 First Ave. and No. 349 E. 30th St.—Liber Mortgages, DCCCXCIX: 132; L. M. R. K., III: 949; descrip. of Pl. 153-d, III: 776. Mayor Hoffman, nominee of the Democrats, is elected governor of New York State.—N. Y. Tribune, N 6 and 7, 1868. See N 16. "

Mayor Hoffman, having been elected governor (see N 3), offers to the common council his resignation as mayor (to which 16

1868 Nov. 16 he was elected for a two-year term on Dec. 3, 1867, (q. v.), in order that "the necessary preparation may be made for an election."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CXII: 221–22. A. Oakey Hall was elected on Dec. 1 (q. v.) to succeed him.

23 District Attorney A. Oakey Hall is nominated for mayor by both Tammany and Mozart conventions, while the Republicans choose Col. F. A. Conkling as their candidate. Mayor Hoffman was "serenaded" after the Tammany convention and, in the course of his remarks, said "he knew of nothing that could give him more satisfaction than to turn over his official duties to his old and trusted friend, A. Oakey Hall."—N. Y. Sun, N 24, 1868.

30 The city leases to the Mount Sinai Hospital 13 lots on the east side of Lexington Ave., between 66th and 67th Sts., for 99 years, at $1 per year.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763. The corner-stone of the hospital was laid here on May 25, 1870 (q. v.).

Dec. 1 A. Oakey Hall, Tammany and Mozart candidate (see N 23), is elected mayor over his Republican opponent, Fred. A. Conkling, by a majority of 54,094.—N. Y. Times, D 2, 1868; Am. Ann. Cyclop. (1868), 550. For a brief sketch of Hall, see Stephen Fiske's Off-Hand Portraits of Prominent New Yorkers, 164 et seq.

30 Andrew H. Green directs the attention of his colleagues on the "Board of Commissioners of the Central Park" to the important subject of "bringing the City of New York and Kings County, a part of Westchester County, and a part of Queens and Richmond, including the various suburbs of the city, within a certain radial distance from the centre, under one common municipal government, to be arranged in departments, under a single executive head. . . . More than one and a half million of people are comprehended within the area of this City and its immediate neighborhood, all drawing sustenance from the commerce of New York, and many of them contributing but little towards the support of its government. An area that could be readily described, of convenient distances from the centre, would comprehend within its limits the residence as well as the place of business of most of its population; thus resolving the difficult question of taxation of non-residents that now exists."—12th Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs of Central Park, 162. This is one of the earliest suggestions looking toward the consolidated municipality of today. See Mr 4, 1890.

— As late as this year, a cedar tree against which Alexander Hamilton leaned while the seconds were arranging the preliminaries of his duel with Aaron Burr was still standing on the bluff at Weehawken. By 1871, however, the newly-completed road-bed of the West-Side R. R. had destroyed the tree, "besides removing every vestige of the narrow ledge on which the principals stood."—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 345–48; descrip. of A. Pl. 26-a, III: 877. For account of the duel, see Jl 11, 1804.

— During the 5 years from 1865 to 1869 inclusive, 1,039,808 alien immigrants arrived at the port of New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants in the U. S. (Wash., 1891), 64, 108, 109.

— Fifth Avenue was thus described in this year: . . . It has been invaded between 12th and 23d Streets by the aggressive influence of trade. First-class stores have been constructed out of brown-stone palaces and dry-goods, millinery, tailoring, restaurants, and music-stores are beginning to intrude. . . .

". . . But the special beauty of Fifth Avenue is its spacious sidewalks in the fashionable season, especially on a Sunday morning that's bright and sunny.

". . . moving through the rows of elegant residences, and crossing Fourteenth Street—the great rival of the Avenue itself—with half a dozen fine Churches on the way, we may pause a moment to consider the splendid and luxurious structure of the Union Club, on the corner of 21st Street. It is built of brown-stone, in superb style, and cost about $300,000.

"Next comes the fine, breezy, opening of Madison Square. The nucleus of American hotel architecture, and quite as central and representative of metropolitan wealth and fashion as Union Square. The Square itself occupies ten acres of turf and foliage and is surrounded by the magnificent dwellings and business buildings of Madison Avenue, 23d Street, Broadway, and Fifth Avenue. . . . 1869 —

". . . Of all the splendid buildings on Fifth Avenue, none will probably ever be so famous as the marble palace of Mr. A. T. Stewart, nearly completed at the corner of 34th Street. This will unquestionably be when completed, the most costly and luxurious private residence on the continent. Even in its present unfinished state words are almost inadequate to describe the beauty and unique grandeur of some of the details of its construction. Mr. Stewart hopes to have it ready for occupation by next fall. Before he enters it as a tenant it will have cost him upward of two million dollars.

". . . Immediately opposite the Distributing Reservoir on Fifth Avenue, is the building occupied by the Rutgers Female College. This excellent institution was removed to its present locality only a short time ago, and has proved very successful. The building, or series of buildings, were originally erected for dwellings—as, indeed, the two end buildings are at present occupied, the College using the central portion.

"The new Jewish Synagogue, on the Avenue, in the immediate neighborhood, is worthy of study, as the purest example of the Moresque style of architecture in this country.

"Before reaching Central Park, we pass a vast edifice in the course of construction, between 51st and 52nd Streets [error for 50th and 51st Sts.], on the east side of the Avenue. The walls have even now scarcely reached the height of 30 feet, but, when completed, it will be by far the most magnificent ecclesiastical building in the New World.

"St. Patrick's Cathedral, . . . was projected by the late Archbishop Hughes, who laid the corner-stone in 1858 [q. v., Ag 15], during which and the following year the foundations were laid and a portion of the superstructure built, when work was temporarily suspended. Upon the accession of Archbishop McCloskey, however, a new impetus was given to the work, which has been vigorously prosecuted ever since. The ground . . . is the most elevated on Fifth Avenue. . . . The first base-course is of Maine granite—the same as that used in the Treasury Building at the National Capital. . . . The material above the base-course is white marble, from the quarries of Pleasantville, Westchester County—a highly crystalline stone, productive of very beautiful effects, especially in the columns and elaborations of the work.

"The style of the building is decorated Gothic. . . .

". . . Above 59th Street, the Avenue is so far very little built upon; but the lots are held at extravagantly high prices, and it cannot be doubted that ere long all this portion of the street, overlooking Central Park, will be built up with a succession of elegant villas and mansions.

". . . Fifth Avenue is sometimes criticised as almost too solemn in its tone. The architecture lacks variety, it is true, and the too-prevailing brown-stone gives it a monotonous appearance. This is far from being the case, however, when filled with promenaders and vehicles. . . ."—Appleton's N. Y. Illustrated (1869), 20-34.

— On the south side of East 18th St., 100 feet west of Third Ave., was erected in this year the first modern apartment-house in New York. There were "four distinct suites of apartments" on each of the first four storeys, and the fifth or top storey was planned for artists' studios. The rentals were from $1,200 to $1,800 per annum for "each suite," and $920 for each studio, making a total of $23,000 a year. The owner was Rutherford Stuyvesant, and the architect Richard M. Hunt.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1862–1869), 570; N. Y. World, O 8, 1871. See 1871.

— In this year, the Church of the Puritans, on the south-west corner of Broadway and 15th St., was taken down, and the Tiffany building was erected on the site.—Greatorex, Old N. Y., 71–72, which contains view of the church just prior to its demolition. See also descrip. of Pl. 136, III: 704, and L. M. R. K., III: 928. The materials of the Church of the Puritans were purchased by the Baptists and re-erected in West 53d St. (see N 6, 1878).

— In this year, a "gothic arch elevated railway" was one of the plans submitted for rapid transit. It is described in a Report on the Gothic Arch Elevated City Railway, by Richard P. Morgan, Jr. (1869), a pamphlet in N. Y. P. L.

1869 The Medical College of New York University, having decided — to remove from New York Hospital (see 1851) to the vicinity of Bellevue Hospital, rents a building on East 26th St. Property on this street, east of First Ave. was acquired soon after and a building erected in 1876.—N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911.

— In this year, the tower and steeple of the North Dutch Church were destroyed by fire.—Greatorex, Old N. Y., 43.

— The following buildings are among those mentioned by the superintendant of buildings as having been "erected" (begun?) in this year: Madison Avenue Reformed Church, at the north-east corner of Madison Ave. and 57th St.; Children's Hospital for the Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled, at the north-west corner of 42d St. and Lexington Ave.; Croton Market, on the north side of 42d St. to 43d St., between Lexington and Park Aves.; the Presbyterian Home for Aged Women, on the north side of 73d St. east of Madison Ave.; the hotel building (now the Park Avenue) erected by A. T. Stewart at a cost of $3,000,000, on the west side of Park Ave. from 32d to 33d Sts.; the Gilsey House at the north-east corner of Broadway and 29th St.; the House of Mercy at the south-east corner of Riverside Boulevard and 86th St.; the easterly side of Castle Garden, for a baggage depot for the commissioners of emigration; Roosevelt Hospital, from 58th to 59th St., west of Ninth Ave.; the Department of Public Charities and Correction building, at the foot of 26th St., East River. Mansard roof construction was popular during this period.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1862–72), 612–13, 616, 619, 621–23.

— In this year, the Astor homestead at 88th St. and East River (see S 26, 1835) was demolished.—Greatorex, Old N. Y., 217, 222–23. See also L. M. R. K., III: 948.

— The work of regulating and grading Avenue St. Nicholas (see Ap 4, 1866) was commenced in this year between 125th and 155th Sts. Work on the lower end of the avenue (between 110th and 125th Sts.) was delayed until after completing the grading of Sixth and Seventh Aves., because it would interfere with travel on Harlem Lane, which was part of the Avenue St. Nicholas and was the main thoroughfare to and from the north end of Central Park.

The commissioners of Central Park laid out miles of streets and avenues, and established grades for them, in pursuance of the law of April 24, 1865 (q. v.), between 155th and Inwood Sts.; had maps made and monuments erected. They also established the lines of Broadway, as required by the law of May 17, 1869 (q. v.) 100 ft. in width, between 34th and 59th Sts.—13th Ann. Rep., Com'rs of Central Park (1870), 69–74.

— In Valentine's Manual for 1869 were published the following map and views: map of the city, showing its political divisions and subdivisions; iron building, cor. Broadway and 18th St., 16; iron building (A. T. Stewart's store), cor. Broadway and 10th St., 40; Booth's Theatre, s. e. cor. Apr. 5 The name of Brougham's Theatre (see Ja 25) is changed to the Fifth Avenue Theatre.—Brown, II: 403; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See Ag 16.

6 The American Museum of Natural History is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 119. On May 8, a collection from the duplicate specimens of natural history belonging to the state was authorised to be presented to the museum.—Ibid. (1869), chap. 774. See Je 2, 1874.

27 The board of supervisors of New York County is authorised to appropriate a sum not exceeding $30,000 for a soldiers' and sailors' monument to be erected under the direction of the commissioners of Central Park.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 350.

30 The legislature abolishes the election by the people of a board of education, and gives power to the mayor (A. Oakey Hall, at this time) to appoint 12 commissioners to constitute a new board.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 437.

May 3 The law of June 1, 1868 (q. v.), relating to the Beach Pneumatic Transit Co. is amended to include transportation of passengers.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), 512, 569. See F 26, 1870.

4 Madison Ave. is extended by the legislature to 124th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 560

" A large gathering assembles at Cooper Institute "to listen to addresses in favor of aiding the Cubans to throw off the Spanish yoke and organize an independent Government." There is a rumour that a filibustering expedition has sailed from New York to help the Cubans in their struggle against Spain.—N. Y. Times, My 5, 1869. This rumour was substantiated on May 6.—Ibid., My 6, 1869. During the next few days, enlistments and other activities in favour of the insurgent Cubans became so prominent that the Spanish consul at New York protested against them, on May 8.—Ibid., My 7–10, 1869. These activities continued, however, until finally the Cuban Junta and the chief New York filibusters were arrested and indicted.—Ibid., My 11, 14 and 26, and Je 18, 22, 23 and 24, 1869. The filibusters were later released on bond.—Ibid., Jl 24, 1869.

5 The legislature authorises the commissioners of Central Park to erect and maintain a meteorological and astronomical observatory, a museum of natural history, and an art gallery, in Central Park, and to provide the necessary equipment for them.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 595. In 1870, this observatory cooperated with the U. S. government in establishing a storm signal corps. The records and observations made there have played an important part in the solution of meteorological problems.—Ann. Rep., Dept. of Parks (1902), 24–27. Regarding the Museum of Natural History, see 1870.

" The Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital is created "for the treatment of indigent persons suffering from diseases of the eye and ear."—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 584. See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 777–78.

6 The legislature authorises the city to exchange the 65,259 sq. ft. in City Hall Park heretofore purchased by the U. S. (see Ap 11, 1867), for other lands there as a site for a post-office.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 649. However, the federal government decided to keep the site purchased in 1867, and the post-office build-

CHAP. 378

AN ACT

To unite into one municipality under the corporate name of The City of New York, the various communities lying in and about New York harbor, including the city and county of New York, the city of Brooklyn and the county of Kings, the county of Richmond, and part of the county of Queens, and to provide for the government thereof.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

CHAPTER I.

BOUNDARIES, BOROUGHS, POWERS, RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS OF THE CITY.

THE CITY OF NEW YORK; CORPORATIONS CONSOLIDATED; TERRITORY; SHORT TITLE OF THIS ACT.

Section 1. All the municipal and public corporations and parts of municipal and public corporations, including cities, villages, towns and school districts, but not including counties, within the following

Form No. 50.

State of New York, County of New York
City of New York

I, W. L. Strong Mayor of the City of New York, County of New York New York, do hereby certify that the annexed bill, to wit: "AN ACT

An act to unite into one municipality under the corporate name of The City of New York, the various communities lying in and about New York harbor, including the city and county of New York, the city of Brooklyn and the county of Kings, the county of Richmond, and part of the county of Queens, and to provide for the government thereof.

" has not been duly accepted by the city of New York and by the Mayor.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the corporate seal of said city to be affixed this 8th day of April 1897.

W. L. Strong
Mayor of the city of

C. ENDORSEMENTS SHOWING PASSAGE OF CHARTER BY LEGISLATURE, AND APPROVAL BY GOV., MAY 4, 1897.

1869 My 6 ing was begun there on Aug. 9 (q.v.).—15th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1910), 402–3.

" The Hansom Cab Co. is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 618.

7 The legislature reserves the triangular piece of ground, bounded by Ninth Ave., 63d St., and "the public drive," for a public place. —Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 689.

8 The Stock Exchange and the "Open Board" adopt a plan of consolidation.—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 52.

10 The Union Pacific R. R. and the Central Pacific R. R. meet at Promontory Point, Utah, and the first trans-continental railroad is completed. Elaborate ceremonies are held at the junction point and throughout the country. In New York, a "Te Deum" is sung in Trinity Church, the chimes are rung, and a salute of 100 guns is fired by order of the mayor.—Bailey, First Transcontinental R. R., 93–100.

12 In the annual "Tax Levies" bill, which passes the legislature, some 35 private organizations (the "Sisterhood of St. Mary Episcopal Church" heads the list) are granted "Donations for Charitable Purposes" which total $211,000. Section 10 of the act provides that hereafter "an annual amount equal to twenty per cent on the excise moneys received for said city in eighteen hundred and sixty eight . . . be distributed . . . by the board of education . . . for the support of schools educating children gratuitously in said city who are not provided for in the common schools thereof." —Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 876. Section 10 of this act was repealed the following year (see Ap 26, 1870).

" The city comptroller is authorised to raise, by the creation of public stock, a sum not exceeding $100,000 "For the purpose of constructing a necessary fire-proof roof to the hall of records, wherein all the records of real estate are preserved, and for adding an additional story thereto, and refitting the building in order to provide for the preservation of said records in a manner more secure than heretofore;" also a sum not exceeding $600,000 for completing and furnishing the county court-house "now near completion."—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 875. In 1870, an additional $40,000 was appropriated for the repairs to the hall of records. The walls were raised one storey and a fire-proof roof added.—Eve. Post, D 14, 1871, which contains an excellent summary of the history of the building. See also L. M. R. K., III: 972 and descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 589.

14 The New York Hospital, at the head of Pearl St., is being removed, and a new street (the continuation of Pearl) is to be cut through the grounds and building, between Worth and Duane Sts. This will connect with Thomas St., and thus establish a connection between Pearl St. and West Broadway. The improvement is needed for the constantly increasing traffic in this section of the city.—N. Y. Times, My 14, 1869; Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City, 598–99; Harper's Weekly, XIII: 340; L. M. R. K., III: 954–55; Pl. 174, Vol. III. The hospital moved uptown to a site between 15th and 16th Sts., west of Fifth Ave.

17 The legislature passes an act "to alter the plan of the city of New York, and to carry the same into effect." The alteration provided for is that Broadway between 34th and 59th Sts. "shall be widened to the width of one hundred feet and straightened . . . whenever practicable;" the plans are to be made by the commissioners of Central Park, and the corporation counsel is authorised to acquire title to the necessary lands; and for that purpose "to apply to the Supreme Court . . . for the appointment of three commissioners of estimate and assessment for such widening and straightening of Broadway." One third of the total expense may be assessed on the city, the remainder to be met by "the respective owners, lessees, parties and persons respectively entitled unto or interested in the land and premises required for or affected by the proceedings."—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 890.

19 Charles W. Eliot (Harvard, '53), a layman, 35 years of age, becomes president of Harvard University.—Universities and Their Sons (1898), 90, 114. His administration terminated Nov. 4, 1908.

20 The N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co. is authorised to build the "Grand Central Station" on the east side of Vanderbilt Ave. from 42d to 45th St.; and Vanderbilt Ave. between those streets is declared to be a public street. The depot is to "be constructed of the best materials, and the front of said building on Forty-second street shall be of Philadelphia pressed brick, brown or freestone, or marble and iron, and shall be finished in the best style of architecture."—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 919. See also L. M. R. K., III: 975, 1011. The first stone of the foundation of the station was laid on Sept. 1 (q.v.). May 20

The centennial anniversary of the dedication of the North Dutch Church is celebrated.—Proc. at the Centennial Anniversary, etc. (N. Y., 1869). 25

The corner-stone of the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church at the corner of Fifth Ave. and 48th St. is laid.—N. Y. World, My 26, 1869. The building was completed in 1872, the chapel in the rear having been erected in 1866.—Corwin's Manual, 999. The church is shown and described in King's Handbook, 336, 338. See also Kelley, 119, and L. M. R. K., III: 935. "

Blasting operations are begun to remove Pot Rock, Way's Reef, and Shelldrake, at Hell Gate, contract for this work having been made by the U. S. government on June 17th. By Sept. 16, hundreds of tons of rock had been removed.—N. Y. Times, S 16, 1869. See N 12, 1866. July —

Ground is broken at City Hall Park for the new post-office (see Ap 11 and Je 3, 1867).—N. Y. Times, Ag 10, 1869. Augustin Daly becomes the manager of the Fifth Avenue Theatre (see Ap 5).—Brown, II: 414. The theatre was destroyed by fire on Jan. 1, 1873 (q.v.). 16

Harvard engages in its first international boat-race, against Oxford, on the Thames, in England. Currier and Ives published a lithographic view of the race, bearing the inscription: "The great international boat-race Aug. 27th 1869 beween Oxford and Harvard on the River Thames near London 4 miles 2 furlongs Won by the Oxfords by a half length clear water. Time 22 Min. 20⅘ Sec." See also The Book of Harvard Athletics, 1852–1922, ed. by John A. Blanchard (pub. by Harvard Univ. Press for the Harvard Varsity Club, 1923), 46–50. 27

The first stone in the foundation of Grand Central Station (see May 20) is laid.—From chronology supplied by the N. Y. C. & H. R. Railroad. The station was finished in 1871 (q.v., O 9). Sept. 1

The German Hospital (see S 3, 1866) on the corner of Fourth Ave. and 77th St. is formally opened for the reception of patients. —N. Y. Times, S 14, 1869. See L. M. R. K., III: 954. 13

An attempt on the part of Jay Gould, James Fisk, and others to corner the gold supply in Wall St. creates a frenzied struggle between the "bulls" and "bears," which, culminating on this day, gives it the name of "Black Friday."—N. Y. Times, S 25 and 28, 1869. See also Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 57; and Clews, Twenty-Eight Years in Wall St., 181–200. 24

"A 'ring' was formed, by which absolute control was obtained of all the salable gold in the market, and the consequence was a 'corner' in gold on Friday, September 24, 1869. The result was a panic in Wall Street; gold suddenly sprang from 142 to 160, ['Jim'] Fisk and [Jay] Gould's agents forcing the rate by bids, until it was found that the ring possessed all of the available gold, and intended to hold it for a further advance. Every thing seemed in favor of the conspirators, as it was believed that the government sales of gold would not relieve the market. The scenes in the Gold-room were extraordinary for a continuation of the crisis for twenty-four hours meant absolute ruin of all of the small operators as well as many of the leading firms. While the panic was at its height President Grant ordered the sale of $5,000,000 of gold coin, and the rate dropped down to its old figure. With characteristic effrontery Fisk and his confederates repudiated the majority of the engagements made by their agents, and several failures were the result. The conspiracy was an infamous one, and in any other city would probably have led to the imprisonment of the leaders.

"Fisk had, however, become thoroughly identified with the Tammany Ring. Tweed and Sweeny were Erie directors. Their influence was all-powerful, and Fisk was allowed to escape the legal consequences of his acts.

"His opera-house speculation may be cited as another striking instance of his peculiar ideas of business honor. When the overissue 1869 Sept. 24 of Erie stock gave him control of an immense amount of the shares, he purchased Pike's Opera-house for $820,000 in the name of the Erie Company; but they not liking the bargain, he assumed the purchase, reimbursing the company with some of his own watered stock. Subsequently the company leased the upper part of the building at an enormous rent. . . ."—Harper's Weekly, Ja 20, 1872.

" "Our readers are probably not aware that the harbor of New-York is at the present moment being made a naval depot by the Spanish Government, and that in this port a fleet of gunboats is now being completed for service in behalf of that nation. . . . these gunboats are intended for active and decisive operations on the Cuban coast."—N. Y. Times, S 24, 1869.

Oct. 11 The first anniversary of the declaration of Cuban independence is celebrated in New York with great enthusiasm.—N. Y. Times, O 12, 1869.

29 The corner-stone of the Roosevelt Hospital (see F 2, 1864), on 59th St. between Ninth and Tenth Aves., is laid.—N. Y. Herald, O 30, 1869; L. M. R. K., III: 955. The building was dedicated on Nov. 2, 1871 (q. v.).

Nov. 2 The proposed new constitution that was adopted by the state constitutional convention, on Feb. 28, 1868 (q. v.), fails of ratification at the general election. The judiciary article, however, which was submitted to the voters on a separate ballot, passed by a narrow majority.—World Almanac (1870), 51. In the "Address to the People" the convention delegates summarized their work on the judiciary article thus: "We have materially changed the judicial system. We have made a permanent and efficient court of last resort of seven judges, to be elected for fourteen years, no elector to vote for more than five candidates; a commission to dispose of the causes accumulated in the present court of appeals, thus relieving the suitors from that delay which is a denial of justice; such an arrangement of the existing supreme court as will restrict the number of general terms, thus securing less diversity of decision, and have extended the term of office of justices of the supreme court. We have made courts by the Constitution, of the superior court of the city of New York, the court of common pleas thereof, the superior court of Buffalo, and the city court of Brooklyn, continuing in office the present judges thereof, and lengthening the term of their successors to fourteen years, and increased the number of judges of the court of common pleas of New York. We have much enlarged the jurisdiction of the county court and extended the term of office of the county judge. We have provided that no judge of the court of appeals or supreme court shall sit in review of his own decision, and forbidden certain judges from practicing in courts and acting as referee; we have provided for the relief of surrogates' courts in the counties of largest population; and generally have increased the working power of the courts, and by the extended term of office, have made more independent and permanent and useful, the Bench of the State."—Jour. of the Convention, 1204. The Times editor made this favourable comment: "The entire article pertaining to the Judiciary is as creditable to the thoroughness as to the intelligence and impartiality of the Convention."—N. Y. Times, Mr 2, 1868.

10 An emblematic bronze pediment on the west side of the Hudson River R. R. depot, on the site of St. John's Park (see 1867), is unveiled. It commemorates the commercial enterprise of Commodore Vanderbilt.—N. Y. World, N 11, 1869. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XIII: 620, and descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 609. The pediment was removed in about 1920, the building having long been in use as a warehouse and cold-storage.

23 The Metropolitan Museum of Art is founded, at a meeting held in the Union League Club, at which are gathered several of the most prominent citizens of New York. Wm. Cullen Bryant presides.—N. Y. Times, N 24, 1869; Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 103–15. Concerning its origin, see also Eve. Sun, Ap 16, 1920. It was incorporated on April 13, 1870 (q. v.).

Dec. — The board of education establishes the "Normal and High School" for the training of teachers.—Rep. of Pres. of Normal College for Year 1871 (N. Y., 1872). Temporary quarters were opened in 1870 (q. v., Mr 24). The name was later changed to the Normal College, and finally to Hunter College.

2 The Y. M. C. A. building at Fourth Ave. and 23d St. (see O 31, 1868) is dedicated.—17th Ann. Rep. of the Y. M. C. A. (1870); L. M. R. K., III: 956. See also view and description in Harper's Weekly, XIII: 685, 686, and Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 656–58.

Dec. 8 In a municipal election Tammany candidates for the common council win all but two seats. The Herald prints the names of 65 men arrested for illegal voting and declares: "These ubiquitous 'birds of passage,' who at every election make their influence felt in every ward of the city, were not idle yesterday. In nearly every ward dozens of them floated about, awaiting their opportunity to put in a vote for their favorite candidates, or at least those whose pocket books were the longest. . . . Not a few cases occurred in which they voted upon the names of respectable citizens, whose votes were refused when they applied for the privilege of exercising the franchise."—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1869.

" "Female suffrage has been adopted way out in Wyoming, where women are scarce and accordingly are appreciated. It is, on account of the scarcity of women, not a first rate place to test the matter, but we are glad the experiment is to be tried somewhere."—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1869.

— In this year, civil service reform began in England.—Hazen, op. cit., 482.

— In this year, the Vatican council proclaimed the new dogma of papal infallibility, the dogma that the pope can not err "when he defines ex cathedra, and in virtue of his apostolic authority any doctrine of faith, or morals,"—a doctrine (says Hazen) "that shocked Liberals thoroughly penetrated with the modern scientific spirit, and that seemed to politicians to assert that the Pope was superior to all rulers, and had a claim upon the loyalty of the faithful superior to that of their sovereigns."—Hazen, Europe Since 1815 (1910), 307.

— In this year, the White Star Line (or Oceanic Steam Navigation Co.) was founded.—King's Handbook (1893), 79.

— The population of Manhattan Island is 942,292.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910). Cf. Je 1.

— By this year, "The inhabited city had spread over the whole island, sparsely in the upper wards. . . .

"The foreign commerce of the district, imports and exports, amounted in value in 1870 to $569,337,000. The census of that year showed that New York had then become the most extensive manufacturing city in the Union. It had 56 national banks, with a capital of $73,000,000, and undivided profits of over $9,000,000. It had 32 savings banks, with deposits from 316,000 depositors of nearly $106,000,000.

"The assessed value of real estate in the city in 1870 was $762-134,350, and of personal $305,292,699, making a total of $1,047,049. The total amount of the funded debt was nearly $19,000,000. This enormous debt was largely the result of misrule and extravagant and dishonest expenditure of the public money."—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 805.

— In this year, the Rotunda, erected in City Hall Park in 1817–18, was demolished.—1st Ann. Rep., Bd. of Com'rs, Dept. of Pub. P'ks (1871), 225; L. M. R. K., III: 974–75.

— In this year, Mechanics' Hall, which was built in 1802 (q. v., Ag 2) on the north-west corner of Broadway and Park Place, was demolished. The general Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen erected a new building on the site, and leased it to the Security Insurance Co.—Annals of the society (1882), 167–68. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985.

— The American Museum of Natural History (see My 5, 1869) establishes itself on the second and third floors of the arsenal in Central Park.—Records of the museum, by courtesy of Pres. Osborn; see also Growth of the Building of the Am. Mu. of Nat. Hist., Plans for Future Building, etc.; 2nd ed., large ill. booklet, 1912. It moved to the lower floor in 1872 (q. v., O 23), and remained there until 1877, when it moved to its present location.

— In this year, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York was organized. It was incorporated in 1871 "for the purpose of maintaining the honor and dignity of the profession of the law, of cultivating social relations among its members, and increasing its usefulness in promoting the due administration of justice." The first president (1870–9) was William M. Evarts. The club-house was at No. 7 W. 29th St., where the club remained until the erection of its present building at No. 42 W. 44th St.—King's Handbook, 557: L. M. R. K., III: 937.

— In this year, St. James's Episcopal Church in Hamilton Square

1870 was demolished.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 925–26. See also Mr

26 The Beach Pneumatic Transit Co. completes and opens to the public a section of tunnel extending 295 feet under Broadway from Warren to Murray St. The entrance was at the south-west corner of Broadway and Warren through the basement of the Devlin building. The waiting-room was a large and "elegantly furnished" apartment commencing at Broadway and extending down Warren St. for 120 feet, built wholly underground. Serious objections to the enterprise were made, and it was finally abandoned.—Laws of N. Y. (1869), chap. 569; N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 28, 1870; illustrated pamphlet, Underground Railway (N. Y., 1870). See also descrip. of Pl. 133-b, III: 701 This was the first subway actually constructed in New York, and after its abandonment no other was built in this city until 1900 (q. v., Mr 24).

Mar. A contract is made by the Central Underground Ry. (see Ag
9 17, 1868) for the construction of an underground road from City Hall Park to 46th St. Though an excavation was begun in May, 1871, and a short tunnel abutment wall was built, no road was ever constructed by the company. It was claimed by the company that the grant, on April 26, 1870 (q. v.), to the Arcade Railway Co. of similar privileges conflicted with their rights.—1st. Rep., N. Y. C. Central Underground Ry. Apr. The legislature passes a new "Election Law" for New York
5 City. This is a most elaborate and detailed measure. It requires separate ballots and ballot boxes for the various offices, "President," "Congress," "Assembly," "City," etc.; the board of registry to meet on Monday and Tuesday preceding the week of election; the establishment of a "bureau of elections" under the direction of the board of supervisors; the re-districting of the city annually by the common council "so that each election district shall, as near as may be, contain not more than four hundred electors." The new law makes illegal registry a felony, as also illegal voting; indeed if any one shall be instrumental "in causing or procuring any person to be fraudulently registered," or "in procuring any person to vote . . . in any election district in which said person is not at that time a legally qualified voter," or in inciting any person to vote "in an assumed or fictitious name," he shall be "adjudged guilty of a felony."—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 138; N. Y. Herald, Ap 7, 1870. In the senate's discussion of the measure Tweed advocated it and said he was "ready to go to the extreme limit in framing a law that would secure fair elections. The complaints had been long and loud against the gross frauds perpetrated upon the ballot-box in New-York-City, and the public demanded that they should be stopped." He was determined, he said, "so far as his influence and vote would go, to bring about a state of things where everyman's vote should count one, and no man's vote should count more than one."—N. Y. Times, Ap 6, 1870.

At the following municipal election (see My 17) the Times editor declared "there was about the usual amount of repeating and other frauds. This was not from any defect in the law, but from a neglect of an organized enforcement of it."—Ibid., My 18, 1870.

" The legislature passes "An Act to reorganize the local government of the city of New York," commonly known as the "Tweed Charter." More changes are instituted in the municipal government than have been made at any one time since the signing of the Montgomerie Charter on Jan. 15, 1731 (q. v.). The chief provisions are as follows: A bicameral common council as before (see Ag 31, 1868), except that the experiment is to be tried of having the aldermen (15) elected on a general ticket, and a reversion to annual elections. A ¾ vote is now required to override the mayor's veto, a ¾ vote, also, for any measure involving expenditures, and a ⅘ vote (formerly ¾—see Ap 12, 1853) in case the expense is for "any celebration. procession, or entertainment of any kind." The powers

1870 Apr. 5 of the common council are defined with a considerable degree of exactness under 27 different heads. The mayor continues to be elected for a two-year term, but his power is increased measurably with the opportunity to appoint department heads or commissions without the approval of the common council. Ten departments are provided for, finance, law, police, public works, public charities and correction, fire, health, public parks, buildings, and docks; the heads of the two first named, i. e., the comptroller and the corporation counsel alone continue to be elective (but see Ap 26). The common council by a ⅔ vote may impeach the mayor, and the mayor may impeach all department heads, the "full court of common pleas" being the trial court. The new police, fire, and health departments displace respectively the metropolitan police (see Ap 5, 1857), fire (see Mr 30, 1865), and sanitary (see F 26, 1866) departments. Four police commissioners with 8 yr. terms are provided for, five fire commissioners with 5 yr. terms, and four health commissioners with 5 yr. terms; the last are joined with the police commissioners and the health officer of the port, to constitute a board of health. The department of public charities and correction, formerly headed by four commissioners appointed by the comptroller (see Ap 17, 1860), is now to have five commissioners with 5 yr. terms and, of course, appointed by the mayor. The other departments are new. Five commissioners with 5 yr. terms head the park department which absorbs the Central Park commission and whose jurisdiction is thus defined: "All public parks and public places above Canal street" (but see Ap 26). The department of public works, headed by a "Commissioner of Public Works" with a 4 yr. term, assumes the work of the former Croton aqueduct department and street department. The department of buildings is directed by the "Superintendent of Buildings," with a 5 yr. term. The department of docks is headed by a board of five with 5 yr. terms whose powers and compensation are to be defined by the commissioners of the sinking fund; they are limited to an annual expenditure of $350,000 "for the repair or reconstruction of the wharves, piers and slips."

There are also "General Provisions" of an important nature including the following: Expense shall not be incurred "unless an appropriation shall have been previously made covering such expense;" security shall be required "for the accountability of all officers and other persons to whom the receipt or expenditure of the funds of the city shall be intrusted;" all contracts shall be founded "on sealed bids or proposals made in compliance with public notice duly advertised in newspapers . . . and . . . shall be given to the lowest bidder;" no city official shall be "directly or indirectly interested" in any such contract; any bribery or attempt to bribe or acceptance of bribes is heavily penalized.

The first common council under this act (which is to be effective immediately without any referendum) is to be elected on the third Tuesday in May to serve from the first Monday in June until the first Monday in Jan., 1872. The first mayor is to be elected at the next general election in November. Thereafter the charter election and the general election are to coincide.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 137.

The previous day (April 5) at a hearing on the proposed charter before the senate committee, Senator Tweed in the chair, Horace Greeley and Samuel J. Tilden were among the speakers. Both objected to having the mayor's "functionaries survive him," i. e., having terms extending beyond his own. Mr. Greeley favoured amendments that would retain the "Central Park Commission" and would make the comptroller appointive (see Ap 26). Mr. Tilden declared that all experience had shown impeachment to be "a dilatory and insufficient resource, not to be relied on in the ordinary administration of the Government;" also, he thought the charter deficient "in that it makes the election of charter officers coincident with that of the State and Federal officers."—N. Y. Times, Ap 5, 1870.

The Herald rejoices in "the new organic law of our municipal government." The editor believes the care of parks might well have been given "to a bureau in the Department of Public Works," and that the duties of the head of the department of buildings are "police duties," but that "these are minor defects, that are as nothing by comparison with the excellences and benefits of a law that sweeps the [metropolitan] commissions out of existence and opens to us the possibility of a good municipal government."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 6, 1870.

The Tribune editorial comment on the passage of the charter is: "The Republicans in our Legislature have accepted and passed the Tweed Charter for our City on condition that the Democrats should assist in passing a stringent Election Law. The latter, it is hoped, will put an end to repeating and miscounting votes in our elections; the former surrenders our City to the rule of Tweed and Sweeny for a number of ensuing years. We do not believe in voting for a bad bill on a bargain that some one else shall help us pass a good one. We believe our friends in the Legislature have made a mistake which will yet be palpable."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 6, 1870. Apr. 5

With a prophetic pen Mr. Dana of the Sun writes: "The result is that the Ring is more powerful than ever. Mr. Tweed is now the master of the Empire State. He can set up and he can pull down whomsoever he will. . . . This luckless city, instead of having a government of the people, is more than ever under the dictatorship of the Ring."—N. Y. Sun, Ap 6, 1870. Several amendments to this charter were made on April 26 (q. v.). Tweed testified, on Sept. 15, 1877, before a special committee of the board of aldermen appointed to investigate the "Ring" frauds, that he paid $40,000 each to five senators to get the Republicans "to stand by this charter."—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1877), Part II, Doc. 8, 91–92.

"Until Tweed and Sweeny tell their man O'Hall" (Mayor Hall), says the Sun, "whom to appoint under the new charter, and he acts, we are in a condition of substantial anarchy," attention being called to the fact that the new charter "wiped out" the fire department and the health department.—N. Y. Sun, Ap 7, 1870. Mayor Hall announced his appointments on April 11 (q. v.). 7

The Times, destined at a later time (see Jl 8, 1871) to play a leading part in the exposure of Tweed, expresses belief in him "as a reformer," and one who has "put the people of Manhattan Island under great obligations."—N. Y. Times, Ap 8, 1870. 8

Mayor Hall gives to the press his list of appointments under the provisions of the new charter (see Ap 6), accompanied by a word of explanation. He says he would be "perfectly justified by the numerical record of votes upon the legislation which bestowed this responsibility should he confer everyone of the thirty-two appointments upon democrats; but the extraordinary unanimity by which the power was agreed upon appears to create an honorable obligation to respect the political minority of his constituents." He thinks there is general agreement that "the execution of police, fire and health duty, or of administration of charities, ought not to be at all controlled by partisan influences," so there is a representation of Republicans on those boards. However, a department involving "large patronage," like the department of public works, requires at the mayor's hands "entire respect to party considerations." He appoints William M. Tweed as "Commissioner of Public Works." Peter B. Sweeny resigns as chamberlain to accept the presidency of the new park board. The Herald devotes almost a full page to sketches of the careers of the appointees.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 11, 1870. The Sun's comment is: "Mayor O'Hall hung all his banners on the outer wall yesterday in honor of the new era of municipal rights, which began with the operation of the Tweed charter. The grandeur of the era consists in O'Hall's being obliged to appoint eight Republicans upon Commissions which rightfully belonged to the Democratic party."—N. Y. Sun, Ap 12, 1870. 11

"Mr. Tweed's Legislature," in the words of the Sun, passes an act for "the abolition of the New York Board of Supervisors." In the bill's course through the senate, when Senator Tweed's name was called, "somebody asked him to state what the bill meant. 'This bill, Mr. President,' promptly replied the Americus Club Tiger, 'means to abolish the Board of Supervisors of the county of New York. The bill has been drawn with care, and is characterized by the usual perfections to be found in all my bills. I vote aye.'"—N. Y. Sun, Ap 13, 1870. Tweed was a member of the first board of supervisors (see Ap 15, 1857). The duties of this board now revert to the common council, or more exactly to the mayor, recorder, and aldermen. The mayor is to be the regular presiding officer, and a majority vote, including that of the mayor, "shall always be necessary to the passage of any resolution, ordinance or act." All moneys drawn from the treasury "shall be upon vouchers for the expenditure thereof, examined and allowed by the auditor, and approved by the comptroller."—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 190. 12

The Metropolitan Museum of Art (see N 23, 1869) is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 197; Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 143, 189. The permanent constitution was adopted on May 24. The paintings belonging to the museum were stored 13

1870 Ap13 in Cooper Union, for want of an exhibition-room, until Dec. 1, 1871 (q.v.).—Ibid. See also L. M. R. K., III: 957.

15 Part of the Croton aqueduct, between the south side of 113th St. and the south side of 93d St., is discontinued, and the commissioner of public works is directed, within two years, to lay iron pipes or build a brick or stone conduit for the Croton water beneath the street, from the south side of 113th St. to connect with the aqueduct at 93d St., as was laid down by the late Croton aqueduct board. To meet the expense, the city is authorised to raise the necessary money, and to pledge the land now covered by the Croton aqueduct between 113th and 93d Sts., Eighth and Tenth Aves. The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorised to sell this property at public auction, but to retain any part deemed necessary and to use the material of the aqueduct as desired for laying pipes.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 230.

21 The legislature incorporates "The Industrial Exhibition Company," authorising it to purchase land in the city and erect buildings on it.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 335.

23 The elevated railroad on Greenwich St. (see Jl 25, 1868) has been extended to 30th St. "The cars are propelled by endless wire ropes, actuated by a stationary steam engine and drum. The rope carries travelers placed at proper intervals, and rolling upon small rails. The travelers are composed of four miniature car wheels, and carry projecting studs, which, engaging with a lever arm on the car make the connection. . . . Some experimental trips have been made over the road during the past week. . . . It is proposed, we understand, to continue the road to Yonkers, about fourteen miles up the Hudson from the Battery. . . . The engineer under whose direction the work has been done, is Mr. Charles E. Harvey of this city."—Scientific Am., Ap 23, 1870. However, the method of operating by stationary power proved a failure and, as the people who had contributed large sums towards its construction lost confidence in the project, the road was finally placed in the hands of trustees, who substituted locomotive power.—Railroad Gazette, Ja 24, 1874; Report of the Special Com. on R. R., Appointed . . . to Investigate Alleged Abuses in the Management of R. R. (Albany, 1880), 1–4; Statutes and Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882). See Ap 20, 1871.

" Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, is designated by the legislature as an additional legal holiday.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 370. For the four holidays previously recognized, see Ap 4, 1849.

26 "For the final completion of the new county court-house" ("Tweed's courthouse") the mayor is authorised by act of legislature to appoint four commissioners, which commissioners are empowered to expend a sum not exceeding $600,000. All powers of the board of supervisors "over the erection of said court-house shall cease." Disbursements shall be made by the comptroller "on vouchers approved by the commissioners."—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 382. See Ap 19, 1871. In the author's collection is a very interesting photographic panorama of the city, about 12 ft. long, showing the county court building under construction.

" The Arcade Railway bill is favourably reported upon by the legislature.—N. Y. Times, Ap 27, 1870. It provides, among other things, that the company shall relay the 54-inch tube of the Beach Pneumatic Transit Co., whose charter it has secured upon the failure of the latter company to secure a favourable bill in the legislature.—Sun, Ap 26, 1870. Melville C. Smith was the promoter and president of the Arcade Underground Ry. Co.; Egbert L. Viele was the engineer-in-chief, and S. B. B. Nowlan was the constructing engineer. The company made many unsuccessful attempts to establish an underground railway, but the bill met with the veto, first, of Gov. Hoffman on May 6, 1872; later (in 1884) of Gov. Cleveland, and in 1885 of Gov. Hill.—See pamphlet report by Egbert L. Viele, on The Arcade Under-Ground Railway; N. Y. Times, Ap 29 and My 3, 1870; N. Y. Com. Adv., My 14, 1884; ibid., Mr 9, 1885. See also Pl. 133-b, Vol. III, and descrip. III: 700–1.

" The legislature enacts a measure to levy a tax for county purposes for the current year, the objects for which the money is to be raised being stated. In addition a special board of audit is created, the mayor (Hall), the comptroller (Connolly), and "present president of the board of supervisors" (Tweed), to audit "all liabilities against the county of New York, incurred previous to the passage of this act," the amounts found to be due to be provided for by the issue of revenue bonds.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 382. This board of audit, on May 5, "at a single sitting made out an order for the payment of $6,312,500 on account in building the new County Court House. Of this sum barely a tenth part was realized by the city."—Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 229; cf. Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 396. Apr. 26

" The "Tweed Charter" of April 5 (q.v.) is augmented and amended by the "Tax Levies" bill. The important changes are those of making the comptroller and corporation counsel appointive, instead of elective; the present incumbent as corporation counsel, however, is to serve out the term for which he was elected (until Jan. 1, 1873). The jurisdiction of the park department is extended to include "all parks and public grounds south [as well as north] of Canal street," and the park commissioners are to serve without compensation. The commissioner of public works is "authorized in his discretion to cause water meters . . . to be placed in all stores, workshops, hotels, manufactories, public edifices, at wharves, ferry-houses, stables, and in all the places in which water is furnished for business consumption." As to the vexatious question of material for street paving, the act provides that when paving has once been done at the expense of property owners, thereafter the common council shall not prescribe "any patent or special pavement which has not been approved by the mayor, or . . . petitioned for by a majority of the owners of the adjoining property to be affected."

The new dock commissioners are authorised, after a public hearing, to advertise for plans "for the best method of improving the water-front and harbor" so as "to provide for the future expansion . . . and for the facilitation of the transportation of freight along the said water-front," so as to "render the whole water-front of said city available to the commerce of said port."

"The Board of Street Openings" is created, consisting of the mayor, comptroller, commissioner of public works, the commissioners of taxes and assessments, the corporation counsel, and the president of the parks department. This board shall have powers, now vested in the mayor, aldermen and commonalty, "as to laying out, opening, widening, straightening, extending, altering, and closing streets or avenues, or parts of streets or avenues . . . south of Fourteenth street." (Chap. 574 of Laws of N. Y., 1871, extended this jurisdiction to 59th St.)

Another provision (much debated prior to its passage) repealed, on and after Sept. 30, that section of the act of May 12, 1869 (q. v.), providing for the distribution of certain public funds for non-public schools. The major part, however, of the 37 pages of this new act is devoted to statements of amounts appropriated for the current year for the several parts of the city and county government, on the basis of which a tax is to be levied and collected.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 383. Tweed testified, in 1877, that he thought he paid out personally "in the neighborhood of fifty or one hundred thousand dollars" to members of the legislature to secure the passage of the tax levy bills for city and county, and he gave the names of seven senators who were bribed.—Docs., Bd. of Ald. (1877), part 2, 153–55.

" The legislature authorises the commissioners of the sinking fund to assign to the board of education, for the erection of a normal school (see D, 1869, and Mr 24, 1870), lands north of 40th St., and directs that the "normal school under the charge of said board shall hereafter be known as the Normal College of the City of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 383. See Jl 20.

27 Mayor Hall, under the provisions of the "Tweed Charter," as amended (see Ap 26), reappoints Richard B. Connolly, city comptroller. The Herald believes this appointment to be "to the general satisfaction of the community, for Mr. Connolly has been tried and approved as an active, faithful and efficient Comptroller."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 28, 1870.

" The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorised to lease to the Hahnemann Hospital public lots situated north of 66th St. for the erection of a public hospital.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 439. A lease for 99 years of 10 lots on the east side of Fourth Ave. between 67th and 68th Sts., was given on Jan. 14, 1871.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763.

28 The legislature authorises the commissioners of the sinking fund to sell at public auction a franchise for the establishment of a double track railroad commencing on the Hudson River at 130th St., thence through the street to Manhattan St., along Manhattan to 125th St., and through 125th St. to the East River; also from 125th St. along Third Ave. to the Harlem Bridge; also from Third Ave. through 130th St. to the Harlem River; also from 125th St. and 1870 Ap 28 Tenth Ave. along the avenue to its terminus.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 504.

May 1 The first building in New York erected by the Equitable Life Assurance Society (see Ap 18, 1859), at the south-east corner of Broadway and Cedar St. (No. 120 Broadway), is completed and opened. It is the first office-building in the city to have elevators. Authority for its construction had been given in 1868 (Jan. 15), in accordance with the plans of Gilman and Kendall, with Geo. B. Post as consulting architect. From time to time thereafter it was enlarged, the whole structure being completely remodelled and its height increased by several storeys, in 1887, under the direction of Mr. Post.—The Equitable Society's First Half Century (1909); L. M. R. K., III: 967; Pl. 155-c, Vol. III. It was destroyed by fire on Jan. 9, 1912.—N. Y. Times, Ja 10, 1912. A new building, covering the entire block, was erected in 1915.—L. M. R. K., III: 967. See also descrip. of Pl. 158-b, III: 841.

2 The new paper, the Standard, in its second issue, says: "The general expectation that the various departments of the City Government under the new Charter would organize on Saturday [April 30], led to such a gathering of hungry crowds of place-hunters at various points as is not often witnessed. They swarmed from all directions, as though some modern Cadmus had been sowing Manhattan Island with Democratic dragon's teeth, and the yield had been an hundred-fold. It was very evident that the faithful henchmen of the 'powers that be' had made up their minds that the first of May was intended to be re-moving day for more things than household furniture, and that in their opinion the time had come when their faithfulness in the long siege of the Bureaux, which had at last succeeded, should be rewarded with a fair share of the loot of the place."—N. Y. Standard, My 2, 1870.

5 The department of parks is authorised to lay out the "Eastern Boulevard," together with other streets or avenues to connect it with Central Park and the East River.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 626. See also maps of the boulevard dated Sept 25, 1873, and April 8, 1874, filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Maps No. 2982 and 3084.

6 By act of legislature a part of the town of Newtown in the county of Queens is incorporated as Long Island City.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 719.

7 Lexington Ave. is ordered extended from 102d St. to the Harlem River.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 753; L. M. R. K., III: 1004.

17 The first municipal election under the new charter (see Ap 5) results in a sweeping victory for the Tammany aldermanic ticket. The Times editor declares there were "one hundred and ten thousand ballots cast by eighty thousand voters," that "repeaters" in some cases "would walk out of the polling-places into the middle of the street; and there in the face and eyes of the Police, would change their coats and hats, and receive their names and directions from the leaders of the gangs before starting for the next poll to repeat their ballots." A case is cited of Justice Hogan of the first ward being "cheated out of his vote" by a repeater. While awaiting his turn in the line he was "surprised to hear a strange man announce himself as Edward Hogan, and proceed to vote in his name." The judge immediately challenged the vote, but the inspector "refused to notice the challenge and deposited the vote of the repeater in the ballot-box." The magistrate then called upon an officer to arrest the repeater, but he declined to do so "unless directed by the Inspectors, under whose orders he said he was placed."—N. Y. Times, My 18, 1870. As to frauds practiced in counting ballots, see Thomas Nast's cartoon bearing the legend:

"Going Through the Form of Universal Suffrage.

"Boss, 'You have the Liberty of Voting for any one you please; but we have the Liberty of Counting in any one we please.'"—Harper's Weekly, XV: 1060.

19 The legislature provides for the building of bridges, tunnels, etc., over Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, as public works.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 797.

23 The corner-stone of the Northwest Protestant Reformed Dutch Church (see Addenda, 1807), is laid at the n. e. cor. of Madison Ave. and 57th St. The architect of this building, which was dedicated on Oct. 22, 1871, and which still stands, was E. L. Roberts. By court decree, Jan. 1, 1871, the name was changed to Madison Avenue Reformed Church.—Exercises at the Laying of the Corner Stone, and Dedication (two pamphlets, 1871, at N. Y. Hist. 25 The corner-stone of Mt. Sinai Hospital (see Ap 17, 1866, and N 30, 1868) is laid, at the corner of 66th St. and Lexington Ave.—N. Y. Times, My 26, 1870. The plans for the building are described in ibid., My 15, 1870. See also L. M. R. K., III: 954. The hospital was opened on May 29, 1872 (q. v.).

30 The mayor approves a resolution of the common council, directing the clerk (John Hardy) "to employ a suitable person to prepare for the press, with appropriate introductions and notes, the ancient records of the City of New Amsterdam and those of the City of New York," prior to 1850, and to cause 5,000 copies to be printed. The resolution is to take effect on July 1.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXXVIII: 196; N. Y. H. S. Quar. Bull. (Oct., 1923), 93–94. See Jl 30.

31 The legislature directs that 52d, 53d, and 54th Sts. be extended from Eleventh Ave. to the Hudson River.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 805.

June 1 At this time there were 944,129 inhabitants in New York City.—N. Y. Times, F 2, 1871. Cf. 1870.

4 Wm. R. Martin, writing on "The Problem of City Transit," says: "The Government at Albany has treated the city very harshly on this subject, and has rejected applications for authority to construct these roads, on insufficient grounds and for very crude reasons. But two plans have met their approval: One, the central underground, which has made no progress, and will not, unless they can build under Broadway, for they know that so expensive a road will not pay unless they have the best route. The second is the Greenwich street elevated road."—Scientific Am., Je 4, 1870. On June 11, it was stated: "We believe tunnels afford the most practicable means for effecting the desired object without interference with property, or obstructing the street; and if the Pneumatic Railway Company [see F 26] have done nothing else, they are entitled to the gratitude of the public for demonstrating that such tunnels can be built and operated without even temporary inconvenience to surface travel."—Ibid., Je 11, 1870.

6 The filibustering expedition which sailed from New York to Cuba on the "George B. Upton" has been captured by the Spaniards.—N. Y. Times, Je 6, 1870.

" The new board of aldermen elected on May 17 (q. v.) convenes; this is the first board in the history of the city elected at large. Five of the 15 members have been on the retiring board, and one of the five, Alderman Coman, is re-elected as president of the new board.

Mayor Hall in his message expresses his belief that "the interests of the city as a Metropolis will hereafter be perfectly represented. Hitherto, those interests suffered from local jealousies. Unless an alderman from a ward consented to legislation that immediately affected his locality, a courtesy from associates seemed to dictate that his opposition should prevail against it, and thus a give-and-take policy was instituted in consequence among the Aldermen. It is, of course, necessary to protect localities against unjust legislation. Now, as heretofore, localities are represented in the Board of Assistant Aldermen, whose action will prove, undoubtedly to be sufficient for local protection against the overshadowing influence of city interests at large.

"It will become, therefore, more especially the province of the Board of Aldermen to initiate measures which tend to foster the aggregate prosperity and to promote the general welfare of the whole city; and of the Board of Assistants to oversee that taxpayers in small districts are not injured in their local rights."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CXIX: 21.

8 The corner-stone is laid of the Masonic Temple, at the north-east corner of Sixth Ave. and 23d St.—N. Y. Herald, Je 9, 1870. The building was dedicated June 2, 1875 (q. v.). See also L. M. R. K., III: 954.

9 The legislature passes an act for the widening of Broadway between 17th and 19th Sts.—Laws of N. Y. (1870), chap. 806.

July 8 Under an act of congress of this date, the books, engravings, prints, etc., formerly deposited, under the Copyright Law, in the department of the interior, Washington, were transferred to the Library of Congress, and, according to a report of Dr. Spofford, the congressional librarian at the time, the library thus acquired about 22,000 items.

Prior regulations concerning such deposits was as follows: Under the original Copyright Law of May 31, 1790, and its revision of Feb. 3, 1831, the author or proprietor was required to deposit, within three months after publication of the book, engraving, map, etc., a copy in the office of the clerk of the U. S. district court of the district wherein the author or proprietor resided, and was required

1870 July 8 to print stated words ("Entered," etc.) on the title-page, or otherwise as directed. The act of 1831 required that the clerks of the district courts should transmit these works to the department of state once a year. The act of Aug. 10, 1846, which established the Smithsonian Institution, required that the deposit of copies of works for which copyright was secured should be made with the librarian of the Institution (one copy) and the librarian of congress (one copy), "for the use of said libraries." By another act, on Feb. 5, 1859, the accumulation of works formed in the department of state was ordered to be transferred to the department of the interior. Then the act of 1870 placed them in the Library of Congress.—Bulletin No. 3, Copyright Office, Library of Congress, entitled "Copyright Enactments, 1783–1900," 30, 36, 40.

12 A party of Orangemen parading on Eighth Ave. (in commemoration of the battle of the Boyne) is attacked by a crowd of Irish Catholic labourers at the corner of 92d St., and shots are fired resulting in the death of three men.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 13, 1870; Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 813. There was a worse riot the next year (see Jl 12, 1871).

19 France formally declares war on Prussia, beginning the Franco-Prussian war.—Henderson, Short Hist. of Germany, II: 422–23. The German states of Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Hesse, and Baden, immediately joined Prussia against France.—Andrews, Hist. of Development of Modern Europe, II: 270–72.

20 The board of education accepts from the commissioners of the sinking fund the plot of ground bounded by 68th and 69th Sts. and Fourth and Lexington Aves., to be used for the Normal College (see D, 1869, and Ap 26, 1870). A requisition was made on the comptroller for $150,000 for the erection of suitable buildings.—N. Y. Times, Jl 21, 1870. The college was opened here on Oct. 29, 1873 (q.v.).

26 The city leases to the Association for the Improved Condition of Deaf Mutes, for 99 yrs. at $1 per year, 12 lots on Lexington Ave., west side, between 67th and 68th Sts.—Man. Com. Coun. (1870), 763.

28 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in the Central Park Plaza, at Fifth Ave. and 59th St.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51. See also L. M. R. K., III: 969. A map of the plaza, dated March 6, 1868, is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 2425.

30 Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan is appointed to superintend the publication of the early city records.—N. Y. H. S. Quar. Bull. (Oct. 1923), 94. Progress on this work was reported by Comptroller Green to Mayor Havemeyer on Jan. 23, 1873 (q.v.).

Aug. 25 The Grand Central Hotel, erected at 667–677 Broadway, on the site of the Winter Garden Theatre which was destroyed by fire on March 23, 1867 (q.v.), is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, Ag 26, 1870; Brown, I: 467–68. See L. M. R. K., III: 986, under "Tripler Hall."

Sept. 1 The New York Cotton Exchange, which was organized on Aug. 15, leases its first quarters, at No. 142 Pearl St. It occupied these until May 4, 1872 (q.v.), when it moved to the former Hanover Bank building at No. 1 Hanover Square.—Information furnished by Mr. Thomas Hale, Jr., supt., N. Y. Cotton Exchange; L. M. R. K., III: 925; King's Handbook (1893), 799; N. Y. Times, My 31, 1919. See Ap 8, 1871.

2 After repeated defeats, the French army surrenders to the Germans in the battle of Sedan. Napoleon III is taken prisoner. This led to the fall of the Empire on Sept. 4, when Gambetta, Jules Favre, and Jules Ferry proclaimed the French Republic at the Hôtel de Ville. The Franco-German war continued, however, to about February, 1871.—Hazen, op. cit., 297; Duruy, Hist. of France, 759; Anderson, Constitutions and Other Select Docs. Illus. of Hist. of France (1789–1907), 594–96. See Ja, 1871.

15 The city begins to acquire by purchase the land for the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn Bridge. From this time to 1882, land between South and Chatham Sts. was purchased under 105 separate grants. One additional purchase was made in 1888, and another in 1896.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 115–17, citing Libers of Conveyances. The bridge was opened in 1883 (q.v., My 24).

28 Strassburg surrenders to the Germans.—Lewis, Hist. of Germany, 728–29.

30 Admiral Farragut is buried in Woodlawn Cemetery. Final honours are paid to him in New York City by a civil and military procession. Crowds of people stand in a drenching rain to see the procession pass, and buildings are decorated with mourning. Business in the city is suspended after 11 o'clock.—Harper's Weekly, XIV: 657, 659, which contains view. Sept. 30

An elevated railroad on a viaduct of stone, brick, and iron is proposed by John J. Serrell and Leopold Eidlitz as a means of rapid transit, and in the belief that the West Side Elevated Railroad, already built for a considerable distance (see Ap 23), has proved a failure.—A Viaduct Railway (booklet in the N. Y. P. L.), 1870. Oct. —

Rome and its surrounding territory, heretofore under papal control, vote to join the rest of Italy, and the unity of Italy is at last completed.—King, Hist. of Italian Unity, II: 378. See Ja 12, 1871. 2

The work of improving Washington Square, in accordance with plans prepared by M. A. Kellogg and I. A. Pilat, is begun. In 1870, $39,961 was spent on the park; in 1871, $181,026; and in 1872, $23,702.—23d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1918), 171–72. See also L. M. R. K., III: 972. 6

With the fall of Metz, which had been under siege since Sept. 19, the Germans move to the siege of Paris.—Hazen, op. cit., 298; Duruy, Hist. of France, 659; Lewis, Hist. of Germany, 729–30. See D 27, 1870; Ja, 1871. Sept. 27

An expedition, equipped by the N. Y. Herald at a cost of $40,000, and conducted by Henry M. Stanley, finds David Livingstone at Ujiji, in British East Africa, in the course of the latter's explorations for the sources of the Nile.—*N. Y. Alterations in the stock exchange building begin. The business of the exchange was transacted, until alterations were completed, in the room on the second floor of 16 and 18 Broad St., formerly occupied by the Open Board. The board moved back into its own remodelled building in September, 1871, "having reasonable facilities for a continuous market for the first time in its history."—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 57. See S 16, 1871. Nov. —

"The death of Mr. John P. De Wint, at Fishkill, in November [18], 1870, severed the last link in the Tontine chain [see My 1, 1855], the lease of the [Tontine] building [on Wall St.] terminated, the property reverted to the owners of the shares represented by the surviving seven nominees, and the affairs passed into the hands of Mr. Frederick De Peyster, and Mr. W. T. Horn, as attorney. The surviving nominees [in 1872] are Robert Benson, Jr., William Bayard [Jr.], Gouverneur Kemble, Horatio Gates Stevens, Daniel Hoffman [Judge David Murry Hoffman?], Mrs. William [Duncan?] P. Campbell, and Mrs. John A. King. The heirs of George Bright, who died two years after he nominated Gouverneur Kemble, have, yet to be found. The property will then be sold, . . . "—Stone, Hist. of N. Y. City (1872), 327 (with contemporary wood-cut view of the Tontine building), citing Jour. of Com., Jl 25, 1871; N. Y. Times, Ja 12, 1881; Mag. Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 231. 18

The owners of the shares represented by the surviving nominees were: Wm. T. Horn, $\frac{11}{77}$ of the total; Elizabeth J. Lynch, $\frac{11}{77}$; Marshall H. Bright, as executor of George Bright, Jr., $\frac{11}{77}$; the heirs of John A. King, $\frac{11}{77}$; Frederick K. de Peyster, $\frac{17}{77}$; the heirs of William H. Aspinwall, $\frac{4}{77}$, and William S. Verplanck, John N. Whiting, John B. Remsen, and Ellen Shepherd Varick, each a small fractional part of the remainder.

In 1873, Frederic de Peyster and William T. Horn brought a suit in the supreme court to determine the interests of the various owners in the assets of the association, and the proper method of division. The matter was referred to William B. Winterton, as referee, and he advised a sale by auction. This the court ordered, and it took place on Jan. 11, 1881 (q.v.).—N. Y. Times, Ja 12, 1881.

— In this year, the universities of England were made thoroughly national by abolishing religious tests, another step in the direction of religious and intellectual liberty.—Hazen, op. cit., 483.

— Volumes CXXI, CXXII, CXXIII, and CXXIV, both of the Proceedings of the Board of Aldermen and Proceedings of the Board of Assistant Aldermen for this year, are lacking, and the continuity of the record of common council activities is thereby broken. The hiatus is partially filled by the existence of a volume of Proceedings, Approved by the Mayor (1871), XL, also a volume of Documents containing Mayor Hall's message to the common council (June, 1871), with accompanying departmental reports.

— In this year, the "Minutes of the Common Council" from 1674 to 1776, in 15 vols., were printed by the N. Y. Printing Co. They were edited by Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan. The only known set (O'Callaghan's own proof copy) is in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. It contains, besides the records printed later in the 1905 edition, the "Mayor and Aldermen's Commission Aº 1674," a "Report on the Fortifications of New York, 1688," and a unique "Map showing the Wards of the City of New York as established in 1683." Only the first volume is indexed, and only the first two volumes have title-pages and covers; of the others, all but Vols. VII, VIII, and IX are stitched and ready for binding, lacking only title-pages and indexes.

"The exposure of the [Tweed] 'Ring' in 1871 and the departure for Europe of Mr. Charles Edwin Wilbour, President of The New York Printing Company, printers to the corporation, undoubtedly caused all work on these records to cease, while the plates were stored for years in the basement of the Trow Press, according to Mr. Robert H. Kelby, Librarian Emeritus of the Society. The latter firm is now dissolved and no information is available as to the disposition of the plates." For the proceedings of the common council leading to the printing of these old minutes, and other facts relating to the subject, see Quarterly Bull., N. Y. Hist. Soc., O, 1923.

— The number of new buildings this year is 2,036, as compared with 539 in 1862.—Message of Mayor Hall, Jl, 1872.

— With the success of the Stuyvesant apartment-house on 18th St. (see 1869), the advantage of this style of residential buildings, called "French flats," receives further recognition this year in the erection of the Haight House at Fifth Ave. and 15th St.—N. Y. Times, Ap 16, 1871; N. Y. World, O 8, 1871. For an account of the "Parisian Flats," with particular reference to the Stevens House, corner of Broadway and 27th St., see Emmet coll., item No. 12008.

— Building plans for the Lenox Library (see Ja 20, 1870) are filed with the building department.—N. Y. Times, Mr 31, 1871. (This report in The Times gives the location as "between 71st and 72nd Streets;" but the building was erected between 70th and 71st Sts., on Fifth Ave.). See 1877, in which year it was completed. Richard M. Hunt was the architect.

— In this year, the iron fence around Union Square was taken down.—2d Ann. Rep., Com'rs Dept. of P'ks (1872), 5–6; L. M. R. K., III: 971–72; descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 971–72; descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 702.

— "Houses which were considered to be 'just the thing' ten years ago, are out of date today. Observe the style of the houses about 14th Street, for instance; then at 25th to 30th streets; and, again, those which are now being erected ten or twenty streets farther up. Between 55th and 56th Streets, for example a block of houses has just been built of Ohio stone—a material fast coming into use, and destined to supplant brownstone. These houses are finished with mansard roofs, and are vastly more attractive than the houses of ten years ago. . . . Another block that will attract attention is just finished, between 57th and 58th Streets. These houses are of white marble, and when one is a little distance away, the effect has been so contrived that the block may very well be mistaken for a church.

"On that portion of the avenue which is on Central Park, fabulous prices have been obtained for building lots, the position being beyond all question the finest in the City. . . .

"We already begin to see houses converted into stores in the lower portion of the avenue and business driving residences further away. A man need not be more than sixty years old to remember when the Battery was, to the fashionable world, what Fifth Avenue and 50th Street are to-day. If this old fellow should live twenty-five years longer, where shall he look to find the centre of fashion?" —Redfield's Traveler's Guide (1871), 72–73. 1871 —

In this year, Trinity School at 90 Trinity Place, at the s. w. cor. of Thames St., was erected. Its formal name is N. Y. Prot. Episcopal Public School, and under various forms it has been conducted in this immediate vicinity since 1709.—L. M. R. K., III: 941, and authorities there cited. —

In this year, the Catholic Club was organized. It was incorporated in 1873. Its club-house is at 120 W. 59th St.—King's Handbook, 556, 574; L. M. R. K., III: 937. —

In this year, the Knickerbocker Club was organized, and purchased the residence of Wm. Butler Duncan on the south-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 28th St. After being fitted up the club-house was opened in Feb., 1872.—Club Book (1918); The Galaxy (1876); L. M. R. K., III: 938. In 1882 (q. v., Oct.), the club moved to 32d St. —

In this year was published by Devlin & Co., New York, a 16mo. guide-book, entitled The metropolis explained and illustrated in familiar form, containing a folding "Map of New York & Brooklyn and adjacent cities," prepared in this year by G. W. & C. B. Colton & Co. (size, 25½ x 14⅔ in.). —

In this year was published New York and Its Institutions, 1609–1871, by Rev. John Fletcher Richmond, containing historical and descriptive sketches of its churches, schools, public buildings, etc. —

In this year, Frederick A. Bridgman, who was one of the earliest of American art students to settle in Paris, going there in 1866, sent his work for exhibition in the Academy of Design in New York. —Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting (1905), 408. —

Early in this month, the Germans began the bombardment of Paris. The siege lasted until the 28th (q. v.).—Hazen, 299, 300. Jan. —

S. E. Church, speaking before the West Side Association at Association Hall in favour of a project that the city, in its corporate capacity, build a steam railroad for rapid transit from the Battery to Harlem River, says: "It was in 1852 that Mr. John Schuyler first introduced his bill for authority to construct a railroad for rapid transit in New York. Every year since that time the Legislature has been the unceasing battle ground of rival interest on this subject. All manner of schemes, underground, over ground, three tier, viaduct, depressed, arcade, marginal, tube, tunnel, and what not, have been pressed with all manner of pictures, plates, drawings, models and designs, endorsed by imposing certificates, bearing imposing and illustrious names, . . . yet we stand to-day, with absolutely nothing done. . . . At one sweep of the legislative session of '69, the following schemes were given the coup de grace, although each had persuaded itself and its supporters that it was just the thing, and was sure to pass, namely: The Manhattan Underground, The People's Railroad, The People's Metropolitan Suburban Railway, The New York Underground Railroad, and The Metropolitan Transit Railway, while the Three Tier, the Suspension Bridge, the Arcade, and other plans, had either gone before or followed the melancholy train. Of all the many schemes which have thus deluded the public and vexed the Legislature the past ten years, those which have crystallized into actual charters are the Pneumatic Tube, now making daily trips under Broadway [see the Beach Underground Railway, 1868], and the Institutions of Centre and Greenwich Streets—the one in the ground, the other in the air." On Jan. 27, 1873, the N. Y. Rapid Transit Association (organized in Dec., 1872) ordered that 500 copies of Mr. Church's address in favour of municipal ownership be printed as an "unanswerable argument for a City Railroad as a City Work."—The Great Need (pub. by N. Y. Rapid Transit Assn, 1873), pamphlet in N. Y. P. L. 11

The Academy of Music is crowded to overflowing "by an audience anxious to express their sympathy with the successful movement for Italian unity" (see O 2, 1870). Speeches are made by Gen. Dix, Parke Godwin, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Horace Greeley, Wm. Cullen Bryant, etc., and letters of approval are received from many prominent men including Emerson, Whittier, Howells, and Henry James. The meeting unanimously adopts resolutions congratulating the Romans upon the union of Rome with the rest of Italy and an address to the "Government and People of Italy." Before adjourning Chairman Dix announced that he had sent the following despatch to King Victor Emanuel: "More than ten thousand American citizens are celebrating to-night, the union of Rome with Italy, and send congratulations." This was received 12

1871 with "immense and prolonged applause."—N. Y. Times, Ja 13,
Jan. 1871. See also Botts, The Unity of Italy. The American Celebration

14 Thomas Nast is beginning to expose in cartoons the political manipulations of Tweed and the Tammany Ring. One of this date bears the legend "Tweedledee and Sweedledum (A New Christmas Pantomime at the Tammany Hall)". Tweed is pictured as bestowing on charity a package of bills with one hand and receiving in the other hand another package of bills from Sweeny, who is at the same time removing another package from the "Public Treasury." Tweed says: "Let's Blind them with this, and then take some more."—Harper's Weekly (1871), XV: 40. "Partly to quiet his conscience, it was suspected, and in part to make himself appear in the light of a generously impulsive man, Tweed gave, in the winter of 1870–71, $1,000 to each of the Aldermen of the various wards to buy coal for the poor. To the needy of his native ward he gave $50,000. By these acts he succeeded in deluding the needier part of the population to the enormity of his crimes."—Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 230.

18 In the "Hall of Mirrors," in the palace of Versailles (itself a monument and symbol of the power and pride of Louis XIV, a power which had been secured to some extent by the humiliation of Germany), King William I, surrounded by the princes of Germany and by the generals of the German army, is proclaimed German emperor.—Hazen, op. cit., 301; Lewis, Hist. of Germany, 751–52; Duruy, Hist. of France, 661. Hazen, whose Europe since 1815 was published in 1910, refers to this episode as "one of the supreme ironies of history." Since then, another treaty of Versailles, terminating the World War of 1914–18 in favour of the French, restored her lost territory.

19 Five Fenians recently released from English prisons arrive at New York. They are given an enthusiastic welcome.—N. Y. Times, Ja 20, 1871. See F 9

28 Paris capitulates to the Germans, and an armistice for three weeks is signed.—Duruy, Hist. of France, 660. The armistice of Versailles virtually terminated the Franco-German war (see Jl 19, S 2, 1870). It gave France opportunity to hold elections for a "National Assembly," in place of a "Government of National Defence" which was improvised when Napoleon III was captured (see S 2, 1870). The assembly chose Thiers as "Chief of the Executive Power," and empowered him to negotiate with Bismarck for peace.—Hazen, op cit., 299, 300. See F 26.

Feb. A letter appears in the columns of the Tribune telling how the 6 death of the late county auditor has been "the means of defeating one of the most gigantic and iniquitous frauds which the Tammany Ring ever concocted." The writer says that, after the passage of the act authorising the widening of Broadway from 34th to 59th St. (see My 17, 1869), commissioners were immediately appointed to assess damages and benefits. These commissioners, by collusion with the owners of property taken for the widening, "managed a scheme which, but for its timely frustration, would have enriched the members of the Ring by several millions." A part of the plan was to have property owners, "in consideration of excessive allowance," assign their claims against the city for damages over to the county auditor, in trust, "to pay to the Ring its share and to the property owners their share of the proceeds." This trust fund had become about $9,000,000, much more than half of which "was to have been reserved for division among the members of the Ring." The death of the auditor, however, would have brought his estate before the surrogate, and all the circumstances connected with this trust fund would be inquired into, and the fraud laid bare "to the public gaze." Mr. Tweed was soon "in communication with his fellow-conspirators," and directions were given "to his minions at Albany" to repeal the act to widen Broadway.—N. Y. Tribune, F 6, 1871.

9 A meeting is held at the Produce Exchange "to take measures to contribute relief for the sufferers in France." The sum of $6,700 is collected at the meeting, and a committee is appointed to solicit further contributions.—N. Y. Times, F 10, 1871.

" The city joins with Tammany in a reception to the Fenian exiles (see Ja 19). Various societies parade in their honour from Tammany Hall to the city hall and thence up Broadway.—N. Y. Times, F 9, 1871.

26 By the preliminary "Peace of Versailles," Bismarck exacts severe terms. France must pay five thousand million francs ($1,000,000,000) within three years. She must cede Alsace and a large part of Lorraine, including the important fortress of Metz. She Feb.
must support a German army of occupation, which will be gradually 26 withdrawn as the installments of the war indemnity are paid. These preliminaries were embodied in the final Treaty of Frankfort, signed on May 10 (q. v.), and ratified by the Assembly of Bordeaux. —Anderson, Constitutions and other Select Docs. Illus. of Hist. of France (1789–1907), 607–8; Duruy, Hist. of France, 660.

As a result of the Franco-German war, Italy completed her unification by seizing the city of Rome and terminating the temporal rule of the pope. Rome became the capital of the kingdom (see Jl 2, 1871).

A still more notable consequence of this war was the unification of Germany, and the creation of the German Empire (see Ja 18, 1871), with Berlin the federal capital.—Hazen, op cit., 300–2, 378.

The Germans enter Paris.—Lewis, Hist. of Germany, 747. Mr 1

A public mass meeting is held at Irving Hall to consider "the 28 problem of rapid transit." The Tribune gives a report of the meeting under the caption "Tunnel Versus Viaduct." Resolutions are adopted urging Gov. Hoffman to sign the "Beach Transit Bill," which has passed the legislature. This bill permits the construction of a tunnel under Broadway, and the speakers contend that the running of locomotives and trains in such a tunnel, "beneath the surface of the street, inclosed in two feet of masonry, and this again surrounded by several feet of earth," is preferable to "running trains upon the viaduct within ten feet of adjoining buildings." About 50 declared their intention to go to Albany to the hearing before the governor.—N. Y. Tribune, Mr 29, 1871. The bill was vetoed by the governor, on March 31 (q. v.), after a hearing on the previous day.

The city is authorised to expend $1,500,000 "in laying pipes to 29 extend the distribution of Croton water through the city of New York, and to furnish a sufficient supply of Croton water to the institutions in charge of the department of public charities and correction located on Blackwell's Island, Ward's Island and Randall's Island, and in laying mains necessary to deliver water at higher elevations."—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 213. On May 7, 1872, an additional $750,000 was authorised to be spent for this purpose.—Ibid. (1872), chap. 593. The further sum of $1,500,000 was appropriated on June 28, 1873.—Ibid. (1873), chap. 865.

The "Beach Transit Bill" (see Mr 28) is vetoed by Gov. Hoff- 31 man. He says in his message that he called for an opinion from Chief Engineer Tracy of the department of public works (Tweed's department), and that gentleman "unqualifiedly condemns" the project. The Tribune declares: "it was very evident that a veto had been ordered from the Governor before the bill passed the Senate, otherwise Mr. Tweed would not have permitted the measure even to be reported, and certainly not to pass, without some show of vigorous opposition. . . . The whole action, both of the Legislature and of the Executive, in this matter has been one series of false pretenses."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 1, 1871. The Sun says: "There are those who do not hesitate to state openly that the veto was prepared before the delegation called on his Excellency yesterday. . . It is the general impression that Gov. Hoffman will sign only the Viaduct bill [see Ap 5]. The impression may arise from the fact that this particular measure meets the approbation of Messrs. Tweed and Sweeny, upon whose friendly endeavors His Excellency looks for the presidential nomination in '72."—N. Y. Sun, Ap 1, 1871.

The legislature authorises the creation by the city of a public 5 fund or stock to be known as "The City Parks Improvement Fund," the amount of which shall be such that the annual interest will not be more than $200,000. This is to be used by the comptroller "for the improvement and regulation of the parks known as the Central park, City Hall park, Morningside park, Riverside park, Madison square, Reservoir square, Washington square, Tompkins square, the Battery, and the several parks and places which by law now are or may hereafter be under the control and management of the department of public parks; and also for the construction and equipment of a meteorological and astronomical observatory on the Central park." At the same time the commissioners of the department of parks are authorised "to construct, erect and maintain in and upon that portion of the Central park, formerly known as 1871 Apr. 5 Manhattan square, or any other public park, . . . a suitable fire-proof building, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining therein . . . a museum and gallery of art, by the Metropolitan Museum of Art . . .; also a suitable fire-proof building for the purpose of establishing and maintaining therein, . . . a museum of natural history, by the American Museum of Natural History." The aggregate cost of the buildings is not to exceed a sum on which the annual interest is to be $35,000 for each building.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 290. The corner-stone of the Museum of Natural History was laid on June 2, 1874 (q. v.).

" The "New York Railway Company" is incorporated by the legislature, the list of incorporators being headed by Peter B. Sweeny and Wm. M. Tweed, Jr. The company is permitted to construct a viaduct railway from Chambers St. northward, with branches on either side of the city and reaching into Westchester Co. A maximum fare of 15c. is fixed "for any distance between Chambers street and the Harlem," and 20c. to Kingsbridge, with the interesting proviso, however, that between 6 and 8 a. m. and 6 and 8 p. m. "trains starting from each terminus . . . shall have attached to the same at least two special cars . . . for the accomodation of citizens and others desiring to travel to and from their work," in which the maximum fare is to be 5c.

A further provision authorises the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty, "to subscribe for five millions of dollars of the stock of the said company" with the approval of the commissioners of the sinking fund.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 300. The act was amended on April 28, authorising the city government to subscribe to the capital stock after "other parties shall have actually subscribed for and taken at least one million of dollars of the stock," exempting the railway's property from taxation during the time allowed for the completion of the viaducts and railways (3 years, as far as 42d St. and 5 years "to complete the same to the Harlem"), and permitting the company to build branch railways "to connect with any other railroad authorized by law."—Ibid., chap. 808. When the original bill was introduced into the senate the Sun in an editorial said: "The bill . . . proposing to construct a viaduct railroad on Manhattan Island appears to have been intended simply to give the quietus to all schemes of rapid transit."—N. Y. Sun, Mr 11, 1871.

6 A public meeting is held in Cooper Institute to protest against the bills the Tweed Ring is forcing through the legislature. It is a monster meeting and an imposing demonstration. Speeches are made by the Hon. Wm. M. Evarts, the Rev. Dr. Henry Ward Beecher, and the Rev. Dr. Bellows. Stirring resolutions, against the so-called Tax Levy Bill, the bill depriving the registry law of its efficiency, the bills for establishing parochial schools, for reorganising the board of education, and for changing the law regulating public amusements, are adopted.—N. Y. Times, Ap 7, 1871. In spite of this opposition the bills passed, and Tweed said: "Well, what are you going to do about it?"—Rhodes, Hist. of the U. S., VI : 405.

8 The legislature amends the charter of the Am. Geographical and Statistical Soc., and changes the name to the Am. Geographical Soc.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 644, quoting its definition of purposes from the act.

" The New York Cotton Exchange (see S 1, 1870) is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 365.

12 The new Broadway Market in Broadway between 44th and 45th Sts. is opened for public inspection.—N. Y. Times, Ap 13, 1871.

" The New York and Long Island Bridge Co. is incorporated for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a bridge over the East River between New York City and Queens County.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 437.

15 The Gilsey House, at the n. e. cor. of Broadway and 29th St., is opened. It is "one of the most imposing of our metropolitan palace hotels."—N. Y. Times, Ap 16, 1871. See L. M. R. K., III: 978.

18 Several amendments to the "Tweed Charter" (see Ap 5, 1870) are made by the legislature. One change empowers the comptroller to "appoint and at pleasure remove a deputy comptroller" whom the comptroller may designate "by due written authority" to act in his stead, "during a period to be specified." The same power is given to the commissioner of public works. More important, however, is the substitution of "the department of public instruction" for the board of education. The members of the latter retire from office "at the expiration of ten days from the passage of this act," and 12 new commissioners are to be appointed by the mayor (former commissioners were elected) to head this new department; in these appointments the chief executive is to recognize "the principle of representation of the minority." A commissioner's term is five years. The department shall not have power "to provide additional sites or buildings or remove any teacher, except by a vote of three fourths of all the members of said board." It is further provided that "trustees of common schools" shall hereafter be appointed rather than elected, although the present incumbents shall serve out their full terms.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 574. The Tribune comments editorially thus: "Where the present charter restricted roguery it has been repealed; where the past year's experience has developed new methods by which profits might accrue, the Charter has been extended."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 19, 1871. Apr. 18

19 An additional sum (see Ap 26, 1870) has to be appropriated "for the completion of the New York county court-house"—$750,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 583.

" A "board of apportionment" is created for the city by the legislature, consisting of the mayor, comptroller, commissioner of public works, and president of the department of parks. This board is to elect a chairman from its own number and appoint a secretary. It is empowered not only to apportion moneys, but "to limit and transfer appropriations which are found to be in excess, . . . and, to regulate all salaries of officers and employees."—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 583. To this board may be traced the origin of the present board of estimate and apportionment.

When this measure was before the legislature, the editor of the Tribune exclaimed against it, saying that it turned "the whole public property and public money of the City and County, and all that can be squeezed out of the tax-payers, over to a close corporation of four persons, to-wit, Hall, Connolly, Tweed, and Sweeny;" that it empowered "this quartet" to appropriate and transfer moneys "ad libertum," thus giving the Ring "absolute control of every man and body of men, whether officers of court, school-teachers, Aldermen, police, Fire Department, and any and all other employés under the City Government; for if any body of these men refuse to do the bidding of the Ring, this quartet could simply stop the entire appropriation of any money to pay their salaries." There certainly should be added to this bill, the editor continues, a clause requiring the board to publish monthly, beginning with July 1, 1871, "a full, detailed statement of all appropriations and transfers of appropriations made by them during the preceding month."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 13, 1871.

" The amount to be raised "by tax upon the estates, real and personal," in the city, for 1871 and 1872, is limited by act of legislature to 2% of the valuation of such estates as fixed for 1871. The aggregate amount raised, including the state tax, is not to exceed $25,000,000 in either year. The sum so raised in each year shall take care of "all the expenses of the city and county government for all their departments and purposes," as well as the debt service. Furthermore, "no liability for any purpose whatsoever shall be hereafter incurred by any department . . . exceeding in amount the appropriations made for such purpose."—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 583.

20 The legislature passes an act "to amend and reduce to one act the several acts relating to buildings in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 625.

" The legislature authorises the laying out of a public square above 59th St., to be used as a parade-ground for the first division, N. Y. S. N. G.—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 628. A map, dated 1873, showing a parade-ground laid out north of Dyckman St. and extending to 211th St. and west of Sherman Ave., is filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 2977. This act, however, was repealed on June 15, 1877 (q. v.).

" New York State appropriates $10,000 "as the contribution of the State of New York, to be paid . . . to the treasurer of the National Washington Monument Society, whenever the Governor shall certify . . . a sufficient sum has been subscribed from other sources to enable said society to resume work with a reasonable prospect of completing the obelisk or shaft."—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 651; Harvey, Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 89. Work on the monument had been suspended in 1855 (q. v.). Following the action of New York State, the legislatures of Minnesota, New Jersey, and Connecticut also appropriated money towards the monument, and other sums were subscribed by benevolent societies throughout the 1871 Apr. 20 country, but work was not recommenced until the federal government took charge of the enterprise in 1876 (q. v., Ag 2).—Harvey, op. cit., 89–98.

25 The legislature authorises the creation of public stock to an amount not exceeding $200,000 for the erection of a building for the Normal College (see Jl 20, 1870).—Laws of N. Y. (1871), chap. 692. The college building was opened on Oct. 29, 1873 (q. v.).

June 3 The designs for the new fountain which is to be placed in City Hall Park have been completed by J. W. Mould.—N. Y. Times, Je 3, 1871. A description of the proposed fountain is in ibid.

10 The Morse statue (by Byron M. Pickett) in Central Park is unveiled. Addresses are made by Gov. Hoffman, Wm. Cullen Bryant, and others. The ceremonies closed with a meeting in the Academy of Music, "where the praises of Prof. Morse were renewed by gifted orators."—N. Y. Times, Je 11, 1871. The statue stood until 1925 near the Fifth Ave. and 72d St. entrance to the park. —Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City. It was then moved to the north end of the Mall, so as to provide more room for the services in honour of Morse held annually by the Society of Telegraphers.

29 The "Council of Political Reform" of the 21st Ward adopts a "Report on the City and County Debt," and orders the same to be given to the press. The report begins with the statement that "for two years and four months, ending on May 1st last, the Mayor and Comptroller of the City of New York kept the tax-payers and the public in ignorance of the manner in which they expended and disbursed the public revenue," although law and custom required that "the Auditor should make a report quarterly, showing to a cent, first, for what every dollar of public money was paid out; and second, to whom paid; and third, when paid: and that the Comptroller should make his reports at the end of each year, showing . . . the whole financial transactions . . ., and a minute statement of the . . . debts and liabilities; and that on the 1st of January of each year the Mayor should, in his annual message, give to the public a summary statement of these important facts. . . . This honest and old-fashioned practice of our public servants ceased on January 1, 1869!"

The report presents tables and figures to show "over $50,000,000 a year Spent and no Accounts Rendered," and the debt "more than doubled" in the last two years, and concludes: "Until our city rulers produce their accounts and vouchers, and deliver to the public the regular quarterly reports of the Auditors for the last twenty-eight months . . ., tax-payers and the public creditors cannot avoid the belief that a large part of it was stolen, traitorously stolen." The "New York City Council of Political Reform," on July 11, adopted this report as an "Official Document of the Council," and ordered its publication.—*N. Y. C. July 2 Victor Emmanuel II, now sovereign of the kingdom of Italy (see F 26), enters Rome, over which the popes have exercised temporal as well as spiritual rule in uncontested right for a thousand years. Thereafter, the pope considered himself the "prisoner of the Vatican," and did not leave its precincts.—Hazen, op. cit., 378–79; Emerson, Hist. of the Nineteenth Cent., III: 1530.

July 8 The New York Times (proprietor, George Jones, and editor, Louis J. Jennings) begins publishing accounts of the Tweed ring's peculations.—N. Y. Times, Jl 8, 1871. "Tweed's crimes and those of his associates were brought to light in two ways. A quarrel developed among the partners. James O'Brien, who was Sheriff, was not satisfied with the share of the plunder which he was receiving. He made up a claim against the city for $350,000, which he afterwards offered to sell to Tweed for that amount. Tweed refused. He felt that O'Brien's support would cost him too dear. O'Brien thereupon began, through a man named William Copeland, who was one of his followers, and for whom he had secured an appointment in the Comptroller's office, to furnish information of the misdeeds of the partners whom he considered too greedy. Mr. Jones, who was the proprietor of the New York Times, obtained from the office of the Comptroller (not only through Copeland, but through Matthew J. O'Rourke, who was a clerk in that office, and himself become convinced of the fraudulent character of the claims which were being paid), without the knowledge of the associates, statements of accounts which showed that the bills which were being paid by the city for the new courthouse and for other purposes were not honest bills. These bills were made up on the same principle as those of the unjust steward in the parable: the plasterers, the painters, the masons, the plumbers—in short, all of those engaged in furnishing labour or material to the courthouse—were told to take their bills and sit down quickly and write six or eight or ten times their actual amount. The contractors, who found that they could not get paid unless they joined in this fraudulent proceeding, got their money, and the balance went to the conspirators."—Wheeler, Sixty Years of American Life, 326–327. Cf. Rhodes, Hist. of U. S., VI: 396–99; Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall, 237–41; How N. Y. is Governed. Frauds of the Tammany Democrats (pub. by N. Y. Times); Tilden, *The N. Y. C. 12 Another "Orange riot" (see Jl 12, 1870) occurs. Though guarded by the 9th and 84th Regiments to prevent trouble, the Orangemen parading in honour of the battle of the Boyne are attacked on Eighth Ave. between 24th and 25th Sts. by a number of Irish Catholics. The militia fired into the mob, and 52 persons were killed and many more wounded. The victims of the riot were buried with great pomp and ceremony.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 13, 1871; *N. Y. 20 The two large tenement-houses on Cherry St. known as Gotham Court are emptied of inhabitants by order of the board of health, so that the buildings may be altered, cleaned, and made wholesome.—N. Y. Times, Jl 21, 1871.

24 The centennial anniversary of the New York Hospital is celebrated at the Historical Society.—N. Y. Times, Jl 25, 1871.

Aug. 15 The centennial anniversary of the birth of Sir Walter Scott is celebrated in New York City by the laying of the corner-stone of his monument in Central Park.—N. Y. Times, Ag 16, 1871. The statue was unveiled on Nov. 2, 1872 (q. v.).

23 Mayor Hall is aroused by the articles that have appeared in the Times (see Jl 8) to send special messages to the board of supervisors and the board of aldermen. He declares a "partisan conspiracy" has been formed "against the credit of the City," and recommends that members from both boards combine with an "unbiased, unexceptionable, and unpartisan Committee of tax-payers" in an examination of the city accounts.—N. Y. Times, Ag 24, 1871. This brought into existence the "Booth Committee."—Townsend, N. Y. in Bondage, 79–80. See O 27.

24 "Delegates to the Convention of the Great Italian Union of the United States and Canada have arrived in this City, and are now stopping at the Grand Central Hotel. The Convention represents all the principal Italian benevolent and protective societies in the country, and will remain in New-York for three days to attend to the business of the Union."—*N. Y. 15 Appropriations for this year, as fixed by the board of apportionment of the city and county of New York, include large items of interest on county debts. Riot damages and soldiers' bounties required the issuance of bonds, on which interest is being paid. The interest on court-house stock alone amounts to $174,031.48. Over $125,000 are distributed among asylums and reformatory institutions. Next to state, county, and city taxes, the largest single amount appropriated for county expenses was $909,524 for the salaries of the judiciary of New York County.—Comptroller's Book, No. 153, p. 149.

16 Comptroller Connolly, after seeking the advice of Samuel J. Tilden, appoints Andrew H. Green deputy comptroller.—N. Y. Times, S 17, 1871. Green was a Democrat of high character who had achieved fame as one of the Central Park commissioners (see My 24, 1858). Cf. Foord, Life of Green.

" The New York Stock Exchange building, "which has been reconstructed and remodeled internally at a cost of $60,000" (see N, 1870), is thrown open to the public.—N. Y. Times, S 17, 1871. The new hall of the stock exchange was formally opened on Sept. 18.—Ibid., S 19, 1871. There is a history of the exchange in ibid.

Oct. 8 The "Chicago Fire" starts. In two days, it destroyed property valued at $196,000,000. It caused a sharp decline in stocks in the New York stock market, resulting in seven Stock Exchange failures. —Eames, in N. Y. Stock Exchange, 58.

9 The "Grand Central Station" (see S 1, 1869), the terminus for the N. Y. & Harlem, the N. Y. Cent. & Hudson River, and the N. Y., New Haven & Hartford Railroads, is completed at 42d St. and Fourth Ave., and the first passenger train leaves the train shed. —From chronology supplied by the company; L. M. R. K., III: 975. The station is shown and described in Harper's Weekly, XVI: 108. The engineering work of making tunnels, erecting brick arches, iron bridges, etc., from the depot to the Harlem River was completed in 1875. The cost of this work was $6,000,000.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 527. See also descrip. of Pl. 169-b, III: 852.

26 The corner-stone of Capt. De Groot's statue of Benjamin Franklin is laid in Printing House Square "with the impressive ceremonies of the Masonic Order."—N. Y. Times, O 27, 1871. See L. M. R. K., III: 964. The statue was unveiled on Jan. 17, 1872 (q. v.).

27 The "Booth Committee" (see Ag 23) makes its report. The following conclusions were reached:

"1 The debt of our City is doubling every two years.

"2 $3,200,000 have been paid for repairs on armories and drill-rooms, the actual cost of which was less than $250,000.

"3 Over $11,000,000 have been charged for outlays on an unfinished Court-house, for which building completed an honest estimate of real cost would be less than $3,000,000.

"4. Safes, carpets, furniture, cabinet-work, plumbing, gas and plastering have cost $7,289,466.81, which are valued by competent persons, after a careful examination, at $624,180.40.

"5. $460,000 have been paid for $48,000 worth of lumber. Oct.

"6. The printing, advertising, stationery, &c., of the City and 27
County, have cost in two years and eight months $7,168,212.23.

"7. A large number of persons are on the payrolls of the City whose services are neither rendered nor required.

"8. Figures upon warrants and vouchers have been fraudulently altered, and payments have repeatedly been made on forged indorsements.

"With these facts before them, Your Committee are compelled to report to you that, in their judgment, frauds and robberies of the most infamous character have been committed with the connivance and co-operation of some of the officials who were appointed to guard the interests of the people.

"The condition of the City and County finances, as shown by these investigations, has served to destroy all confidence in the management of the present City Officials.

"While not desiring to arrest the important improvements now in progress, your Committee still deem it absolutely essential to the credit of the City that expenditures in all departments be reduced to the lowest possible limits; that every officer and salaried employe whose services are not indispensible be discharged, or requested to resign; that Contracts be subjected to the most rigid scrutiny, and all expenditures be reduced to an amount clearly within the financial ability of the Treasury.

"The demands upon the City Treasury will necessitate the borrowing of large sums of money at an early day. An appeal must be made to moneyed institutions and to capitalist. Besides the $20,000,000 due as taxes, $18,000,000 are required to meet current expenses and obligations maturing on the 15th of next January. After that, $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 will be demanded for the first ten months of the ensuing year, under the most economical administration of the City finances.

"Your Committee regard as futile any attempt to borrow these large sums of money while the City is controlled by its present management.

"The existing debt of the City is entirely within the ability of the people. But if the expenditures and frauds of the past two and a half years are to be longer continued, your Committee cannot but view with alarm the consequences to the credit and prosperity of the City. They are, however, of the opinion that the taxpaying citizens and the moneyed institutions will cheerfully respond to the full extent of the requirements of the Treasury, if confidence in the administration of the City and County Government can be restored.

"Your Committee have accomplished the object of their appointment as far as possible, without the additional power to send for persons and papers. We had reason to hope that the Committee would be invested with this power, but that hope has been disappointed.

"Nothing, therefore, remains for us but to submit the results of the investigation, which are embodied in our successive reports. We have endeavored to discharge with fidelity, the duty of the trust committed to our charge, and we deeply regret the necessity of exposing to public view a record of such unexampled and appalling Municipal frauds.

"Respectfully submitted, by order of the Committee,

"Wm. A. Booth, Chairman."—N. Y. Times, O 28, 1871; Townsend, N. Y. in Bondage, chap. 16.

By an order of the supreme court, Tweed is arrested "for deceit " and fraud;" he is released on a million dollars bail furnished by Jay Gould and others.—N. Y. Times, O 28, 1871. "That first arrest marked the beginning of the end. Samuel J. Tilden, like an avenging angel, with all the skill, knowledge, and ambition, of his kind, had linked his legal acumen with the brilliant daring of the Times and the relentless genius of Nast."—Paine, Life of Nast, 194.

Samuel A. Hale writes to F. A. P. Barnard, of Columbia Col- 31
lege: "Since the date of your letter [July 14] what astounding events have transpired in our Country! The discovery and revelation of 1871 Oct. 31 the gigantic thefts of the 'Tammany Ring' in your city—thefts so vast, so stupendous, so bold as almost to make one admire such villany. Certainly the calm and insolent self possession of Tweed, standing, as he does, in the very focus of the exposure—an exposure of infamy such as has never before been heard of—is any thing but contemptible. . . . The exposure of the corruption of the 'Tammany Ring,' in New York, while it excites admiration at the boldness and magnitude of the wickedness displayed, also excites emotions of a very different character. It fills the mind with the very painful conviction, that after all that has been done to make men better—after all the preaching and praying in the Christian Church, through the long series of nineteen centuries, man is now what he was at the beginning—a d – – – – d big rascal."—From original MS. in "Collection of autograph letters, etc. 1674 to 1872," preserved in Columbia Univ. Library.

" Roosevelt Hospital (see O 29, 1869), at its present location between Ninth and Tenth Aves., 58th and 59th Sts., is opened and dedicated.—N. Y. Times, N 2, 1871; N. Y. Herald, N 3, 1871; Roosevelt Hospital: First Ann. Rep. (1873). See also L. M. R. K., III: 955.

7 The exposure of the activities of the Tammany ring by the Times, Nast's cartoons, and the "Committee of Seventy" brings results in the state and municipal elections. Tweed is the only one of the five city senatorial candidates on the Tammany ticket to be elected. Referring to coercion and irregularities at the several polling-places in Tweed's district, the Times says: "Any one having a Tammany ticket [in the second district] could vote, without regard to name, residence or qualification. From Nos. 101, 107 and 109 Chatham-street—all small houses—there were as many voted as would fill Sweeny's Hotel to its utmost capacity." Two thirds of the anti-Tammany candidates for the assembly from the city were successful; Samuel J. Tilden was one of these. Reform candidates were generally successful also in both branches of the common council. The Times editor says: "Will anybody say now that it is of 'no use' to fight against Tammany? Will the croakers tell us today that honest citizens stand no chance against corrupt politicians? The victory we have won is priceless . . . because it will revive every man's faith in the ultimate triumph of truth and justice—because it will teach scheming politicians that the voice of the people is supreme, and that the immortal principles on which this government is founded, although they may be momentarily stifled by dishonest factions, will constantly rise triumphant, while the men who assailed them will pass away to everlasting infamy." —N. Y. Times, N 8 and 9, 1871.

11 Perhaps the first striking use of the tiger as a symbol for Tammany Hall appears in Thomas Nast's cartoon, "The Tammany Tiger Loose," in Harper's Weekly. The tiger wears a collar with "Americus" inscribed thereon.—Harper's Weekly (1871), XV: 1056–57. Tweed was president at this time of "The Americus Club," which counted among its members "many prominent politicians of various shades of political faith," and which had elaborate club grounds and buildings at Greenwich, Conn. At the annual ball of this organization at the Academy of Music, on Jan. 5, 1871, a part of the decorations consisted of "a gas device, fifteen feet in diameter, representing the well-known badge of the club, with the familiar tiger's head surrounded by the legend 'Americus Club,' and appropriately flanked with cork-screws."—Ibid., XV: 57–58. One style of the club's badges was "a solid gold tiger's head in a belt of blue enamel; the tiger's eyes were rubies, and above his head sparkled three diamonds of enormous size."—Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 235.

" The Russian frigate "Svetlana," with Grand Duke Alexis aboard, arrives outside of the bar at Sandy Hook.—N. Y. Times, N 20, 1871. The grand duke landed at New York on Nov. 21, and was received "in a dignified and proper manner." His suite and the reception committee, escorted by regiments of the National Guard, proceeded up Broadway through lines of interested spectators. Later in the day Alexis attended services at the Russian Chapel, No. 951 Second Ave., near 51st St.—Ibid., N 21 and 22, 1871. He left for Washington on Nov. 22, but returned to New York on Nov. 24.—Ibid., N 23 and 25, 1871. On the following days, he visited the fortifications in the harbour, had his picture taken at Brady's gallery, reviewed the Metropolitan fire brigade in Tompkins Square, drove through Central Park, went to the Navy Yard, and attended a ball at the Academy of Music.—Ibid., N 26 and 30, 1871. On Dec. 2, he was presented with Page's famous picture of Farragut at Mobile Bay, which was to be "conveyed by him to the Emperor of Russia as the gift of American citizens."—Ibid., D 3, 1871. On this day, also, he was entertained by the N. Y. Yacht Club at Delmonico's.—Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 111. Alexis bade farewell to New York on Dec. 7.—Times, D 7, 1871. The Salmagundi Club had its beginning about this time, being organized as a sketch class in the studio of Jonathan Scott Hartley at 596 Broadway by a group of art students. For two years following the spring of 1873 there were no meetings, as Hartley was abroad, but on his return the club was revived and met at 896 Broadway. On Jan. 30, 1877, the name "The Salmagundi Sketch Club" was adopted. The club was incorporated in 1880. After many wanderings, it is now (1926) at 47 Fifth Ave.—Shelton, The Salmagundi Club (1918); N. Y. Times, N 6, 1921. Dec. —

In speaking of suitable accommodations for the commissioners and officers of the parks dept., their annual report states: "The only building that could be adapted to that purpose even in part, was the Arsenal or Museum Building. A limited space of the first story of this was occupied by a number of clerks. A small part of the basement (damp and unsuitable as it was) was used by the Central Park Police. . . . Various animals were confined in the basement and on the first floor, with their cages in a state of great insecurity and danger. There had been no extra ventilation furnished to this building from the time it had been used as an Arsenal, and its unwholesome condition was apparent to sight and smell. . . ."—*First Ann. James B. Hodgskin submits, as a basis for discussion, to his "fellow-members of the Committee of Seventy of New York [see S 4], and of the Citizens' Reform Committee of Brooklyn," A Brief Sketch of the General Plan and Principles of the proposed New Charter for the Consolidated Cities of New York & Brooklyn. This document, which anticipated consolidation by more than a quarter century, contains the following interesting provisions: 1

1. A single legislative body—"The City Council"—of 100 members elected from 50 council districts, with a two-year term, one half the number retiring each year; salary, $1,000 per year. "Sittings shall be public, and shall be held in a hall sufficiently large to admit, at all times, a reasonable number of spectators."

2. "In order to give to the position of mayor of the greatest city on this continent a dignity and independence corresponding to its local and national importance, he shall receive a salary of $25,000. per annum, and there shall be assigned to him, at the public expense, an official residence suited to his rank as the direct representative of this great community." Among his duties is that of giving audience "to every citizen," not excluding the poorest and the humblest. He is to be the defender of the weak, the protector of the helpless, the refuge of the oppressed. He is to be, not in name only, but in reality, "the people's servant."

3. There shall be no tax to provide for the city's expenditures, "save and except a tax upon the land within the city limits; and the said land shall be assessed at its full market value irrespective of and without the improvements thereon, and taxed accordingly."

4. Judges shall be appointed by the mayor with the concurrence of the city council, and "shall hold office for life, or until removed for misconduct."—From original in N. Y. P. L.

" The Metropolitan Museum of Art (see Ap 13, 1870) leases the Dodworth building at 681 Fifth Ave. The first exhibition of pictures was held here on Feb. 17, 1872 (q.v.).—Howe, *Hist. of Met. 1871 Dec. 6 The Greenwich St. elevated railroad is sold, under foreclosure of mortgages held by various parties, to the N. Y. Elevated Co. (see O 27) for $230,000.—"The Story of the Manhattan Railway," by Russell Sage, in Railroad Men, XVI, No. 4; Statutes & Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882). From this time until 1875 (q.v., Je 17), some improvements were made in the way of strengthening the structure and increasing station accommodations, but no extension of the road was undertaken by the company.—*Report of the Special Com. on R. 16 Tweed, indicted and arrested as a common felon, is arraigned in the court of general sessions, but is released by Justice Barnard on $5,000 bail. His counsel consists of John Graham, ex-Judge Fullerton, J. E. Burrill, David Dudley Field, and Mr. Stoughton. On the people's behalf appear District Attorney ex-Judge Garvin, Chas. O'Conor, and Gen. Barlow.—N. Y. Times, D 17, 1871. A condensed statement of the charges against Tweed, as contained in the lengthy indictment, is published in ibid., p. 8. See, N 19, 1873.

— In England, a "Ballot Act" was passed during this year, providing for the Australian system in voting. Up to this time, voting had been viva voce.—Hazen, op. cit., 483–84.

— The construction of so-called fire-proof buildings is growing general, examples of which are the Staats Zeitung building, A. T. Stewart's (later the Park Ave.) Hotel, the Drexel building, the Metropolitan Savings Bank, and the post office.—Ann. Rep., Supt. of Bldgs. (1872), 11.

— In this year, the Western Union building, another example of early so-called fireproof construction, was begun on the north-west corner of Broadway and Dey St. It was completed in 1875.—Descrip. of Pl. 155-a, Vol. III, where it is shown in process of construction.

— In this year, the construction of the "Newsboys' Lodging House" (see Ap 29, 1868), at the intersection of Duane, William, and New Chambers Sts., was begun. The house was finished and opened in 1874.—20th Ann. Rep., Children's Aid Soc.; L. M. R. K., III: 954. It was formerly a building known as the Shakespeare Hotel (cf. L. M. R. K., III: 980).—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 639.

— Between 1872 and 1874, drinking fountains were erected by the city in the following localities: four in City Hall Park; two in Union Square; two on Madison Square; and a granite drinking fountain for horses at the Worth monument. The fountain at 59th St. and Fifth Ave. was removed and re-erected in Washington Square.—3d Ann. Rep., Park Com'rs (1872–1873), 17, 56, and 62.

— In this year, the Beach Pneumatic Underground Railway (see F 26, 1870) met with objections from various authorities, although later Gov. Dix signed the bill authorising its construction (see Ap 9, 1873).—See the pamphlet, Unanswerable Objections to a Broadway Underground Railroad, &c., 1873.

— In this year was issued Tallis's Illustrated Monthly Business Directory, And New York Street Views, a series of double plates engraved on steel.—See also descrip. of Pl. 147, III: 719; cf. 1854, and 1863.

— In this year, Ward McAllister organized the "Patriarchs." The number was limited to 25, and each member, for his subscription, was permitted to invite to each Patriarchs' ball four ladies and five gentlemen, including himself and family. Distinguished strangers to the number of fifty were invited. The first Patriarchs were: John Jacob Astor, William Astor, De Lancey Kane, Ward Mc Allister, George Henry Warren, Eugene A. Livingston, Wm. Butler Duncan, E. Templeton Snelling, Lewis Colford Jones, John W. Hamersley, Benjamin S. Welles, Frederick Sheldon, Royal Phelps, Edwin A. Post, A. Gracie King, Lewis M. Rutherfurd, Robert G. Remsen, Wm. C. Schermerhorn, Francis R. Rives, Maturin Livingston, Alex. Van Rensselaer, Walter Langdon, F. G. D'Hauteville, C. C. Goodhue, and Wm. R. Travers. The first balls were given in the winters of 1872 and 1873 and continued up to 1897 (q. v., Mr 2) and were the most brilliant social events of each season.—McAllister, Society As I Have Found It (1890), 211–17. 1872 —

Jan. 2 In his message to the legislature, Gov. Hoffman recommends a non-partisan commission of 32 to consider and propose amendments to the state constitution. Among the improvements he thinks necessary are the extension of the governor's term to three years, and that of a senator to four, concentrating power in the governor by placing in his hands the appointment of most of the state officers, the prohibition of special and local legislation, increasing the salary of members of the legislature, and limiting the debt-incurring power of municipalities.—Messages from the Governors, VI: 391–404; Lincoln, *Const. 17 In celebration of the anniversary of Benjamin Franklin's birth, the De Groot statue in Printing House Square (see O 26, 1871) is unveiled.—N. Y. Times, Ja 18, 1872; L. M. R. K., III: 964. See also Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 107.

Feb. 13 "Among the French of this City a subscription has been opened to raise funds in aid of the French Government to pay the war indemnity, in order to get rid of the German occupation as soon as possible. During one week $4,310 has been received."—N. Y. Times, F 13, 1872.

17 The first private view of the collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art is held, in the Dodworth Building (681 Fifth Ave.), which had been leased for the purpose (see D 1, 1871). On Feb. 22, the gallery was opened to the public.—Howe, Hist. of the Met. Museum of Art, 143, 189. See N, 1872, and 1873.

20 A great mass-meeting is held at Cooper Institute to indorse the new city charter drawn up by the "Committee of Seventy." Addresses are made by ex-Mayor Havemeyer, ex-Gov. Salomon, Horace Greeley, Gen. Dix, Joseph H. Choate, and others.—N. Y. Times, F 21, 1872.

22 The corner-stone of the Manhattan Market is laid at the foot of West 34th St.—N. Y. Times, F 23, 1872. It was opened on Nov. 11.—Ibid., N 12, 1872; L. M. R. K., III: 959. See Ja 3, 1880.

Apr. 2 Jas. M. Macgregor, supt. of buildings, in his annual report for the year ending April 2, 1872, says, regarding the city's "Resources:" ". . . Her narrow streets, frightful tenements and filthy markets yet remain in vivid contrast to her Broadway, 5th avenue and Central Park. Within an area of only 22 square miles, dwell a population of nearly a million, who live and do business in little over half the space, the centre of population being at 14th street and 4th avenue. She has the most extensive, wealthy and intelligent suburban surroundings of any city on the continent, sixty per cent. of her business men residing in the rural districts within a radius of 20 miles. Among her domestic duties, according to the last annual reports, New York has the care of: 460 miles of streets and avenues (290 of them paved); three square miles of parks; 29 miles of Water Front with an anchorage area of 115 miles; 340 miles of Croton Water pipes, delivering 85,000,000 gallons of water daily; 275 miles of sewers; she expends $3,000,000 annually on her Public Schools, wherein 239,744 pupils are educated by 2,787 teachers in 237 School-houses; she expends on Public Charities and out-door poor annually, $1,206,358, and to aid private charities, over $200,000; her Health Department is maintained at an annual cost of $169,478; the Fire Department, $1,027,815; Public Works over $5,000,000; she has a Police Force of 2,325 persons maintained at an annual cost of $3,443,659.72; she has 500 miles Gas Pipes and 19,000 Public Lights, which cost her yearly $1,105,750.09; to facilitate the work of transportation and transit, she employs 1,000 Horse Cars; 12,000 licensed Vehicles; 267 stages, and 40,000 horses, and her population and necessities are rapidly and inexorably increasing. . . ."—Reports of the Supt. of Buildings for the years 1870 and 1871 (N. Y., 1872), 54–55.

1872 Ap 10 The Society of St. Vincent de Paul in the city of New York is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 197.

16 The Second Ave. R. R. Co. is authorised to construct an additional track along the avenue from 23d to Houston St., a single track thence to Forsyth St. and along Forsyth to Division St., a double along Division to connect with their tracks in Chatham Sq., and an additional track in Grand St., from Forsyth to Chrystie, and along Chrystie to Division St.; also a double track from their tracks at Second Ave. and Stuyvesant St., along Stuyvesant across Third Ave., 8th St., and Fourth Ave., to Astor Place, and along Astor Place to the east side of Broadway; also a double track from First Ave. through and along 63d and 64th Sts. to a point 200 feet from Third Ave., and in First Ave. between 63d and 64th Sts. to connect with the same; also a double track in 86th St. from Second Ave. to Ave. A, along Ave. A to 92d St., and through to the East River; also a double track from their tracks in Chatham Sq. through and along Worth St. to Broadway.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 240.

17 A great mass meeting is held at Cooper Institute by those who are in favour of Grant's re-election to the presidency. Speeches are made by Wm. E. Dodge, E. Delafield Smith, Gen. Sickles, Sen. Wilson, and others.—N. Y. Times, Ap 18, 1872. See also Clews, Twenty-Eight Years in Wall St., 313–26.

30 A new city charter, proposed by the "Committee of Seventy" (see D 17, 1872) and passed by both houses of the state legislature, is vetoed by Gov. Hoffman.—N. Y. Times, My 1, 1872. The Times editor says: "It is simply impossible that the community could be so egregiously robbed under the scheme of the Seventy as it was under the work of the Ring. We cannot get out of the beaten track of past failures, unless by proposing something which may be called an 'experiment,' and in spite of the inevitable clumsiness of some of the machinery, the Committee of Seventy's Charter was a far more promising experiment than anything which could be framed under the recommendations made by Gov. Hoffman."—Ibid.

" While it was provided by act of legislature, on April 19, 1871 (q. v.), that the tax "upon estates real and personal" in 1871 and 1872 should be limited to 2% on the assessed valuation, the law is now altered to allow a 2¾% limit for the present year.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 444.

May 4 The New York Cotton Exchange (see S 1, 1870) occupies its second building, at No. 1 Hanover Square; on April 29, 1885, the Exchange moved into its present building, No. 60 Beaver St.—Information furnished by Mr. Thomas Hale, Jr., Supt., N. Y. Cotton Exchange.

6 Election Day is made "a public holiday."—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 544.

" Niblo's Garden Theatre, at the north-east corner of Broadway and Prince St., is for the second time destroyed by fire (see S 18, 1846).—N. Y. Times, My 7, 1872. It was rebuilt and reopened Nov. 30, 1872.—Brown, I: 212. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985.

14 A new election law (see Ap 5, 1870) is passed "to provide for ascertaining, by proper proofs, the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage." This act is even more elaborate than the former one and occupies nearly 50 pages in the volume of laws. The more important new features include making election days legal holidays (see Ap 23, 1870); providing for the polls to be open from 6 a. m. to 4 p. m.; placing the whole system of registration and election under the control of a "bureau of elections" in the police department. Our modern books for registering voters, "ruled in parallel columns, in which, opposite to and against the name of every applicant, shall be entered" certain prescribed data (see p. 1577 of the act), are traceable to this act. Four days for registrations are fixed, the last two being "the Friday and Saturday of the second week preceding the day of the November election." No vote is to be received on election day unless the voter's name appears on three registers. A "record of deaths" is to be kept and registers corrected accordingly.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 675.

" The legislature passes an act "to improve and regulate the use of the Fourth avenue." It authorises the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Co. to regulate grades, construct viaducts, foot and road bridges over the avenue, and tunnels under it, the improvements being described with reference to specified streets above 42d St.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 702. These improvements, begun in 1872, were completed in 1874.—Chronology supplied by the company; see also N. Y. Eve. Post (Supp.), F 1, 1913. See also My 22.

May 14 The commissioners of public charities and correction are empowered to purchase all or any part of "Ward's (or Great Barn) Island" not now owned by the city.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 679.

22 Cornelius Vanderbilt and others are incorporated as the New York City Rapid Transit Co., with a capital of $12,000,000. The company is authorised to construct an underground railway from City Hall Park to connect with the N. Y. and Harlem R. R. between 48th and 59th Sts., and also a branch from this junction to the track of the N. Y. Central and Hudson River R. R. Co. The main line is to be begun in six months and finished within 3 years and the branch is to be completed in 7 years.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 834. No underground road, however, was built by this company.—Walker, Fifty Years of Rapid Transit, 98–100.

" The N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co. is directed to extend its tracks from Madison Ave. and 79th St. along the avenue to 86th St., through 86th to Ave. A, along the avenue to 92d St., and through 92d to the Astoria Ferry, East River; also to lay a track from Madison Ave. and 86th St. along the avenue "as far as it may from time to time be opened."—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 825.

23 Ward's bronze statue of Shakespeare (see Ap 23, 1864) is unveiled in Central Park. Judge Daly, Col. Henry G. Stebbins, and Wm. Cullen Bryant make addresses, and Edwin Booth recites R. H. Stoddard's poem "Shakespeare."—N. Y. Times, My 24, 1872.

29 Mount Sinai Hospital (see My 25, 1870), Lexington Ave., 66th to 67th St., is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, My 30, 1872; L. M. R. K., III: 954. See also 62*d Ann. Rep.*, Mt. Sinai Hospital, Jan., 1915, and King's Handbook (1893).

June 3 The Democrats of the city hold a meeting at Cooper Institute to express their approval of the nomination of Horace Greeley for president and of B. Gratz Brown for vice-president. The speakers include Gen. Cochrane, Sen. Tipton, Sen. Doolittle, and Gen. Kilpatrick.—N. Y. Times, Je 4, 1872.

10 A fire breaks out in the caisson of the East River Bridge, on the New York side, but is quickly extinguished.—N. Y. Times, Je 11, 1872.

15 The legislature provides for the appointment by the governor with the concurrence of the senate of a commission of 32 members (see Ja 2), to propose amendments to the state constitution.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 884. See Mr 25, 1873.

17 The Gilbert Elevated Railway Co. is incorporated to provide rapid transit by means of tubular roadways, suspended above the street by gothic arches springing from the curb lines, through which cars are to be propelled by compressed air.—Laws of N. Y. (1872), chap. 885; ibid. (1873), chap. 837. The general conviction that the plans to which the company was committed by its charter were extravagantly expensive, if not wholly impracticable, together with the financial depression of the country, rendered abortive every effort to set this enterprise in motion, until the Rapid Transit commissioners confirmed this company in possession of its valuable route and permitted it to adopt simple and economical plans of construction (see S 3, 1875).—Report of the Special Com. on R. R. Appointed . . . to Investigate Alleged Abuses in the Management of R. R. (Albany, 1880).

30 The commissioners appointed to make the assessments and awards in the matter of the extension of 11th Ave. have completed their work. "The opening will extend northwardly from the northerly line of the road or public drive, to the southerly line of the street leading from King's Bridge road, near Inwood-street, and thence to the Harlem River, near Sherman's Creek."—N. Y. Times, Je 20, 1872.

July 15 The natives of Alsace and Lorraine who are now residing in New York City manifest their loyalty to the French Republic by meeting at Irving Hall and parading down Broadway to the French Consulate in Bowling Green. Those who wish "to retain their original nationality as French citizens" enroll at the consulate.—N. Y. Times, Jl 16, 1872.

" Mayor Hall submits to the common council, with comments, department reports that have been filed with him. In connection with the report of the commissioners of charity and correction he appeals for the construction of a new city prison to displace the building "most appropriately known as the 'Tombs.'" This was "builded upon piles over a swamp. It cramps those whom the law presumes to be innocent with a confinement more impure and irksome than is meted out to convicted criminals. The young girl imprisoned for the theft of urgent temptation is compelled to hear 1872 July 15 the blasphemies of the criminal crone.—Oliver Twists and Fagins meet within conversational distance. Foul air, fouler association, and absolute lack of exercise unite to make the Tombs the High School of Crime, as the State Prison is its University."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1872), CXXVII: 120–21.

30 Plans are approved for the construction of a rostrum and other suitable arrangements for public meetings and military reviews at the north end of Union Square. Also, it is resolved to erect the Merchants' Gate at the 59th St. and Eighth Ave. entrance to Central Park, and to obtain plans for the Scholars' Gate (Fifth Ave. and 59th St.), the Women's Gate (Eighth Ave. and 72d St.), and the Children's Gate (Fifth Ave. and 72d St.).—Min., etc., Bd. of Com'rs of the Dept. of Pub. Parks (1873), 468, 471. For "Report on Nomenclature of the Gates of the Park," see 5th Ann. Rep. of Bd. of Com'rs of the Cent. P'k (1862), 125. For the location and names of other points of interest in Central Park, see 8th Ann. Rep, Bd. of Com'rs (1864), 45–46. Designs for the Scholars' Gate were made by Richard M. Hunt. See also Catalogue of Plans for the Improvement of the Central Park, a pamphlet, in N. Y. P. L., containing marginal notes in MS. showing the names of competitors in designing various features (mentioned in an article by Theodora Kimball in Landscape Architecture, Ja, 1922).

Sept. 11 "The first of the series of grand ratification meetings to be held during the campaign" takes place at Cooper Institute. It is "a most enthusiastic and loyal indorsement of the Republican National and State tickets." Stirring speeches are made by Gov. Jewell, Gen. Van Buren, and others.—N. Y. Times, S 12, 1872. The second Republican rally was held on Sept. 18.—Ibid., S 19, 1872. The third took place on Sept. 25.—Ibid., S 26, 1872.

12 The Philharmonic Society of New York gives its "first serenade . . . since the one they accorded to Jenny Lind." The recipient is Anton Rubinstein, the pianist.—N. Y. Times, S 13, 1872. Rubinstein gave his first concert at Steinway Hall on Sept. 23.—Ibid., S 24, 1872.

14 The "Alabama Claims" are settled by a tribunal of arbitration at Geneva, and the U. S. is granted an indemnity of $15,500,000 from Great Britain.—U. S. Treaties, Conventions, and International Acts (Washington, 1910), I: 717–22.

30 Mme. Pauline Lucca makes her début in New York. She appears as Selika in "L'Africaine." The performance takes place in the Academy of Music.—N. Y. Times, O 1, 1872. On Oct. 2 she played the part of Margarita in Gounod's "Faust."—Ibid., O 3, 1872.

Oct. 4 A number of influential citizens hold a meeting at the Union League Club "to take action in reference to the representation of the United States at the Vienna Exposition." After much discussion a committee is appointed "to promote the objects of the Austrian Exhibition in the United States" and to "memorialize Congress on the subject of an appropriation."—N. Y. Times, O 5, 1872.

7 The large hall at Cooper Institute is crowded to its utmost capacity on the occasion of a grand mass-meeting under the auspices of the Woman's Rights Association. The nominations of Grant and Wilson are ratified. Rev. Miss Olympia Brown, Miss Susan B. Anthony, and others address the meeting.—N. Y. Times, O 8, 1872.

10 The Presbyterian Hospital (see F 28, 1868) is opened, on the north side of 70th St. between Madison and Park Aves.—N. Y. Times, O 11, 1872; Dedicatory Exercises on the Opening of the Presby. Hospital (1872). Richard M. Hunt was the architect. James Lenox was the first president.—1st Ann. Rep. (1869). See also L. M. R. K., III: 955. The hospital is shown and described in Harper's Weekly, XVI: 901.

19 The Republican county organization joins with the "Reformers" in nominating Wm. F. Havemeyer (mayor in 1845–46, 1848–49) for mayor.—N. Y. Times, O 20 and 23, 1872. Mr. Havemeyer was elected (see N 5).

23 The park department decides to fit up the lower floor of the arsenal in Central Park for the Am. Museum of Natural History (instead of the second and third floors which it has occupied since 1870, q.v.), and to reserve accommodations for its own use in the building.—Min., etc., Dept. of Pub. Parks (1873), 538. In 1877, the museum removed to its present location.

Nov. — About this time, work on the building in Central Park for the Metropolitan Museum of Art was begun. On April 1, the trustees ratified the selection of the site in Central Park; ground for the building was not actually broken until 1874.—Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art, 152–53; 3d Ann. Rep., Park Com'rs (1872–73), 61.

Nov. 1 "The new Episcopal Church of St. Bartholomew, erected at the corner of Madison-avenue and Forty-fourth-street, is now completed, and presents a magnificent specimen of the most chaste and ornate architecture."—N. Y. Times, N 1, 1872. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 933. "It is a fine example of the Lombardo-Gothic style, with lofty decorated front and a campanile tower with open belfry. The interior is handsomely treated in polychrome. Polished Scotch granite columns, carrying a triforium gallery and a clere-story, support the lofty nave roof. . . ."—King's Handbook (1893), 358. Renwick & Sands were the architects—Records of the church.

2 The "memorial statue of Sir Walter Scott [see Ag 15, 1871], presented to this city by the Scottish residents, and erected at the Mall in Central Park," is unveiled before more than 5,000 spectators.—N. Y. Times, N 3, 1872. The bronze statue was by Sir John Steell.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City.

5 Ulysses S. Grant and Henry Wilson, the Republican candidates, are elected president and vice-president, defeating Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown, candidates of the Democrats and Liberal Republicans.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 143–61.

" The charter election is held jointly with that of state and nation. Wm. F. Havemeyer, nominated by the "Reformers" and the Republicans (see O 19), is elected mayor in a three-cornered contest, his opponents being A. R. Lawrence, Tammany, and James O'Brien, Apollo Hall.—N. Y. Times, N 6 and 8, 1872. The Times comments editorially on the labours of the Herald, World, and Tribune "to convince the people that the nominee of Tammany was a safe man to trust in the Mayor's chair." Mr. Havemeyer's election assures "an era of local administration in which ability and economy will go hand in hand, and in which public improvements worthy of the growing wants of the City will be conducted on the principle that for every dollar expended we must have a dollar's worth of work."—Ibid., N 6, 1873.

9 The "Boston Fire" begins. It destroyed property valued at $80,000,000. The decline in stocks at New York caused several Stock Exchange failures, as the larger "Chicago Fire" had done (see O 8, 1871).—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 58. See N 11.

11 A meeting is held at the Chamber of Commerce "to give expression to the sympathy of the mercantile community of New-York with the sufferers by the recent terrible fire in Boston [see N 9], and to take such action in the matter as may be deemed advisable." Resolutions are passed, and a committee is appointed to solicit subscriptions.—N. Y. Times, N 12, 1872.

24 The Hendrick Rutgers' house, in the block bounded by Rutgers Place, Clinton, Cherry, and Jefferson Sts., is thus described: When Wm. B. Crosby inherited the house from Henry Rutgers about 1830, "he not liking the ancient aspect of the old mansion, undertook to modernize it, which he did with a vengeance. It was the age of pseudo classicism, so he clapped two wings on each side of the building, tore down everything inside, raised up the facade in the centre, and adorned it with a Doric pediment and pillars, surmounting the whole with an observatory. The great beams of live oak which had been put in eighty years before were so seasoned that it was with great difficulty they could be sawed. The inside of the old new house was greatly improved. In spite of the Doric columns, Mr. Crosby was a man of fine taste, and he furnished the house in admirable style, importing from England rare woods and marbles and fine moldings. And here he lived with his family until his death in 1865. By this time the neighborhood was greatly altered, and was, in fact, an unpleasant one for people of his standing in society. Of all the land that had been with the house only the block had been retained, and in spite of every effort to make it look cheerful, the garden insisted on being as gloomy as a grave. His sons sold it to Mr. Briggs, barrel-maker and cooper, for the sum of $80,000. At first he leased it to a boarding-house keeper, who ran away. Then he lived in it himself, and filled the gardens with second-hand barrels and sugar-boxes which he buys from the refiners and converts into kindling-wood. Mounds of these seventy feet high were soon reared in every direction, and the whole place was obscured by them, narrow labyrinthine paths being left through which the workmen might pass. The front of the house, which under Mr. William B. Crosby's Grecian alteration had been turned to the north, facing on Monroe-street, was all that was spared. Mr. Briggs now left the place, and established his foreman in it, and then the front was hidden with another pile of sugar-boxes

1872 Nov. 24 and fish-barrels. Last year a Miss Langdon rented the middle part of the mansion for a children's refuge, and put up a blue sign with gold letters, 'Chapel of the Holy Rest.' She only stayed some months, and then the entire interior of the center was gutted; the marbles, the mahogany staircase, and the superb moldings were sold. The space thus gained was filled with beer-barrels. It was now a forlorn sight. A rough wooden staircase, more like a ladder than anything else, enabled the workmen to reach the top barrels, but below it was impossible to move, for there was no space. But the visitor, casting his eyes upward, can still see, sole vestige of ancient grandeur amid all the squalor, a superb molding on the ceiling next to the roof, which was difficult to remove and was therefore left. Finally Mr. Briggs sold house and lots for $120,000, and it is to be presumed that tenement-houses will soon go up, for on the south corner of the block there is now a huge mill, which would be objectionable to the inhabitants of houses of a better class."—N. Y. Times, N 24, 1872. See L. M. R. K., III: 952; and descrip. of Pl. 109-a, III: 612–13. The house was torn down in 1875 (q.v.).

Dec. 1 "The efforts made during several generations to secure a payment of the claims arising out of the French spoliations, for which the United States had accepted the responsibility in the Treaty of 1801 [see S 30, 1800] . . . have been revived, and yesterday assumed shape at a general meeting of the heirs at the counting-house of N. L. & G. Griswold, No. 71 South-Street. It is estimated that the value of property destroyed amounted to $12,000,000, the greater part of which belonged to citizens of New York. Nearly seventy of the descendants of these yesterday affixed their names to a memorial to Congress."—N. Y. Times, D 1, 1872; McMaster, II: 572.

4 The funeral of Horace Greeley, who died Nov. 29, is held at the Church of the Divine Paternity, the body having lain in state in the governor's room of the city hall on Dec. 3. The service is attended by Pres. Grant, Vice-Pres. Colfax, Vice-Pres. elect Wilson, Chief-Justice of the U. S., and by a large number of other distinguished members of both political parties.—N. Y. Times, N 30, D 3, 4, and 5, 1872.

10 At 11:15 p. m. a fire breaks out in an upper storey of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Twenty-two women were smothered and burned to death. The property loss was at least $100,000.—N. Y. Times, D 11 and 12, 1872. See L. M. R. K., III: 978.

17 A sub-committee of the "Committee of Seventy" (see S 4, 1871) submits certain "points as material in respect of an amended charter." The first point is that any change shall be based on the idea of "obtaining an honest, vigorous and economical administration," not on "the theory of party aggrandisement." Another point is "that the method of appointments and removals shall, in a prudent and appropriate manner, recognize the principle of Civil Service Reform as now being enforced by the President." Another, "that there shall be appropriate provisions . . . for preventing city officials screening their acts and becoming bold in ill-doing, under the protection of the party organization that promoted them." Another, "that the next and all future Common Councils to be elected shall consist of only one Board," elected on the basis of proportional representation, and that this board "shall have no charge of expending money." Another, that the mayor shall appoint members of administrative boards (health, police, and commerce excepted—to be named by the governor) without "party or political reasons," public notice being given of the appointees intended five days before the appointments become effective; that the mayor shall be responsible for "vigor, fidelity and economy" in administration, and empowered to remove for cause; that the governor also may remove the members of the boards or indeed the mayor himself. Another, that, at the next mayoralty election, the candidate receiving a plurality of the votes "shall be Mayor, and the other two shall be appointed by the existing Mayor as First and Second Assistant Mayors," with membership ex officio in the board of aldermen. Still others, that there shall be published a "City Record;" that the municipal elections "shall be in the Spring, and separate from other elections;" that there shall be "all proper provisions for discovering and punishing official fraud." —From pamphlet with the title "Strictly Private," preserved in N. Y. P. L. For the fate of the charter of the "Committee of Seventy," see Ap 30, 1872 (q.v.).

24 Barnum's Hippotheatron (or Museum), also Grace Chapel to the east of it, and other buildings in 14th St. between Third and Fourth Aves., are destroyed by fire. The menagerie was named the Hippotheatron by Jes. E. Cooke who built it after the war; it came later into the hands of L. B. Lent, who called it The New York Circus; he sold it to Barnum in the Summer of 1872.—N. Y. Herald, D 25, 1872. See also view and description in Harper's Weekly, XVII: 29, 30. Dec. 24

31 The report of the supt. of buildings for the year ending this day is the last annual report.—See Rep. of the Supt. of Buildings for the year 1872 (N. Y., 1873). The later reports are printed quarterly in the City Record. A note in the general catalogue of N. Y. P. L. says: "From 1873–1892 this dept. was maintained in the Fire Dept. as a Bur. of Inspection of Buildings, the repts. of which are included in those of the Fire Dept." See, however, the charter of April 30, 1873, as amended May 29, 1880 (q.v.); and Addenda.

— In this year, the first practical typewriter was invented, by Christopher Latham Sholes, and the firm of E. Remington & Sons began to manufacture it at Ilion, N. Y.—The Story of the Typewriter, 1873–1923 (pub. by Herkimer Co. Hist. Soc., 1923); N. Y. Times, S 9, 12, and 13, 1923. For such an invention, produced in France as early as 1831, see N. Y. Mirror, D 10, 1831.

— In this year was published by the Am. Photo. Lith. Co. a coloured Map of the city of New York north of 155th street showing the progress made in laying out streets, roads, public squares and places, by the commissioners of Central Park, under chap. 565 of laws 1865 and of New pier and Bulkhead lines under chap. 695 of laws of 1867. Compiled and drawn by Edward S. Ewen; size 24 x 67 in.

— In this year was published by Croes & Van Winkle, New York, a folio atlas containing 12 maps, entitled The west side of the city of New York between eighth avenue and Hudson river, from fifty-ninth street to one hundred and fifty-fifth street. Showing graphically the existing condition of all real estate as regards all public improvements, with appendix giving dates of the improvement.

— In this year was published by J. B. Wallace & T. Shillington an index map of 70 sheets, oblong folio, entitled The Empire city lot book: being a complete atlas of Manhattan island, north of 42d st.

— "Few people are aware of the stupendous work going on at Hell Gate and of the important results that may be expected to ensue from it. The removal of the rocks there, so as to make a perfectly free and safe channel for the largest vessels, was a vast undertaking. In this age, however, hardly anything seems impossible to engineering skill. In view, therefore, of the importance of opening a free and safe channel for the commerce of New York by the way of Long Island Sound and the East River, the government resolved to remove the Hell Gate obstructions. The work was commenced a little more than two years ago and it is believed that in less than two years more the whole will be completed. It is under the charge of Major-General John Newton, of the United States Engineer Corps. A vast deal of rock has already been blasted out and cleared away. Of about one hundred and sixty-five thousand cubic yards of rock to be removed, at least forty two thousand have been taken out. For removing the rest the rock is being tunnelled and pierced in every direction. When this is accomplished a tremendous blast will be made with seven thousand pounds of nitro-glycerine equal in force to seventy thousand pounds of gunpowder. [For the great explosion, see S 24, 1876]."

The Lenox Library "is advanced to the second story. . . .

"Among the most noteworthy buildings in course of construction in the city, is Masonic Hall, at the corner of Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street.

"The new U. S. Post Office and the new Roman Catholic Cathedral exceed in magnificence any other buildings in the metropolis.

"The New Court House has nothing to boast of but size."—Wood's Illus. Hand-Book to N. Y. (1873), 149–50, 160, 165–66.

— The city at this time owned 25 parks and public places, having a total area of 1,094.02 acres. Central Park covered 840 acres, exclusive of Manhattan Square; 143 acres of it were occupied by reservoirs and 9 acres by public highways for street traffic. At the close of 1873, Central Park had cost the city $13,902,515, of which $5,028,844 was for the land and $8,873,671 for its improvements. From 1856 to 1873, the value of real estate in the three wards adjoining the park increased $183,000,000.—3d Ann. Rep., Park Com'rs (1872–1873), 15, 338, 344.

1873 — The following are the more important buildings mentioned by the superintendent of buildings as "erected" (plans filed or work begun) in this year: "French flats" on Broadway, between 51st and 52d Sts.; Barnum's Hippodrome on 27th St.; Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. building on the south-east corner of Church and Cortlandt Sts., Richard M. Hunt, architect; Western Union Telegraph building on the north-west corner of Broadway and Dey Sts., George B. Post, architect; Fifth Ave. Presbyterian Church, corner of Fifth Ave. and 55th St., Carl Pfiffer, architect; an iron structure called "The Coliseum" at Broadway and 35th St.; Rutgers Presbyterian Church on south-west corner of Madison Ave. and 29th St.; Park Theatre on 22d St. near Broadway (see Ap 14, 1874).—Rep., Dept. of Bldgs., in City Record, I: 165, 491; II: 136–38.

— In the spring of this year, the Metropolitan Museum of Art moved from the Dodworth building (see D 1, 1871) to the Douglas mansion at 128 W. 14th St. On Feb. 14, 1879, the exhibition at the Douglas house was closed, and the work was begun of transferring the collection to the building in Central Park, which had just been completed, from plans by Mr. Hunt, at a cost of nearly $500,000.—Howe, Hist. of the Met. Museum of Art. The new building was opened on March 30, 1880 (q.v.).

— At this time, the Townsend mansion, at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 34th St., was occupied by the democratic Blossom Club, formed in 1864, of which Wm. M. Tweed was the first vice-president.—Fairfield, The Clubs of N. Y. (1873), 241.

— A bronze statue by J. Q. A. Ward, a memorial to 58 members of the 7th Regiment who died in the Civil War, is erected by the regiment and presented to the city. It stands on the west walk in Central Park, opposite 67th St.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City.

— In this year, after the death of the artist John F. Kensett, his canvases remaining in his studio realized over $150,000 at public auction.—Isham, Hist. of Am. Painting (1905), 240.

Jan. 1 Daly's Fifth Avenue Theatre (see Ag 16, 1869) on West 24th St. is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ja 2, 3, and 5, 1873; L. M. R. K., III: 983. Daly first moved to the Worrell Sisters' Theatre at Broadway and 8th St., but on Dec. 3 (q.v.) opened his new theatre on 28th St. The theatre on West 24th St. was rebuilt and opened on Dec. 10, 1877 (q.v.).—Brown, II: 414.

6 Mayor Havemeyer communicates a long message to the common council. He emphasizes the desirability of consolidating city and county governments. He deplores the impotence of the common council, declaring that the executive departments "have absorbed to themselves all the legislative power," have "raised, appropriated, and expended" money "without any reference to the Common Council," indeed, have become "absolute rulers," making our government "a public scandal." To see that the legislative power "is in reality, and not merely in name, vested in you," he declares, is "your first duty."

The mayor believes the charter provision for the removal of department heads by impeachment, the mayor bringing his charges before "a full bench of the Court of Common Pleas," to have been designed, "not for the purpose of securing the removal of improper officers, but to render such removal impracticable, if not impossible." He declares that he enters office to find that "every officer through whom the government must be conducted is virtually beyond my control," all, even the chamberlain, being "entitled to hold their respective offices beyond my term, under appointments made by my predecessor." He says "the spectacle of last winter of the heads of some of the departments, with a lobby of retainers, besieging the legislature during the whole session [when the charter of the "Committee of Seventy"—see Ap 30—was under discussion] to keep themselves in office, and to retain their immense emoluments and patronage, should no longer be tolerated."

The mayor sees no good reasons why the commissioner of public works and the president of the park department should be "members of the apportioning board" (see Ap 19, 1871); he declares it was "originally thus arranged to enable certain men who then held these offices [Tweed and Sweeny] the better to carry on the gigantic schemes of public plunder which they were working for their own personal benefit." The substitution of the presidents of the two legislative boards is his recommendation, and he would have the proceedings of this board "subject to the approval of the common council."

No mere revision of the charter, the mayor continues, is "adequate to protect us from the evils which this city has suffered, and still is suffering." Not only are the ordinances of the city "in inextricable confusion," but also special legislation for the city passed at Albany "has been so extensive that one cannot, without considerable labor, ascertain whether a particular ordinance remains in force." He recommends that both laws and ordinances be revised "by some one competent to perform the duty." Jan. 6

The mayor believes also that "our public works must be proceeded with, under a well-devised system of contracts;" we no longer want department heads to have "bands of political retainers," many of whom have obtained employment by methods "humiliating to honest labor." Furthermore, "honest contractors" should no longer be "harassed with a double set of inspectors to accommodate political favorites."

Mayor Havemeyer announces his intention of supporting that "incorruptible officer," Comptroller Green, in his "severe and most unpleasant duty of sifting and examining" claims against the city, so many of which are "tainted with excess and corruption." On the other hand, he flays Chamberlain Palmer, an officer appointed by Mayor Hall, who is firmly intrenched by charter provision in that office until Jan., 1876. The "utter neglect that has characterized the government for the past few years" is illustrated in the case of this officer who is at the same time the "President of the Broadway National Bank" and the city official who designates "the depositaries of the city and county funds." Not only is his own bank favoured by deposits of city funds, varying "from two to seven millions," but also he kept until recently a deposit of $2,100,000 in another bank, of which his nephew was president. When Comptroller Green brought his attention to the fact that the total deposits in that bank on a given day exceeded the amount above stated by only $369,030.26, the chamberlain thought it wise to reduce the city deposit to $250,000. It is our duty, the mayor concludes, "to make an earnest effort that the reforms the people so variously demand, and which we have been elected to secure, are, by our administration of the government, accomplished."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1873), CXXIX: 17–45.

Comptroller Green presents to the mayor a report of the progress on preparing for the press the "ancient records of the City" (see My 20, 1870). He says that Dr. E. B. O'Callaghan was employed to do the work and has rendered bills for his services to June 30, 1872, aggregating $10,000, and that he is "still engaged" in the undertaking. The comptroller is alarmed at the probable "very large claim upon the treasury of the city," and reports that the investigations of an expert into the matter show that "the style in which these fifteen volumes [already prepared for press] are got up is unnecessarily expensive," and if the work were "carried out in the full scope of the resolution, in the style and at the usual price of 'corporation' printing, it would have involved an outlay of more than half a million dollars, and produced 240,000 volumes, enough to fill a room 24 by 24 feet, and 13 feet high, from floor to ceiling." A more economical style might be adopted at half the cost, but the expense would be "at least $200,000."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1873), CXXIX: 123–29. So publication was postponed for nearly a quarter of a century (see O 2, 1895). 23

A so-called "Swan Banquet" is given to 72 guests in the large ball-room at Delmonico's, 14th St. and Fifth Ave., at a cost of $10,000. The diners sat around a great oval table that nearly filled the floor space, in the centre of which a lake had been constructed where there were four superb swans from Prospect Park. This was surrounded by banks of plants and flowers, and "a delicate golden wire network" which extended to the ceiling; while above were "little golden cages, with fine songsters." The choicest wines and viands were served. For description and menu, see McAllister's Society As I Have Found It, 233–36, 457. This banquet was given by Mr. Luckmeyer, a fashionable and wealthy citizen of New York of the period. His daughter married Count Bernstorff, later German ambassador to the United States. 17

25 The common council passes the following resolution: "Whereas, Public exhibitions of electric light have been given, with seemingly successful results, in front of many private buildings in this city; and

"Whereas, The Board or Commission authorized to make and enter into contracts for lighting the streets, avenues, and places in the City of New York, consisting of the Mayor, Comptroller, and Commissioner of Public Works, have power to use, for public purposes, illuminating material other than gas; be it therefore

"Resolved, That the said Board or Commission be . . . requested to have experiments made to test the practicability of lighting Central Park and the other public parks or places, streets, and avenues of this city, with electric light, and with a view also of determining the relative cost of the two systems, viz., gas or electric light; such experiments and exhibitions to be without expense to the city."—Ordinances, etc., XLVII: 17–18. 18 In a report to the senate, Comptroller Andrew H. Green reviews the status of the markets of the city. They are: Washington, West Washington, Fulton, Franklin, Catherine, Clinton, Gouverneur, Centre, Jefferson, Essex, Union, Tompkins, and Eighteenth Ward. He states that ten years ago the market property was valued at $3,500,000. "In the process of time there has grown up about some of the oldest of the public markets an enormous business. The habit of people to go there to buy has given value to what is known as the 'good will' of the stands. And property of private ownership surrounding the markets has increased in value, and has adapted itself in its uses to the business of the markets. The market and its neighbourhood has become a great bazaar more thronged and more densely occupied than any other space in the City. This is especially true of Washington Market, the great centre of business." When Comptroller Green took office, "the market buildings were all in a wretched condition; they were filthy, the sewers and vents were choked and caved in, and things in every respect in the last stages of decay. . . . There was no discipline, no order, no right; every man stood, as it were, constantly on guard to protect his property from official rapacity. . . . The exertions of Mr. Thomas F. Devoe, the Superintendent, a much experienced and esteemed market-man, have been untiring. . . ."—From clipping in Comptroller's Letter Book No. 153, p. 258.

20 The common council votes "to deposit with the New York Historical Society the autograph letter of General Washington [in reply to an address voted him by the corporation—see My 2, 1785], . . . taking from Geo. H. Moore, Esq., librarian of the said society, a receipt therefor."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1873), CXXIX: 584–85. This letter, after having been "abstracted" from the clerk's archives, had been recovered "by invoking the aid of the Courts." The clerk's office was deemed "a very unsafe repository for a paper of such peculiar value."—Ibid., CXXIX: 582–83. See Pl. 50, Vol. V. Cf. My 13, 1789.

21 After a brief existence, "the department of public instruction" (see Ap 18, 1871) is displaced by a board of education, the new board to consist of 21 "commissioners of common schools" appointed by the mayor, one third of that number to retire each year. The board is empowered to appoint five trustees for each of the 22 wards, one to retire each year; the board appoints "principals and vice-principals for the grammar, primary and evening schools" on the nomination of the trustees. "Inspectors of common schools," three in each of the seven school districts, are to be appointed by the mayor. Mar. 21

Provision is also made for a commission "to arrange, simplify and codify the laws relative to common schools."—Laws of N. Y. (1873), chap. 112.

The commission on constitutional amendments (see Je 15, 1872) renders its report to the legislature. "Unfortunately, in the haste which necessarily characterizes most of the work of our Legislature, some of the best of the proposed provisions were defeated. Thus the 'City Article' [imposing restraint upon the power to incur debt and loan credit] from which great good was anticipated, was lost at this stage: the excellent provisions requiring their separate readings, and the printing of all bills before the vote on their final passage, was defeated; . . . the limitation of the time for the introduction of private, special and local bills to sixty days from the commencement of the session . . . was stricken out. The proposed change in the composition of the Senate, providing for four Senators from each of eight large districts, was also defeated." In the succeeding legislature of 1874, a provision that "certain local judicial officers should be appointed instead of elected" was rejected.—The Proposed Amendments of the Constitution of the State of N. Y. Their History, Nature and Advantages (1874), 3. For the amendments that were ratified by the electorate, see N 3, 1874. 25

The legislature passes an act, supplementing those of June 1, 1868 (q. v.), and May 3, 1869 (q. v.), which provides for the appointment of commissioners to supervise the work of the Beach Pneumatic Transit Co., and the method of acquiring real estate, etc., and directs the corporation to complete a certain section within three years and the remainder within five years. It also invests the company with the powers and privileges of, and subject to the duties and liabilities imposed on, railroad corporations by the laws of the state.—Laws of N. Y. (1873), chap. 185. The legislature votes a new charter to the city, "An Act to reorganize the local government of the city of New York." It provides for a common council of one chamber only after Jan. 1, 1875. (This is a reversion, after 42 years of experimentation—see Ag 31, 1868—to the form that had always been used prior to May 10, 1831, q. v.). This single board is to consist of three aldermen elected from each of the five senatorial districts and six others 30

1873 Apr. 30 elected at large, and all 21 are to be elected annually. An arrangement is made to secure a representation for the minority on this board by these provisions: "No voter shall vote for more than two of said aldermen" (in a given district), and "no voter shall vote for more than four of the said aldermen at large."

An official sheet, The City Record, has its origin in this charter.—See Je 24.

Mayor Havemeyer is continued in his office by a provision that "the first election for mayor under this act" shall be in Nov., 1874. Comptroller Green and a few other department heads are continued in office to the end of their terms, but most of the officials are to be nominated by Mayor Havemeyer and subject to confirmation by the board of aldermen. In general all these appointees have terms from four to six years, while the mayor continues to be a two year official. The mayor may be removed from office by the governor, who is also empowered to "suspend the mayor for a period not exceeding thirty days" pending an investigation. All heads of departments "may be removed by the mayor for cause, and after opportunity to be heard, subject, however, before such removal shall take effect, to the approval of the governor, expressed in writing."

The charter increases the importance of the chamberlain, who is now required to give a million dollar bond with sufficient sureties before he enters upon his office; his duties, too, are defined with a great degree of exactness, and his salary is fixed at $30,000, the highest salary paid to any officer.

The bureau of street cleaning is shifted from the health department to the police department, and the police officer in charge is to be called "inspector of street cleaning;" he shall "supervise and enforce the performance of the conditions of any existing contract for such cleaning or for the removal, under any contract now existing or hereafter made by the board of health, of night soil and contents of sinks and privies, and offal and dead animals." The board of health is reduced in number from nine to four, namely, two commissioners of health, the president of the police board, and the health officer of the port.

An additional department for which provision is made in the charter is the department of taxes and assessments, with a president and two commissioners at its head. "It shall require a majority of such commissioners to correct or reduce the assessed valuation of the personal property of any person."

There is a provision that in the department of buildings "the commissioner shall appoint as the chief executive officer of the department a person who shall have been for at least ten years an architect or builder, and who shall be approved by the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. He shall be known as the 'surveyor of buildings.'" The personnel of the board of street openings is changed by the charter to comprise the mayor, comptroller, commissioner of public works, president of the park board, and president of the board of aldermen.

The first commissioners of accounts are created by this charter, two persons appointed by the mayor and removable by him, plus the president of the department of taxes and assessments. It shall be their duty at least once in three months "to examine all vouchers and accounts in the offices of the comptroller and chamberlain, and to make and publish, in the city record, a detailed statement of the financial condition of the city." Also, they shall "from time to time make an examination of the expenses of the several departments and officers, and make such recommendations to the board of apportionment, and other officers, with reference thereto, and particularly with reference to salaries and duties, as they deem advisable" (see Je 14, 1884).

A "board of estimate and apportionment" succeeds the former "board of apportionment" (see Ap 19, 1871), and comprises the mayor, comptroller, president of the board of aldermen, and president of the department of taxes and assessments. "The first meeting of said board in every year shall be called by notice from the mayor, personally served upon the members of said board. Subsequent meetings shall be called as the said board shall direct." To this board heads of departments shall submit in writing departmental estimates for the ensuing year, and, on the basis of these, "provisional estimates" shall be made by Nov. 1, and submitted to the board of aldermen within 10 days thereafter. The aldermen have 15 days to suggest in writing "any objections to or rectifications of said provisional estimate." If the board of estimate and apportionment shall "overrule the objections or suggestions," the reasons therefor must be published in the City Record, where also the "final estimate" is to appear. The comptroller is to certify the "aggregate amount" to the supervisors, who are empowered to raise that amount by tax. The board of estimate and apportionment is also empowered to authorise issues of stocks or bonds, and to make transfers of appropriations "from one bureau or purpose to another in the same department." Apr. 30

Duplicate office holding is checked by a provision that any person who accepts an office under the government of the United States, or of the state, "shall be deemed thereby to have vacated every office held by him under the city government;" neither shall any person hold two city or county offices.

There is another provision that, after a street has been once paved at the expense of "the owners of the adjoining property by assessment," repaving shall not be done at their expense except on their own petition.

Salaries, which the "Tweed Charter" (see Ap 5, 1870) left to be fixed by the common council, are no longer left to such determination, but stated specifically.—Laws of N. Y. (1873), chap. 335. The Times presents editorially a table to show that the total of salaries paid to the mayor ($12,000), comptroller ($10,000), corporation counsel ($15,000), and the heads of departments, under the new charter, is almost 50% less than before, and declares that these salaries are "ample to secure proper incumbents for the several offices, and the interests of economy and improved administration are thus reconciled."—N. Y. Times, Ap 20, 1873.

The Sun discovers that there are "in all twenty-four prominent public officers who are to be appointed by the Mayor with the approval of the Board of Aldermen, and two Commissioners of Accounts whom he appoints absolutely. It is a serious responsibility, but it is certain that Mr. Havemeyer will discharge it without regard to party considerations, and with an honest purpose to select men who will do their whole duty."—N. Y. Sun, Ap 19, 1873.

The Democratic Herald says that the passage of this charter brings to an end a three months' "indecent scramble of the republican factions over the municipal spoils." The belief is expressed that it would have been better "to give the uncontrolled power of appointment and removal to the Mayor, and to hold that officer directly responsible for the honesty and efficiency of every subordinate department." The politicians having declined to do this, "the probability is that in practical operation the new government they have given us will be found to be just as irresponsible as that we have been living under for the past year."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 17, 1873.

Nov. 5 A decided majority is given "in favour of annexation of the lower towns [in Westchester Co.] of King's Bridge, Morrisania, and West Farms to the City of New York" (see My 23). A newspaper editorial reads: "We have increased the area contained within our municipal boundary by about one-half; in other words, the New York of 1874 will have an area of about 21,000 acres instead of 14,000 acres at present. We have added to our population some 30,000 to 40,000 people; we have increased the number of wards by two [23d and 24th] . . . we have acquired an eighth school district, a sixth Police Justice's district, and a tenth judicial district."—N. Y. Times, N 6, 1873. This was the first addition to the city's area since the Montgomerie Charter (see F 11, 1731).

Jan. 4 A large congregation assembles at Steinway Hall "on the occasion of the inaugural services of the Reformed Episcopal Church. There was much interest manifested as to whether the services would vary to any considerable extent from the usual Episcopal ritual, but beyond the adoption of the Prayer-book of 1785 there was no perceptible difference in the manner of devotions."—N. Y. Times, Ja 5, 1874.

20 "The weather-beaten structure at Pier No. 1, which has done duty as Barge Office since 1845, is being torn down and carted off to make room for the new and capacious docks of the North Side (Staten Island) Ferry. . . . The building No. 6 State street is at present occupied as a Barge Office, preparatory to the erection of a new one on the Battery."—N. Y. Times, Ja 20, 1874. See also L. M. R. Feb. 2 "The Training School for Nurses" is incorporated by filing a certificate of incorporation as provided under the law of April 12, 1848 (q. v.). On April 14, 1903, the name was changed by order of court to "The Bellevue Training School for Nurses." On Dec. 31, 1924, this name was changed by the board of trustees to "The Schools for Nursing of Bellevue and Allied Hospitals," embracing the school of nursing at Harlem Hospital and the contemplated schools at Fordham and Gouverneur Hospitals.—Rep. of the Schools of Nursing of Bellevue and Allied Hospitals (1925), 6, 10, 11. Cf. Je 12, 1875.

7 "The Bowery Theatre [see N 23, 1866] was sold yesterday at private sale by Leopold Bernheimer to Wm. Kraemer, the proprietor of the Atlantic Garden, for $160,000. The theatre has a front of 75 feet and 87 feet on Elizabeth street. The building is to be henceforward used for German drama."—N. Y. Times, F 7, 1874.

Mar. 24 A meeting is held at Cooper Institute "to give expression to opinion on the questions affecting the national finances. . . . The tone of the meeting was decidedly opposed to any further inflation of the currency, and in favour of the gradual, if not speedy, redemption of the legal-tender notes." The speakers include Wm. Cullen Bryant, Elliot C. Cowdin, A. A. Low, Wm. Wood, and others.—N. Y. Times, Mr 25, 1874.

25 The labour-unions hold a meeting at Cooper Institute to denounce "Supervising Architect Mullett [of the P. O.], and his recommendation to Congress calling for the repeal of the Eight-hour law."—N. Y. Times, Mr 26, 1874.

Apr. 3 The common council resolves that "the new avenue west of Mt. Morris Square, extending from 120th to 124th Street, shall be hereafter known and designated as Fifth Avenue, and numbered continuously as a portion of said Fifth Avenue."—Proc., App'd by Mayor, XLII: 87. See, however, My 7, 1878.

14 Stewart's Park Theatre, on the s. e. cor. of Broadway and 22d St. (see L. M. R. K., III: 982, under "Abbey's Park Theatre"), the construction of which was begun in 1873 by Dion Boucicault, is opened.—N. Y. Times, Ap 15, 1874; King's Handbook, 582. See My 15, 1882.

22 The commissioners of the sinking fund are directed to lease to the 7th Regiment the plot bounded by 66th and 67th Sts., Fourth and Lexington Aves., for the erection of an armory.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 234. The corner-stone of the armory was laid here on Oct. 13, 1877 (q. v.).

27 "Again 'the old order of things changeth, giving place unto the new,' and this time the old Beekman House [erected in 1763—L. M. R. K., III: 948] goes out of existence. The encroachments of modern progress have decreed its destruction, and people have failed to realize the propriety of a country seat at Fifty-first street, even when so far east as first avenue. . . . Of late it has stood alone on a rock some twenty feet from the sidewalk, the cutting through Mount Pleasant for the purpose of grading Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets producing this condition of isolation. . . . There is now no Beekman country seat; it is among the things of the past. The destroyer commenced the work of its demolition on Monday last [April 20], and the relics of its existence are shapeless and unrecognizable. . . . The Beekman House contained two famous apartments—one of them that in which Nathan Hale passed his last night, and the other that in which Major André slept before going to meet Arnold. But its vicissitudes are now over; its career is ended."—N Y. Times, Ap 27, 1874. James W. Beekman presented the drawing-room mantel and the Dutch tiles to the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—Mag. Am. Hist., I: 659. See also Greatorex, Old N. Y., 106–10, and L. M. R. K., III: 948.

Apr. 27 Barnum's "Great Roman Hippodrome," at 27th St. and Madison and Fourth Aves., is opened.—N. Y. Times, Ap 28, 1874.

" 30 The legislature passes an act "to consolidate the government of the city and county of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 304.

May 5 At a meeting of the N. Y. Hist. Soc., James W. Beekman reads a paper "written by the late Mr. Brodhead, entitled an 'Unpublished Chapter of the History of New York.' . . . The paper . . . treated of that particular period in the history of New York beginning in the year 1698, when Lord Belamont, an Irish nobleman arrived in this City as Governor, representing the British Government. The historical incidents connected with his administration possess little interest for the general reader, though they are regarded by the society as of considerable importance. The most attractive features of the paper were its humorous descriptions of the hamlet then known as the City of New York, and the manner of living of its inhabitants."—N. Y. Times, My 6, 1874. See, however, De Peyster's Life of Bellomont.

9 The legislature authorises certain people "to lay down, construct and maintain tubes of iron, wood or other material underground and beneath the bed of navigable waters in and between the city of New York and the villages, towns and cities in the neighborhood thereof . . . and to convey letters, parcels, packages, mails, messages, merchandise and property in and through said tubes, for compensation, by means of the pneumatic method of propulsion."—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 400.

11 The legislature passes a compulsory education law.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 421.

19 For the accommodation of the public, the Eighth Ave. R. R. Co. is directed to extend its tracks from its present terminus to Macomb's Road and thence to Macomb's Dam Bridge. This will provide a continuous road from Vesey St. and Broadway and from Canal St. and Broadway to the Harlem River.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 478.

20 The name of the Beach Pneumatic Transit Co. (see Je 1, 1868) is changed to the Broadway Underground Ry. Co., and the company is directed to construct within 3 years, as the first section of its road, that portion of its line from the Battery or Bowling Green to a connection with the N. Y. and Harlem R. R. at or above 42d St.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 503. This company in time was absorbed by the Arcade Railway Co. (see Je 11, 1881), but its extension was never carried out; and, while the subject of an underground road or subway was agitated from year to year, no other one was constructed until ground was broken for the present one in 1900 (q. v., Ja 16 and Mr 24).—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., III: 524.

" James Rogers and others are authorised to construct a street railway with a double track from Vesey St. through Church St. to Morris St., thence to Greenwich St., through Greenwich to Battery Place, and along Battery Place to State St.; also along State St. with a single track to Whitehall and thence to South Ferry, returning along Whitehall to Bowling Green and along Bowling Green to the double track at Battery Place.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 508.

21 In order to give representation in the board of aldermen to that portion of Westchester County (the new 23d and 24th Wards) recently annexed to the city (see N 5, 1873), the legislature amends the charter, increasing the number of aldermen from 21 to 22. The new member may reside either in the 8th senate district or in one of the new wards.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 515.

30 Henri Rochefort, "the exiled editor of 'La Lanterne,'" arrives at New York and takes up his residence at the Grand Central Hotel.—N. Y Times, My 31, 1874. On June 5, he made an address at the Academy of Music.—Ibid., Je 6, 1874.

June 2 The corner-stone of the south wing of the American Museum of Natural History (see Ap 6, 1869) is laid by Pres. Grant.—N. Y. Times, Je 3, 1874. This was the first section of the present building on Central Park, W., 77th to 81st Sts.—Growth of the Bldg. of the Am. Mu. of Nat. Hist. (1912); L. M. R. K., III: 956. It was opened on Dec. 22, 1877 (q. v.). See also My 15, 1875.

5 An act is passed authorising New York and Brooklyn to assume control of the Brooklyn Bridge, paying back to the original subscribers the amount of their subscriptions, with interest. If the cities agree to undertake the work and the owners of two-thirds of the 1874 June 5 private stock consent to sell their shares, the bridge is to be put under the management of a board of trustees, ten from each city, including the mayor and comptroller. The funds are to be raised two-thirds by Brooklyn and one-third by New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1874), chap. 601; Green, Complete Hist. of the N. Y. and Brooklyn Bridge, 12. See My 14, 1875.

July — In this month, J. B. Holmes, city surveyor, made a Map of the Common Lands from 42nd to 59th Streets, Third & Sixth Ave's showing the old streets and plots as surveyed and mapped in 1796 [q. v., Mr 1*] by Cassimer T. H. Goerck, City Surveyor and resurveyed by Isaac T. Ludlam in 1822 [q.v.], and the Distance between these old streets and our present streets.*—See map in register's office, N. Y. County.

8 The board of aldermen in special session passes resolutions requesting Gov. Dix "to suspend and remove" Mayor Havemeyer because of the latter's failure "to investigate the complaints" raised against two of the police commissioners, also because of his "defying the spirit, if not the letter, of the law, by their reappointment," after court action against them.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1874), CXXXV: 4–8. The Tammany organization, the "Council of Political Reform," and some members of the "Committee of Seventy" interview the governor to the same end.—N. Y. Times, Jl 9, 1874. For the governor's action, see S 14.

24 The "Eighteenth Ward Market," which was built under the auspices of the "Tammany Ring" but never used, has been turned into a dog pound.—N. Y. Times, Jl 24, 1874.

Sept. 14 Gov. Dix declines to remove Mayor Havemeyer, an action he was urged to take, on July 8 (q. v.). He does not absolve the mayor from the charges against him, but declares "his errors, grave as they are, belong to the class which are left to popular reproof more properly than to executive correction." He commends the mayor for acting "earnestly on the side of economy, and in furtherance of the reform of those abuses under a former administration of the municipal affairs of the City, the exposure of which led to his election to office."—N. Y. Times, S 15, 1874.

" Mayor Havemeyer gives to the press a long letter to "Honest" John Kelly, Tweed's successor as "Boss" of Tammany Hall. He tells how, at the beginning of his term, he was misled by the "Boss" into appointing Richard Croker as a marshal. Later, certain election inspectors whom Kelly claimed a right to appoint were found to be "of notoriously bad character," so that the police board considered it a duty to remove them. The mayor then recites the tricky method by which the "Boss" secured the removal of the two police commissioners. In the rest of the letter the results of researches into Kelly's conduct of the office of sheriff are given to show that "you have defrauded the public treasury, defamed the character of the city, libelled our citizens of your own race, and sunk yourself to the lowest depths of disgrace. . . . I think that you were worse than Tweed, except that he was a larger operator. The public knew that Tweed was a bold reckless man, making no pretensions to purity. You, on the contrary, were always avowing your honesty, and wrapped yourself in the mantle of piety."—N. Y. Sun, S 18, 1874. For Kelly's reply, see O 1.

30 The legislature orders the Kingsbridge Road opened north and east from 155th St. to the Harlem River.—Laws N. Y. (1874), chap. 655. See also the map of the road, dated Nov. 4, 1874, filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 3083.

Oct. 1 "A new local party, to be known as the 'People's Party,'" is founded at the Fifth Avenue Hotel "by some of the property-holders and tax-payers of this City who are not willing to swallow everything that Tammany Hall may feel disposed to thrust before them."—N. Y. Times, O 2, 1874.

" "Honest John Kelly" replies to Mayor Havemeyer's letter of Sept. 14, defending himself against the mayor's charges. He declares his intention to commence a libel suit to establish "beyond cavil or doubt that . . . it is you, and not I, who by publishing a series of infamous libels upon an innocent man, have 'closed your career finally in dishonor.'"—N. Y. Sun, O 1, 1874. See N 30.

Nov. 3 In a three-cornered municipal election that is overshadowed by the gubernatorial contest, Wm. H. Wickham, the Tammany candidate, is successful against S. H. Wales, Republican nominee, and Oswald Ottendorfer, candidate of the anti-Tammany Democrats. —N. Y. Sun, N 4, 1874.

" A number of amendments to the state constitution, proposed by the constitutional commission (see Mr 25, 1873) and passed by two successive legislatures, are approved by the electorate. Some of these are: A provision to prevent bribery at elections, and another to prevent official corruption; provisions increasing the salary of members of the legislature to $1,500, increasing the term of senators to four years, and making city officials ineligible for seats in the legislature; provisions to extend the governor's term from two to three years, and to fix his salary at $10,000 plus the use of "a suitable and furnished executive residence."—Leg. Manual (1875), 481–99; Lincoln, Const. Hist. of N. Y., II: 473–573; N. Y. Times, N 10, 1874. Nov. 3

Mayor Havemeyer dies suddenly in his office in city hall. The libel suit brought by John Kelly against the mayor (see O 1) had just been started in "Supreme Court Chambers." Judge Westbrook adjourns the court after the plaintiff's counsel's statement that "the solemnity of the occasion is such as must disarm all hostility. . . . We have no desire to utter other than words of kindness, such as would be suitable on so important an occasion." —N. Y. Sun, D 1, 1874. 30

"The Two Orphans" is produced for the first time in New York, at the Union Square Theatre with Kate Claxton as Louise and Kitty Blanchard as Henriette.—Brown, III: 152–53. Dec. 21

"A circular addressed to the people of the United States has been issued commending to their notice the coming centennial celebration. The document enumerates the advantages to the country which will accrue from the Exposition, and urges the necessity for conducting the enterprise upon a scale befitting a great nation. The paper invokes the people of this City to awaken to the sense of the responsibility entailed upon it."—N. Y. Times, D 22, 1874. 22

King Kalakaua of the Sandwich Islands arrives at New York from Washington. He is formally received and conducted to the Windsor Hotel at 46th St.—N. Y. Times, D 24, 1874. During his stay here, which lasted until Dec. 31, the king took a sleighride in Central Park, attended services at St. Thomas's P. E. Church and at St. Stephen's R. C. Church, and was photographed at Gurney's gallery.—Ibid., D 25–31, 1874. 23

Prominent New York bachelors, including Charles Post, Wm. Douglas, Isaac Bell, Wm. Jay, Wm. Duer, and Peter Marié, hold an elaborate masquerade ball at Delmonico's. This is sometimes called "the Bouncers' Ball" because many men and women "heretofore not considered among the socially elect" were invited.—Van Rensselaer, The Social Ladder, 51–58, 163–64. 26

Feb. 18 A Survey of Harlem River, from Randall's Island, by way of Spuyten Duyvil Creek, to Hudson River, New York, in compliance with the provisions of an act of congress, of June 23, 1874 (q. v.), is completed under the direction of the secretary of war. In the report submitted to congress a history of the unsuccessful at-

1875 Feb. 18 temps to make the Harlem navigable (as it used to be) is given. It is pointed out that the river is now crossed by six bridges, the Harlem Bridge, the N. Y. & Harlem R. R. Bridge, Central Bridge, High Bridge, Fordham Bridge and King's Bridge; any obstruction to navigation by the two last named does not need to be considered, if the proposed canal is cut "through a small portion of the northern end of New York Island," at a point south of those bridges, thus avoiding "the very shallow, obstructed, and crooked" Spuyten Duyvil Creek. It is assumed that High Bridge, although it "encroaches with its piers unnecessarily upon the water-way" and "has contracted the width of the river" by its approaches, cannot be interfered with because it "carries the whole supply of water for the city." It is estimated that the excavation of a channel 350 ft. wide and 15 ft. deep, including the construction of the canal, will cost $2,777,571.44; if the depth be decreased three ft., it will decrease the cost about $500,000.—Exec. Docs., 43d cong., 2d sess., No. 75, Part 9. See Ja 1, 1883.

Apr. 19 The New York Woman Suffrage Society celebrates the centennial of the battle of Lexington by "an interesting entertainment made up of addresses and recitations by prominent adherents to the cause of woman suffrage, at the Union League Theatre."—N. Y. Times, Ap 20, 1875.

25 A large part of the Union League Club building in Madison Square is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ap 26, 1875.

28 The Racquet Court Club is organized. Its club rooms at 55 W. 26th St. were opened on May 27, 1876.—Club Book, Racquet & Tennis Club (1891); L. M. R. K., III: 938. See F 21, 1890.

May 9 The new Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church (see Je 9, 1873), of which Rev. Dr. Hall is pastor, is dedicated. The church is at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 55th St.—N. Y. Times, My 10, 1875; L. M. R. K., III: 931. It is described in King's Handbook (1893), 366–67.

14 An act of the legislature dissolves the N. Y. Bridge Co. (see Ap 16, 1867) and provides that the bridge across East River, which this company has been erecting, shall become a public work of the cities of New York and Brooklyn.—Laws of N. Y. (1875), chap. 300. See Je 5, 1874, and My 24, 1883.

15 The legislature authorises the raising of a sum not exceeding $200,000, by the creation of public stock, for equipping "the building now erected upon that portion of the Central park . . . formerly known as Manhattan square . . ., in a suitable manner, for the purposes of a museum of natural history."—Laws of N. Y. (1875), chap. 351. See Je 2, 1874.

17 The N. Y. Academy of Medicine (see 1860) holds its first meeting in a building of its own, at 12 W. 31st St., formerly a brownstone residence.—N. Y. Med. Jour., Jl 22, 1911. The corner-stone of its present building, at 17 W. 43d St., was laid on Oct. 2, 1889 (q. v.).

22 A great public demonstration is staged at Steinway Hall to awaken "popular sentiment in behalf of the national Centennial celebration." Music and speeches make up the entertainment.—N. Y. Times, My 23, 1875.

June 2 The new Masonic Temple (see Je 8, 1870) is dedicated with imposing ceremonies.—N. Y. Times, Je 3, 1875; L. M. R. K., III: 954.

5 All of the proposed street, Ave. B, between 68th and 79th Sts., and of the proposed Ave. A between 100th and 106th Sts., as laid out on the city's plan of 1807, are stricken from the official city plan by the legislature.—Laws N. Y. (1875), chap. 494.

8 The St. Nicholas Club is incorporated, eligibility to membership being confined to descendants of residents of the city or state of New York prior to 1785. One of the principal objects of the club is the collection and preservation of information concerning the early history of the city and state.—Club Book (1877). In 1893, its club-house was at 386 Fifth Ave.—King's Handbook, 546, 547; L. M. R. K., III: 938. See 1904.

12 The commissioners of charities and corrections announce their intention of opening, on Aug. 1, at "Charity Hospital" (on Blackwell's Island) a training school for nurses.—City Record, Je 14, 1875. The initial plans and operation of the school are described in the 16th Ann. Rep. (for 1875), Com'rs of Pub. Charities and Corrections (pub., 1876), 25 et seq. Cf. F 2, 1874.

17 The centennial anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill is celebrated at the Academy of Music.—N. Y. Times, Je 18, 1875.

" The N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co., which acquired the franchises of the West Side and Yonkers Railway Co. and the elevated road in Greenwich St. in 1871 (q. v., D 6), is ordered to complete the road within five years. Its route may not cover other streets than Greenwich St. to Ninth Ave., along Ninth Ave., or streets west of it, to the Harlem River.—Laws of N. Y. (1875), chap. 595. See S 3. June 17

" The Clearing House Association (see O 11, 1853) takes possession of the building on the corner of Pine and Nassau Sts. formerly occupied, respectively, by the Bank of the Commonwealth and the Tenth National Bank. The building has been entirely remodelled.—N. Y. Clearing House: Laying of Corner-stone and Opening Ceremonies of the New Building in Cedar St. (N. Y., 1896). See also Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 659–62. The corner-stone of its own building was laid on Oct. 2, 1894 (q. v.).

18 The "Rapid Transit Act of 1875" is enacted, "further to provide for the construction and operation of a steam railway or railways in the counties of the State." It provides for the appointment of a commission in any county in which application has been made by "fifty reputable householders and tax-payers," which commission is empowered to decide whether or no the locality needs rapid transit, to "determine the route or routes," and, if found expedient, to organize a company to build the lines. In New York City, Broadway and Fifth Ave., below 59th St., and Fourth Ave., above 42d St., are excepted from the operation of this act.—Laws of N. Y. (1875), chap. 606; Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., Rapid Transit in N. Y. C. and in Other Great Cities, 51. See S 3.

July 7 The demolition of the old North Dutch Church in Fulton St. is completed. During the last stages of the work on this day, the tower, 60 ft. high and 24 ft. square, fell, through some miscalculation, upon an adjoining building.—N. Y. Times, Jl 8 and 9, 1875; Harper's Weekly, XIX: 457; L. M. R. K., III: 939. There is a view of the ruins at the time of demolition in N. Y. P. L.—a drawing made from Fulton St., dated June, 1875. 28 The Middle Dutch Church is abandoned as a post-office. All business is transferred to the new building at Park Row, Broadway, and Mail St. (see Ag 25), though the latter edifice is not entirely finished.—N. Y. Times, Ag 28, 29 and 30, 1875. See also L. M. R. K., III: 935, 974, and descrip. of Pl. 28, I: 262. "For a few months after the post-office department was removed the interior of the old church was utilized as an auction mart, and a dozen large stores were temporarily fitted up and found eager occupants. Then came the announcement that in accordance with the act of congress the premises would be sold at public auction."—Mag. Am. Hist., XXII: 196. See also Eve. Post, O 17, 1882, and descrip. of Pl. 130-a, III: 696. The old church was sold in 1882 (q. v., O 18).

Sept. — Work on the city hall post-office (see Ag 25 and 28) is abandoned. It was resumed in Aug. 1876, at which time the stairs, elevators, and attic were being completed.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1876), 7. The building was finished in 1878 (q. v., O 1).

3 The rapid transit commission reports that better means of rapid transit are needed by the city, that elevated steam railways are best suited to the needs of the situation, and that Second, Third, Sixth, and Ninth Aves. should be chosen to be the routes of these roads. The privilege of building them is given to the two companies already in existence and authorised to build elevated railroads in the city,—the Gilbert Elevated R. R. (see Je 17, 1872) and the N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co. (see O 27, 1871).

To the Gilbert Co. it gave what we now know (in part) as the Sixth Ave. and Second Ave. routes. It began at Kingsbridge on the 1875 Sept. 3 Harlem River, thence by River St., Eighth Ave., 110th St., Ninth Ave., 53d St., Sixth Ave., Amity St., South Fifth Ave., West Broadway, College Place, Murray St., Church St., and New Church St. to Morris St., and thence through private property and Bowling Green to Beaver St., thence by Beaver and Pearl Sts., the New Bowery, Division St., Allen St., First Ave., 23d St., Second Ave., and River St. to the first-named line at the corner of River St. and Eighth Ave.; also a connecting line along Chambers St. and Chatham St. and a branch on Sixth Ave. from 53d to 59th Sts. The commission also remedied the vital defect in the Gilbert Co.'s charter by which it was committed to an impracticable mode of construction.

To the N. Y. Elevated Co. it confirmed the Ninth Ave. route, which the company had acquired by purchase from the West Side and Yonkers Railway Co., and also conferred upon it the route from Battery Place to South Ferry, and from South Ferry by way of Pearl St., the Bowery, and Third Ave., to the Harlem River, with branches to all the railroad depots and ferries.

The work of constructing the roads was soon afterwards begun, but it was much hampered by the opposition of property owners and surface railroad companies.—Rep. of the N. Y. C. Comrs. of Rapid Transit, S 3, 1875; Rep. of the Special Com. on R. R., Appointed . . . to Investigate Alleged Abuses in the Management of R. R. (Albany, 1880); Statutes and Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882). See 1876, and Mr 13, 1876.

Oct. 18 The Eagle Theatre at Sixth Ave. and 33d St. is opened.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, III: 235 et seq. See F 20, 1878.

24 The evangelistic work of Moody and Sankey in the U. S. is begun, in Brooklyn at the skating rink on Clarmont Ave. The meetings closed on Nov. 19, after which the evangelists visited Philadelphia. The first meeting in New York was held on Feb. 7, 1876 (q. v.).—Chapman, Life and Work of D. L. Moody, 158–63.

Nov. — In this month, Chickering Hall, on the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 18th St., was opened.—Brown, II: 591–92; L. M. R. K., III: 983. G. B. Post and F. C. Murray were the architects. —Rep., Dept. of Bldgs., in City Record, III: 679, 1105, 1629; IV: 107. It was altered for business purposes in 1893, and demolished in 1902.—L. M. R. K., III: 983.

10 The Manhattan Railway Co. is organized, with a capital stock of $2,000,000. With the consent of the rapid transit commission, it adopted substantially the routes occupied by the N. Y. Elevated and the Gilbert Elevated Cos., its object being to meet the public necessities in case either, or both, of these failed to complete its system.—"The Story of the Manhattan Railway," by Russell Sage, in Railroad Men, XVI, No. 4; Statutes and Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882). In 1879 (q. v., S 30), the Manhattan Co. leased the lines of the other two elevated companies.

Nov. 10

Vice-Pres. Henry Wilson dies at Washington of apoplexy.—N. Y. Times, N 23 and 24, 1875. On Nov. 26, the funeral cortege left Washington for Baltimore, and, after making stops there and at Philadelphia, arrived at the Cortlandt St. ferry landing on the afternoon of Nov. 27. While church bells tolled, the hearse was escorted, by civil authorities and military organizations, to the Grand Central Depot, where the body was placed on a train bound for Boston. The line of march was crowded with people, and buildings were decorated with mourning and with flags at half mast. The vice-president was buried in Dell Park Cemetery (Natick, Mass.) on Dec. 1.—Ibid., N 25–D 2, 1875. See also illus. and account in Harper's Weekly, XIX: 1020.

22

Wm. B. Astor dies at his residence, No. 372 Fifth Ave. He was buried on Nov. 27 in the family vault in Trinity Cemetery, after funeral services at Trinity Chapel, No. 15. W. 25th St.—N. Y. Times, N 25, 27, and 28, 1875.

24

Wm. M. Tweed escapes from Ludlow St. jail.—N. Y. Tribune, D 6, 1875. In 1876, he was arrested at Vigo, Spain, and returned to New York.—Ibid., S 9, 1876; Harper's Weekly, XX: 821. He died in this jail on April 12, 1878 (q. v.).

Dec. 4

The board of aldermen adopts the following resolutions:

27

"Resolved, That in commemoration of the important event in the history of our country, and as an appropriate inauguration of the centennial year, the Commissioner of Public Works cause the national standard to be displayed from sunrise to sunset on every public building in this City on Jan. 1, 1876; that the owners and occupants of private buildings, the proprietors of hotels, places of amusement and other public places controlled by individuals, and also the masters of vessels in the harbor, be and they are hereby requested to display their flags on that day; and be it further

"Resolved, In order, if possible, that this commemoration may be general in every portion of this extended country from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande, it is hereby respectfully suggested and most earnestly recommended that the newspaper press of this City cause this recommendation to be published in or telegraphed to all parts of the country, in the hope that our patriotic people may enter into the spirit of the occasion, and thereby, while honoring our national emblem, inaugurate, in the most appropriate manner, the centennial year of the Declaration of American Independence."—N. Y. Times, D 28, 1875.

CHAPTER VIII

THE MODERN CITY AND ISLAND

1876–1909

CHAPTER VIII

THE MODERN CITY AND ISLAND

1876–1909

1876 — A BRIEF summary of the principal events in the history of the modern city and island from 1876 to the Hudson-Fulton celebration of 1909 is in Chap. VIII, Vol. III, pp. 783–831.

— In this year, N. A. Otto, a German, invented the four-cycle internal-combustion engine, the type later universally used in gasoline-driven automobiles.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 479.

— In this year, the first bicycle proper was brought to this country and exhibited at the Centennial Exposition.—Sullivan, Our Times, (1926), I: 241. Shortly after this date, the author saw this or a similar machine in use on the ice on Central Park lake.

— "New York or Manhattan Island is divided into 141, 486 building lots, by survey, of which about one-half are appropriated. From Battery Point at the southern extremity, the City proper is regularly covered with streets and buildings for a distance of 5 miles, and also, but irregularly, 4 miles further to Harlem on the East side. On the West side again, it forms a concrete mass of stone and brick to about Sixtieth street, thence less compactly to above Bloomingdale, where it opens into the suburban districts of Manhattanville and Washington Heights. . . .

"The City contains 470 churches. . . .

"The New York Markets, 12 in number, are most of them well provisioned with abundance of meats, poultry, fish, and vegetables. . . .

"There are now in the City of New York (1876), 75 National and State Banks; 38 Savings Banks; 86 State Fire Insurance Companies, besides numerous Agencies; 10 Marine Insurance Companies, 20 State Life Insurance Companies, besides Agencies; 4 Safe Deposit Companies, a Stock Exchange Company, and a Bank Clearing House. . . ."—Disturnell, N. Y. As It Was and As It Is (1876), 53–54, 59, 61, 63–64.

— By this year, the development of Central Park, in its principal features, was completed.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 478.

— Early in this year, the N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co. extended its West Side (Ninth Ave.) line to 59th St.—Rep. of Special Com. on R. R., Appointed . . . to Investigate Alleged Abuses in the Management of R. R. (Albany, 1880); Statutes and Docs. Affecting the Elevated Railways in the City of N. Y. (1866–1882). See Ap 5, 1877.

— In this year, Delmonico's was erected on the south side of 26th St. between Broadway and Fifth Ave., and the restaurant moved here from Fifth Ave. and 14th St. (see 1861). It later became the Café Martin, and in 1914 it was demolished.—Vanity Fair, Je, 1916; L. M. R. K., III: 978. The building is shown in King's Handbook, 238. For a description of the interior, see D 4, 1879.

— The Medical College of N. Y. University (see 1869) builds on 26th St., east of First Ave. This college existed as a proprietary school until 1897, when the university took over the property.—N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911; City Record, III: 679, 1105, 1629; IV: 107.

— In this year, the Buckingham Hotel was opened at the s. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 50th St., opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral.—King's Handbook (1893), 226. It was demolished in 1925 to make way for the store of Saks & Co.

— In this year, M. Dripps published a map of the city on 19 folio sheets.—Descrip. of Pl. 138, III: 707.

— In this year was published, by H. H. Lloyd & Co., a map entitled: The surroundings of New York city, embracing the territory occupied by the homes of New York business men, size, 35 x 27 in.

— From 1876 to 1885 were published by J. B. Beers & Co., in five folio volumes, maps of the Twelfth, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fourth Wards, called New York city from official records and surveys.

Ja 6 A centennial note, issued on Jan. 6, 1776, to help pay for the Colles' water works, is redeemed by the city and is ordered to be preserved "in a costly antique frame."—N. Y. Times, Ja 7, 1876. Jan. 6

Trinity corporation has made plans to build, in the spring, "an East side chapel and school-house on the site of the old Quaker burying ground on Houston street, near the Bowery." The building was consecrated in 1877, as the Chapel of St. Augustine.—N. Y. Times, Ja 16, 1876; N 30, 1877. 16

Closing services are held in the old Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, s. e. cor. of 19th St. The structure has been presented to the Central Presbyterian Church and is to be removed to 57th St., near Broadway; the land on Fifth Ave. has been bought by Arnold, Constable & Co.—N. Y. Times, F 1, 1876. See also L. M. R. K., III: 931. See, further, My 27, 1876, and O 12, 1878. 31

Moody and Sanky hold their first meeting in New York, at Gilmore's Concert Garden (formerly Barnum's Hippodrome), and more than 10,000 people are present. The meetings lasted until April 19 and were enthusiastically attended.—Chapman Life and Work of D. L. Moody, 163–65. They continued their evangelistic work throughout the U. S. and in Great Britain until Mr. Moody's death in 1899.—Ibid. See also Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 265–67. Feb. 7

The legislature passes an act "to prevent injury to animals in the city of New York," making it a misdemeanor to throw in the streets nails, glass, or other substances which might "maim, lame, cut or otherwise injure any animal," or to put salt, saltpeter, etc., for melting snow or ice, anywhere except on curves, crossings, or switches of railroad tracks.—Laws of N. Y. (1876), chap. 16. 8

A fire which broke out at No. 444 Broadway consumes 30 buildings; loss $3,000,000.—N. Y. Herald, F 9, 1876; N. Y. Times, F 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1876. See also Harper's Weekly, XX: 165. "

The N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co. is granted a revocable right of way through Battery Park.—Min. & Doc., Bd. Com. Dept. Pub. Parks (1879–1880), 247. See Ap 5, 1877; Je 9, 1880; and Je 30, 1891. 10

The Society of the Sons of the Revolution has its inception at a meeting held at the N. Y. Hist. Soc. John Austin Stevens was the leader.—Drowne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 19; "Hist. of the Soc. Sons of the Rev.," in Whittemore's Heroes of the Am. Rev. (1897). See D 4, 1883, and My 3, 1884. 22

The board of aldermen appoints a committee to report how the common council "shall proceed to evince its deep interest in the forthcoming celebration of the Centennial as well as how a friendly cartel can be established between New-York and Philadelphia" to aid the exhibition.—N. Y. Times, Mr 10, 1876. Mar. 9

Words are first transmitted by electric telephone, at Boston, between Alexander G. Bell and his assistant, Thos. A. Watson.—Casson, Hist. of the Telephone, 32–33; N. Y. Times, Mr 7, 1926. 10

A contract is made between the Gilbert Elevated R. R. Co. and the Loan and Improvement Co. by which the latter agrees to construct and equip the road covered by the charter of the former company in conformity with the requirements of the Rapid Transit Commission. Work was immediately begun on the road, but was interrupted by legal proceedings, which culminated in an injunction and a stoppage of all construction work until Sept., 1877 (q. v.).—Rep. of the Special Com. on R. R., Appointed . . . to Investigate Alleged Abuses in the Management of R. R. (Albany, 1880). 13

The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land at the junction of St. Nicholas Ave. and 123d St. This became Hancock Square.—Prendergast, op. cit., 51; L. M. R. K., III: 970. See 1898. 16

On this day and on May 27, 1891, the city acquired by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by East End Ave. to East River, 84th to 90th Sts. This became Carl Schurz Park.—Prendergast, op. cit., 51; L. M. R. K., III; 969. Apr. 1

1876 Apr. 2 " 10 The New York Club building at Nos. 1 and 3 W. 25th St., at the junction of Fifth Ave. and Broadway (see 1874), is partially destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ap 3, 1876.

Closing services are held in the Greene Street M. E. Church. The congregation has purchased the Dutch Reformed Church in Washington Square, which will hereafter be known as the Asbury M. E. Church.—N. Y. Times, Ap 3, 1876. The latter church was dedicated on June 4.—Ibid., Je 5, 1876.

Alexander T. Stewart dies at his residence, n. w. cor. of 34th St. and Fifth Ave. The flags on the city hall and other public buildings are placed at half mast in his honour.—N. Y. Times, Ap 11–14, 1876. See N 7, 1878.

After the death of Mr. Stewart, his business, which was founded in 1823 (q.v., S 2), came into the possession of a surviving partner, Wm. J. Libbey, and Judge Henry Hilton, who had been Mr. Stewart's attorney. They continued the organization as A. T. Stewart & Co. However, there was a quarrel between Judge Hilton and Mr. Libbey, and the firm was dissolved and reorganized in 1876 under the name of E. J. Denning & Co., Mr. Denning having been Mr. Stewart's chief manager. After Mr. Denning's death in 1892, the firm assumed the title Hilton, Hughes & Co., and as such failed in 1896. In that year (q.v., S 29), John Wanamaker acquired it by purchase.—From a letter to the author from the office of John Wanamaker, dated Aug. 19, 1925.

22 The legislature grants permission to the U. S. to improve "the Harlem river, and Spuyten Duyvil creek, from the North river to the East river through the Harlem kills," and cedes its jurisdiction over the land required for the improvement.—Laws of N. Y. (1876), chap. 147.

May 10 The Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia is opened with impressive ceremony, Pres. Grant delivering the principal address. About 230,000 people are present, including representatives from almost every country in the world. In New York, the opening was celebrated by a display of flags and bunting on public buildings, stores, private residences, and the shipping in the harbour.—N. Y. Times, My 9–13, 1876. For the preparations in New York, see ibid., F 26 and Ap 20, 1876. The exhibition was formally closed by Grant on Nov. 10.—Ibid., N 9–11, 1876. The Centennial Exhibition, the first of a long line of international expositions held in this country, was an important mile-stone in our country's development. It marks the beginning of the end of provincialism and of the "Victorian age." Affording as it did an opportunity to vast numbers of people to see for the first time foreign manufactures and foreign arts, and to establish new contacts, it broadened knowledge and set new standards of taste, which were far reaching in their results.

The Centennial may fairly be taken as marking in New York City, as in many other parts of the country, an awakening to modern consciousness, which received a further and even greater impetus from the Chicago World's Fair in 1893.

27 The corner-stone of the Central Presbyterian Church is laid in 57th St. near Seventh Ave. with impressive ceremonies. This stone "was the corner-stone of the Nineteenth Street Presbyterian Church [see Ja 31], and is marked on different sides with the successive dates of its first laying (A.D. 1852) and relaying (A.D. 1876)."—N. Y. Times, My 28, 1876; L. M. R. K., III: 930, 931. See O 12, 1878.

June 2 The legislature authorises the city comptroller to pay "for improving the avenue known as Riverside avenue" and declares the "whole of the land embraced within the boundaries of Riverside avenue . . . to be one of the parks and public places in the city."—Laws of N. Y. (1876), chap. 447.

18 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land at the junction of St. Nicholas Ave. and 116th St. This was later developed as Kilpatrick Square.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 970.

25 The R. C. Church of the Sacred Heart, at 51st St. and Tenth Ave., is dedicated. The building was formerly used as a Baptist church.—N. Y. Times, Je 26, 1876.

July 3 The celebration of the 100th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence is begun in New York, on the evening of this day, with a military parade and fireworks. An immense crowd gathered in Union Square, which the 71st Regiment had difficulty in keeping back from the line of march.—N. Y. Times, Jl 4, 1876.

4 The celebration of the centennial anniversary of the Declaration of Independence is continued with impressive ceremonies at the Academy of Music, which includes music by the German Sängerverbund, an original ode by Wm. Cullen Bryant, and an address by Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs. The Cincinnati and other societies held individual celebrations, and in the evening there were fireworks in City Hall Park. The day was also observed with great enthusiasm at Philadelphia and other cities throughout the country.—N. Y. Times, Jl 5, 1876.

Dom Pedro, emperor of Brazil, and the empress, arrive in New York from Philadelphia and stay at the Buckingham Hotel. On July 12, they sailed for England.—N. Y. Times, Jl 6–13, 1876.

9 Castle Garden, used as an immigrant station, and containing baggage-rooms, sleeping-rooms, telegraph-offices, post-office, etc., is almost completely gutted by fire. The custom-house and the barge office, close to the water's edge, are also burned.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 10, 1876; N. Y. Times, Jl 10 and 11, 1876; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See S 15.

18 Don Carlos, crown prince of Spain, arrives in New York from Philadelphia.—N. Y. Times, Jl 20, 1876. See also ibid., Ag 26, 1876.

Aug. 1 There were at this time in New York 298.87 miles of pavements of the following kinds: Concrete, concrete over cobble stone, wood, cobble stone, trap block, granite block, Tilford Macadam, gravel (on Ave. St. Nicholas), and Macadam sides with earth centre (Tenth Avenue). Trap block is the most extensively used (145½ miles), and cobblestones next (86$\frac{1}{10}$ miles).—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 29, 1876.

2 After repeated petitions from the Washington Nat'l Monument Society for aid in completing the monument (see 1855), congress decides to assume charge of the work, and appropriates $200,000 towards its completion. No money is to be expended, however, until the society has conveyed to the U. S. all the property, rights, and privileges belonging to the monument. Its further construction is placed under a joint commission consisting of the president, the supervising architect of the treasury department, the architect of the capitol, the chief-engineer of the U. S. army, and the first vice-president of the Washington Nat'l Monument Society.—Hist. of Washington Nat'l Monument and Washington Nat'l Monument Soc. (1902), 98–101.

The society conveyed its property to the U. S. on Jan. 19, 1877, and, after the foundations were strengthened, the erection of the shaft was continued by means of further appropriations by congress. The monument was finally completed on Dec. 6, 1884, on which day its capstone was set in place.—Ibid., 102–8. It was formally dedicated on Feb. 21, 1885 (q.v.).

30 Peter Cooper's nomination for the presidency, on the Greenback ticket, is ratified at a large meeting at Cooper Institute.—N. Y. Times, Ag 31, 1876.

Sept. 6 The French residents of New York present to the city a statue of Lafayette, executed by Bartholdi. It is placed in Union Square between the statues of Washington and Lincoln, and unveiled Sept. 6.—N. Y. Times, S 6 and 7, 1876; N. Y. Herald, S 7, 1876; L. M. R. K., III: 964.

15 The work of repairing Castle Garden, after the recent fire (see Jl 9), is in progress.—N. Y. Herald, S 15, 1876.

15-16 The "carrier rope," to which is attached the first cable of the Brooklyn Bridge, is hauled into position.—N. Y. Herald, S 15–16, 1876; descrip. of Pl. 155-c, III: 778. See My 24, 1883, for account of the entire work of building the bridge.

16 The centennial anniversary of the battle of Harlem Heights is celebrated under the auspices of the N. Y. Hist. Society on the historic ground lying between 110th and 125th Sts., Ninth and Tenth Aves. Hon. John Jay (grandson of Chief-Justice Jay) delivers the oration.—N. Y. Times, S 17, 1876.

18 Prof. Huxley begins a series of three lectures at Chickering Hall on the "Theory of Evolution."—N. Y. Times, S 19, 1876. See also ibid., S 21, 23, 24, 1876.

24 The great explosion takes place to remove the reefs at Hallett's Point (Astoria) which have obstructed the channel at Hell Gate.—N. Y. Herald, S 10, 15–25, 1876. Surveys were made in 1848 by Lieut. Commodores Davis and Porter, by which a complete knowledge of the hydrography of the pass was obtained, and in 1851 a system of surface blasting was commenced by M. Maillefert on the following named rocks, which included some in the lower East River. A table of operations and results of that work was prepared by Gen. John H. Newton, of the Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army, who conducted the operations for clearing away the obstructions at Hell Gate, and was published in ibid., S 16, 1876. It showed the early operations on Pot Rock, Frying Pan, Way's Reef, Shell-

1876 Sept. 24 drake, Baldheaded Billy, Hoyt's Rock, Diamond Reef, and Hallett's Point. The result of the surface blasting was insignificant, and in 1866 Gen. Newton took charge of the operations, and by the aid of drill scows and other apparatus he succeeded in partly removing Diamond Reef, near the entrance to the East River; Coenties Reef, the Frying Pan Rock, in Hell Gate; the Pot Rock, in the same channel, and Way's Reef, near Hallett's Point. The chief danger to the navigation of the eastern channel of Hell Gate was presented by the great projecting ledge of stratified rock known as Hallett's Point Reef, which projected into East River in a northeasterly direction.—Ibid., S 16, 1876. A description of the tunnelling of this rock, and the method of making a simultaneous blast of nitroglycerine, was described in ibid., S 16, 17, 18, 19, 20–24, 1876. Gen. Newton explained in the Herald of Sept. 22, that Sunday was chosen for the final explosion from "sheer necessity,"—so that lines of guard boats could be placed around the point at a distance of 600 feet when river traffic was suspended. Guard boats were to be stationed across the East River at the head of Blackwell's Island and at the south-east point of Ward's Island; also west of the Great and Little Mill reefs. A map of Hell Gate was published in ibid., S 24; and the explosion itself described in ibid., S 25, 1876. The waterway was thereupon named Newton's Channel.—Ibid., S 27, 1876. Work on Flood Rock, which had been begun in 1875 and was interrupted, was then resumed.—Ibid., S 28, and O 1, 1876. The improvement accomplished by this "first attempt to remove the obstructions to navigation in the Hell Gate channel by the destruction of Hallett's Point Reef" directed attention to the possibilities of developing New York's water fronts and wharves, the Harlem River, and its entrances.—Ibid., O 1, 1876. See also descrip. of Pl. 82B, III: 554.

25 The uplifted hand of Bartholdi's statue of "Liberty" is on exhibition at Philadelphia.—N. Y. Times, S 25, 1876. It was afterwards set up in Madison Square on the site where later the Farragut statue was erected.—22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 221. See Mr 3, 1877.

27 The statue of W. H. Seward, by Randolph Rogers, is unveiled in Madison Square.—N. Y. Herald, S 28, 1876; and see Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 142.

Oct. 9 The first sustained conversation by telephone is held, between Alexander G. Bell at Boston and his assistant Thos. A. Watson at Cambridge, a distance of about two miles.—Casson, Hist. of the Telephone, 48–49; Field, Hist. of Bell's Telephone, 6–9.

Nov. 7 Smith Ely, Democrat, is elected mayor of New York City.—N. Y. Times, N 8 and 9, 1876.

" In the presidential election held on this day, Samuel J. Tilden, Democrat, on the face of the returns, defeated his Republican opponent, Rutherford B. Hayes. The returns of four States, South Carolina, Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon, however, were disputed, and congress finally, on Jan. 29, 1877, passed the Electoral Count Act, referring all disputes to a commission of 15. This commission decided the four cases in favour of Hayes, and on March 2, he was declared elected by an electoral vote of 185 to 184 for Tilden. The country was in a turmoil from the time of the election until the decision was announced. Commenting on the result, Rhodes says: "The decision, though deemed a gross injustice by more than half of the country, was submitted to without a suggestion of forcible resistance worth considering. The Democratic party in Congress and out of it and especially its Southern wing and Randall, the Speaker of the House, won for themselves the respect and admiration of the country and of the world."—Hist. of U. S., VII: 206–85.

15 Robert Heller, magician, humorist, and musician (see 1864), opens the former Globe Theatre at 728–30 Broadway, calling it "Heller's Wonder Theatre." His entertainment consists of sleight-of-hand tricks, musical numbers, and "second sight" feats. He has the co-operation of Miss Heller, "who sits blindfolded and names, with almost unfailing accuracy, a hundred articles of dress, &c., shown to Mr. Heller while he rambles among the spectators."—N. Y. Times, N 16, 1876. See also ibid., D 26, 1876. Heller remained here until May 31, 1877.—Brown, II: 394. On April 30, 1877, he introduced " 'A Dark Séance in a New Light,' in which some startling manifestations, which would have been accepted as the undoubted work of spiritual agents by believers in spiritualism, were carried on in the lighted auditorium."—N. Y. Times, My 1, 1877. These "second sight" séances created much wonder and interest.—Ibid., My 23, 1877.

25 The statue of Daniel Webster, by Thomas Ball is unveiled in Central Park, and given to the city by Gordon W. Burnham. It stands at the south-west corner of the lake opposite the 72d St. entrance.—N. Y. Times, N 26, 1876. See also Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City. Nov. 25

In this year, Martha J. Lamb's History of the City of New York was published in two volumes. It had already appeared in parts, sold by subscription. It was the most readable and accurate history of New York which had been published. Mrs. Lamb's work as New York's historiographer continued in the pages of the Magazine of American History, of which she was owner and editor. Her editorial office at that time was her private library in the Coleman House, at the n. w. cor. of Broadway and 27th St., where she resided. In 1896 (q. v.), Mrs. Burton Harrison published a supplementary third volume of Mrs. Lamb's history. —

In this year, the Magazine of American History made its first appearance.—North, 299. Mrs. Martha J. Lamb was its founder. The N. Y. H. S. owns a portrait of Mrs. Lamb in her study. —

In this year, Puck, a weekly magazine of humour, was founded. —North, Newspaper and Periodical Press, 299. —

From 1877 to 1881, H. Croswell Tuttle published, in 3 vols. Abstracts of farm titles in the city of New York, between 39th and 120th streets, East side, and between 39th and 73d streets west of the Common Lands, excepting Glass house farm, with maps. (This title is a composite of those of the three volumes.) The work is based upon original records and maps in the New York County register's office, and in the land office, Albany. —

"The number of fires in 1877 was 1,457, as compared with 1,344 in 1876. . . . The loss by fires in 1877 was $2,497,682, as compared with $2,717,496 in 1876."—N. Y. Times, Ja 4, 1878. —

The portrait of Alexander Hamilton painted for the citizens of New York by Trumbull in 1792 at this time hung in the hall of the Chamber of Commerce.—Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 127. The vicissitudes of this portrait, attending the Chamber's various removals, are described in Portrait Gallery of the Chamber of Commerce (1890), where it is listed as No. 25, and has a permanent place. —

In this year, the Great Metropolitan Railway Co. succeeded to the rights and powers of the New York City Central Underground Railway Co., pursuant to chap. 430 of the laws of 1874, and chap. 446, laws of 1876. This company continued the attempts to secure ways and means for establishing a subway system of railroads in New York.—The Great Metropolitan Railway Co. of N. Y., pamphlet, with map, by O. Vandenburgh, 1877. See D 22. —

A "patent concrete pavement" had been tested without success on Fifth Ave., in front of the Worth monument, for a year or two up to 1877. In 1878, the commissioner of public works stated in his report that if the durability of asphalt pavements could be proved it might "yet be found serviceable in certain localities." He had tested asphalt block pavement in Hanover St., between Wall St. and Hanover Square. The "patent" pavements, which had proved failures, were, he said, "the fraudulent jobs of the infamous cabal which ruled this city within the past four years, loaded it with debt, and robbed its treasury."—N. Y. Tribune, Ag 10, 1877; ibid., Ag 20, 1878; and Message of Mayor Ely, Ja 7, 1878. —

The Lenox Library (see 1871), on Fifth Ave. between 70th and 71st Sts., was completed in this year from designs by Richard M. Hunt.—8th Ann. Rep., Trustees of Lenox Library (1877); Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 832–34. It was demolished in 1912, and the house of Henry C. Frick was built on the site.—L. M. R. K., III: 956. —

The General Society of Mechanics and Tradesmen erects a four-storey building at 16 & 18 East 16th St., which becomes the home of the society instead of 472 Broadway. It was formally opened as the new Mechanics' Hall, on Jan. 2, 1878.—Annals of the Soc. (1882), 201. —

In this year, Alfred T. White of Brooklyn built the so-called "Home Buildings" for working people, upon plans similar to those of Sir Sidney Waterlow's Industrial Dwellings Co. of London. In 1878, Mr. White erected, directly opposite, an entire block of similar model tenements with a large park or courtyard in the centre.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 97. —

In this year, the double house at 7 East 15th St., sold in 1875 to James Stokes and Morris K. Jesup, was transferred to the Y. W. C. A., which occupied it until June, 1917.—Description of Pl. —

1877 — 135, III: 703; Harper's Weekly, XXII: 109–10; L. M. R. K., III: 956. In June, 1917, the association occupied its new building at the s. w. cor. of Lexington Ave. and 53d St.

Jan. — In this month, Thos. A. Edison received the first patent for a phonograph. The imprints were taken on tin-foil, which was a rather unsatisfactory medium. Edison later invented the wax cylinder or disk, which permitted permanent records.—Encyclop. Brit., XXI: 467.

4 Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt dies at his residence, No. 10 Washington Place. On Jan. 7, he was buried in the Moravian churchyard near New Dorp, Staten Id.—N. Y. Times, Ja 5 and 8, 1877

Feb. 18 "The Russian corvette Croysser, the first vessel of the Russian fleet [to arrive at New York], is anchored off the Battery."—N. Y. Times, F 18, 1877. See Mr 23.

Mar. 3 Pres. Grant having informed congress that "citizens of the French Republic propose to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of our independence by erecting at their own cost a colossal bronze statue of 'Liberty enlightening the world' upon a pedestal of suitable proportions to be built by private subscriptions upon one of the islands belonging to the United States in the harbor of New York," a joint resolution is passed by the senate and house of representatives authorising the president to accept the statue, to designate either Governor's or Bedloe's Island as the site, and upon the completion of the statue to cause it to be dedicated with suitable ceremonies. He is also to make regulations "for its future maintenance as a beacon, and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art, and of the continued good will of the great nation, which aided us in our struggle for freedom."—Laws of U. S., 44th cong., p. 410. An act was later passed leaving the choice of the island to Gen. Wm. T. Sherman, who confirmed Bartholdi's selection of Bedloe's.—22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 221. The statue was formally presented to the U. S. at Paris on July 4, 1884 (q.v.).

Thieves take the remains of A. T. Stewart from the family 7 vault in St. Mark's churchyard.—N. Y. Herald, N 8 et seq., 1878. Judge Henry Hilton, by direction of Mrs. Stewart, immediately offered a reward of $25,000 for the return of the body and information leading to the conviction of the perpetrators of the outrage. Several anonymous offers to restore the body were made, but Judge Hilton refused to negotiate unless the thieves also surrendered themselves. The detectives and police of New York worked on the case for two years without results. Finally, Mrs. Stewart agreed to pay $20,000 for the recovery of the remains, and a young relative undertook the hazardous commission, in accordance with the severe conditions laid down by the criminals. The remains were delivered to him in the dead of night on a lonely lane in Westchester County and the next night were reburied at Garden City.—Walling, *Recollections of a N. Y. In this year, Charles Stuart Parnell became the leader of the — Home Rule Party, which demanded that Ireland have a separate parliament to manage its own affairs. Writing of the past and future development of New York City, — Egbert L. Viele says: "The growth and development of this city are without a parallel and without a precedent. Its future has been often prophesied, but not always understood. . . . One thing is, however, certain, that the anticipations of the most sanguine have always been more than realized while the prognostications of the doubtful have only been remembered for their fallacy.

1879 — "The progressive growth of the city has been often capricious, so far as locality is concerned, but the important factor of topography has always asserted itself, in spite of all efforts to ignore it in the interests of individual projects. Going back to the early settlement and Dutch supremacy we find both commerce and social life progressing along the east side of the city, on the line of what is now Pearl street. . . . The early occupation of that section was due to the fact that from the east side of the city, on account of the prevailing winds, sailing vessels may always be got under way more readily than from the west side, where it is often impossible for a vessel to leave her berth without the aid of a tug. When the English occupation took place the Dutch had already monopolized the east side of the city as far up as the 'Bouwerie' or Bowery. . . . The natural social and business antagonism between the Dutch and English necessitated the selection of a new locality on the part of the latter, and Broadway became the choice, where were erected the English churches—Trinity and St. Paul —and here the English merchants built their residences and stores. The Dutch churches were in Fulton and Nassau streets, and as the religious element, especially in small communities, is always an important factor in social life, we find two distinct centres of civic progress developing themselves and maintained with great energy and determination for many years. The topographical advantages were, however, in favor of the English, and the building up of New York, along the line of Broadway, the 'backbone' of the island, was the result. But time and prosperity causing a rapid increase of population the city assumed a cosmopolitan character, local religious or social influences ceased to have the same force that they formerly exerted, and new influences arose to determine the direction and character of the city's growth. Yet no one anticipated then or for years afterward what the city might become. . . . Yet the city has continued to grow, the centre of active trade shifting from place to place as the city extended itself. This has been especially the case with the dry goods trade, which at one time centred itself in Pearl street, in the old homes of the Dutch, shifting thence to lower Broadway, afterward occupying the streets running from that thoroughfare on the west side, most of which were widened from forty to sixty feet to make accommodations for this rapidly increasing trade, and were lined with fine marble buildings, soon, however, to be abandoned for Church street, middle Broadway and the streets connecting them, where it now rests for a season. Other lines of trade have apparently followed in the wake, and occupied the localities deserted by the jobbing trade, leaving no vacancies, but filling up, as it were, the interstices as fast as they were made, but from the very force of numbers and the great bulk of this business the dry goods traders have always led the way. On the other hand, in the development of the area appropriated for the purposes of residences the governing elements have been of an entirely different character. . . . Take, for instance, Second avenue. An extensive tract in this locality belonged to the heirs of the Stuyvesant estate, many of whom had sufficient means to erect expensive structures for their own residences and encouraged others to do the same in their vicinity. The consequence was that for a time many first class improvements were made in the neighborhood of Stuyvesant square and along that region of the avenue alluded to. . . . Again, St. Mark's Place was selected by an enterprising citizen as an exclusive faubourg, but it proved a mere halting place of fashion. Bond street was another effort, where enough gentlemen of taste and means established themselves to render the entire street an exclusive precinct for a decade or more, but its glory has long since faded.

"Some thirty years ago the movement in Fifth avenue was initiated, and it has held its own with a growth above and a decay below from that time to the present day. This fine avenue has now become thoroughly invaded, from Washington Square almost to the Central Park, with fancy shops, jewelers, hotels and boarding-houses, and its exclusiveness has vanished forever. 'Murray Hill,' the line of which it crosses, was for a considerable time regarded as the synonyme of fashion, but in time it will be more strictly synonymous with shabby gentility. Fifth avenue northward is limited to the east side, of the Park, and has a 'jumping off' place at 102d street, into the Harlem Flats, which checks its career of availability. Madison avenue has to some extent usurped the place of Fifth avenue, due in a large measure to the convenience afforded originally by the extension of the Fourth avenue surface road into that avenue. . . .

"Lenox Hill, on the line of Fifth and Madison avenues, from the very nature of its elevated position affords very attractive building sites, which the large and opulent class of our Hebrew fellow-citizens have not been slow to appreciate. . . . 1879 —

"In fact, as this favored territory is really limited by the sudden descent into Harlem Flats at 100th street, it is very doubtful whether it will be sufficient even to accommodate all of that faith who are likely to erect here their 'lares and penates.' The inquiry naturally presents itself, where, then, shall the growth of the city thus limited and circumscribed in the channels it has pursued for three decades be now directed? . . .

"The conclusion is inevitable . . . that the section of the city that has been held in reserve until the time when the progress of wealth and refinement shall have attained that period of development when our citizens can appreciate and are ready to take advantage of the situation, is the section that is to be the most favored and the most sought after. At an expense unparalleled except in the lavish periods of imperial opulence the great west end plateau, extending from the Central Park to the North River, has been laid out and ornamented with a series of magnificent avenues not excelled by any other city in the world. Moreover, this entire region combines in its general aspect all that is magnificent in the leading capitals of Europe. In our Central Park we have the fine Prater of Vienna, in our grand boulevard the rival of the finest avenues of the gay capital of France, in our Riverside Avenue the equivalent of the Chiaja of Naples and the Corso of Rome, while the beautiful 'Unter den Linden,' of Berlin, and the finest portions of the West End of London are reproduced again and again. . . .

"Originally the highest portions of the 'backbone' of the island were rough and unsightly rocky eminences alternated with intervening valleys. By a process of uniform grading these have been transformed into a generally level plateau from seventy-five to a hundred feet above the river. On the east the Central Park, with all its luxurious beauty, stretches out its long line of trees and shrubs. On the west the stately Hudson bathes the foot of the green slope in which it terminates, while, from the splendid avenue on the crest above, this beautiful sheet of water, with its teeming life of sail and steamer, is viewed for more than three miles of drive and promenade. On the south the busy city stretches out from below the Park, and on the north the Boulevard extends its length away into the picturesque and inviting region of Fort Washington, with the Morning Side Park on the east to break the view of Harlem Plains while Long Island Sound and its beautiful islands are seen in the distance.

". . . It is believed that the density of the future population of the east side will exceed anything now conceived of. With the improvement of the Harlem River, soon to be accomplished, a cordon of business and second-class dwellings will be drawn closely around that side which can by no possibility invade the west end plateau. The business capacity of the Harlem River is yet to be developed. . . . We are soon to realize the fact that this fine river is the proper terminus of the Erie Canal. When the contemplated improvements of this river are completed a commercial channel will be opened that will render unnecessary the transportation of the canal freight the entire length of the island and around the Battery, to interfere with the shipping and the ferries. It will, instead of making this long detour, be discharged into warehouses and elevators on the Harlem River and at Port Morris, whence the foreign shipping can receive it. The grain and lumber trade of the city will centre here, and a large amount of business, now crowded into the lower end of the island, will be transacted at this point. The facilities offered by the rapid transit railways have made all this not only possible, but certain.

"Overlooking the whole of this vast and accumulating traffic and commerce, but separated from it forever by topographical lines as clearly defined and obstructive as the bastions that surround the fashionable residences of the Viennese, the west end plateau will undoubtedly always be held intact for the development of a higher order of domestic architecture than it has been the good fortune of New York heretofore to possess. . . .

"The plans of improvement at the west end that have now been completed, afford the opportunity for that change in style of house construction that has so long been a desideratum with us. . . . The territory at the west side is so admirably divided

1879 up by the broad boulevard through the centre, the open space of
— Central Park on the east and the Riverside Park on the west—that the interminable vistas of brown stone that characterize the rest of the city are impossible, while unexampled facilities are supplied for the erection of elegant homes that will do credit to their owners and will be ornaments to the city. Instead of expending from $30,000 to $50,000 for a corner lot on Fifth avenue, from four to six lots can here be now purchased for that sum, and the indications are that men of foresight and good judgment are availing themselves of the chances that are thus offered. Steam transit has accomplished in a year what a decade would have failed to do without it. The admirable service on the elevated roads has shown with what comfort and facility a home in this vicinity can be reached, and as these roads will be running through the west end this spring a decided movement has already begun, and building operations on an extensive scale have been commenced. . . . Some fine private residences will also be erected this spring on the unrivalled Riverside avenue. This splendid avenue is to be fully completed and opened during the coming season. Visitors to the 'World's Exhibition' in the Central Park, in 1888, will probably find the entire region, westward to the river, built up in a manner consistent with the surrounding public improvements.

"If there appears to be the least exaggeration in this statement, let us reflect for a moment on the striking fact, that with the exceptions of the immediate vicinity of the General Post Office and that of Madison Square, Twenty-third street, there is no spot in the city where a larger number of people can be concentrated, in the shortest space of time, with the readiest means of locomotion than 'The Circle' at the Eighth avenue and Fifty-ninth street entrance of the Central Park, and yet, in ignorance of this fact, this point is probably regarded by nine-tenths of our citizens as comparatively isolated. The elevated railways, which in this immediate vicinity come together and meet eight lines of surface railways, have accomplished this result. While the triangle between St. Paul's and the Post Office, will be for many years to come what it now is, the most active focus of the business portion of the city, 'The Circle' has been made, by the facilities for locomotion afforded at that point, the chief centre of social life.

"The Metropolitan Elevated Railroad has, in point of fact, by its Fifty-third street reach, converted the upper portion of Ninth avenue, into the northerly extension of the Sixth, and the Park front of Eighth avenue has by the same process of transformation been brought into line with that part of the Fifth below the Park. This is one of the rapid transit revolutions, which it is impossible to ignore."—Viele, The West End Plateau of the City of N. Y. (1879).

— At this time, on Gracie's Point or Horens' Hook, on the East River, there stood an enormous tree, towering above the bluff. "This tree, a noble specimen of the Balsam Poplar, or Cotton tree species (Tacamahaca Populus Balsamifera), is nearly, or quite [in 1879] two centuries old, and probably the largest on New York Island. It measures fourteen feet in circumference, taken at a height of thirty-six inches from the ground. Its branches begin at not less than thirty feet from the ground and spread into an enormous dome. Yet so full the tree and so perfect its symmetry, that at a short distance its size and height do not strike the eye."—Mag. of Am. Hist., III: 691–92 (Nov., 1879).

— In this year, a competition, instituted by Henry C. Meyer, editor of the Sanitary Engineer, D. Willis James, F. B. Thurber, Henry E. Pellew, and Robert Gordon, was held for the best architectural designs for a tenement-house on a city lot 25 x 100. Two hundred and six plans were sent in from all parts of the United States, Canada, and Great Britain, and the first prize was awarded to James E. Ware for his "Dumb-bell Plan," so called because the outline of the building tapered in the middle like the handle of a dumb-bell. Though the award was severely criticized, this type of building multiplied all over the city. It produced the evil of the narrow air-shaft, and by 1900 had come to be considered one of the worst types of tenement designs ever devised.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 100–2. 1879 —

— In this year, Wm. I. Taylor made a lithographic map of New York City showing in detail almost every building on Manhattan Island and containing, besides, a list of the leading hotels, schools, theatres, public buildings, piers, ferries, etc., and small inset views of some of the places of interest. It is reproduced and described as Pl. 154, Vol. III.

— In this year, Geo. W. Bromley & Co. published an atlas of the city of New York in one volume, showing all the principal buildings, including hotels, factories, schools, theatres, etc., by ground-plan outline and name; also block and lot measurements, car-lines (distinguishing steam railroads and street railways); original farm lines, old roads, water-courses, and estates; ward boundaries, and fire-hydrants. Like the Perris maps (see 1852), this atlas reveals the northern extent of the built-up portion of the island. Bromley's partner, E. Robinson, published a similar map for the year 1885 (q. v.).

23 This day having been set aside as "Tenement House Sunday," through the efforts of the State Charities Aid Association, the leading clergymen of the city preach upon the evils of the tenement-house system and the need for reform.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 98.

28 A great public meeting, called by the State Charities Aid Association is held at Cooper Union to devise measures to carry tenement-house reform into effect. A committee known as the "Mayor's Committee" is appointed by Mayor Cooper, consisting of D. Willis James, Frederick W. Stevens, W. W. Astor, Cornelius Vanderbilt, R. T. Auchmuty, James Gallatin, Henry E. Pellew, F. D. Tappen, and C. P. Daly. The committee reported on March 25 recommending the formation of a company to build model tenements similar to those of Alfred T. White (see 1877) and proposing radical changes in the existing tenement-house law. The Improved

1879 Feb. 28 Dwellings Association was organized as a result of these recommendations and erected a group of buildings on First Ave., between 71st and 72d Sts. The New York Sanitary Reform Society, with James Gallatin as president, was also incorporated to carry on permanently the work of tenement-house reform. The tenement-house law was amended on June 16 (q.v.).—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 98–99.

16 As a result of the agitation following the efforts of the State Charities Aid Association (see F 28), the law of May 14, 1867 (q.v.), regulating tenement- and lodging-houses, is amended by the legislature. The new law—the second tenement-house law passed in New York—provides, among other things, that no new tenement shall occupy more than 65% of a lot, that, to prevent overcrowding, there shall be at least 600 cu. ft. of air space per person in every room, and that there shall be a resident janitor, at the discretion of the board of health, in a tenement-house occupied by more than ten families. The law also establishes 30 sanitary policemen under the supervision of the board of health and creates a tenement-house fund of $10,000 to be spent annually for sanitary inspection.—Laws of N. Y. (1879), chap. 504; De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, 99–100. July 7 The board of aldermen resolves that the street between the southerly end of City Hall Park and the post-office, extending from Park Row to Broadway, be known and designated as Mail St.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CLII: 456; CLV: 156.

15 The Duke of Argyll and his daughters, Lady Elizabeth and Lady Mary Campbell, arrive at New York from Newport and stop at the Brevoort House. On July 16, they sailed for Europe.—N. Y. Times, Jl 16 and 17, 1879.

Sept. — The Republican Club of the City of New York is organized. It was incorporated on May 18, 1886. For several years it had rooms at various places, and, on March 10, 1886, opened its first club-house at 32 W. 28th St. The second club-house was opened on May 21, 1888, at 450 Fifth Ave.—Club Book (1889). The club is now at 54–56 W. 40th St.

Sept. — The completion of the improvements in Tompkins Square Park (see Ap 16) is celebrated with music and speeches.—N. Y. Times, S 5, 1879. See L. M. R. K., III: 971; also My 19, 1880.

10 About this time, graves of British soldiers were dug up at the north-west corner of Lexington Ave. and 104th St. It is said that "All the space on the west side of Lexington avenue, between 104th and 105th Streets was a military graveyard during the British occupation." The house occupied by H. P. McGowan, which stands on the south side of 106th St., between Third and Lexington Aves., was a military hospital.—Mag. of Am. Hist., IV: 458.

11 The New York (or Bowery) Theatre at 46–48 Bowery is reopened as the Thalia Theatre for German drama.—Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, I: 164; L. M. R. K., III: 982; descrip. of Pl. 102-b, III: 604. See, further, Mr 30, 1892.

17 The building on the west side of Broadway, just below 30th St., hitherto successively known as Banvard's Museum, Wood's Museum and Metropolitan Theatre, and the Broadway Theatre, is opened under the management of Augustin Daly, and called Daly's Theatre.—Brown, II: 522–45; L. M. R. K., III: 983. For the next 20 years, Daly's was famous both nationally and internationally for the excellence of its stock company and its elaborate production of Shakespearean plays. In 1920, the historic house was torn down and an eight-storey business building erected on the site.—N. Y. Times, Jl 3 and 11, 1920; N. Y. Sun, Jl 28, 1920.

18 The Chamber of Commerce appoints a committee to solicit contributions for the sufferers in Memphis, Tenn., where a yellow fever epidemic is raging. More than $11,000 was forwarded from New York City.—N. Y. Times, S 19, 20, 23, 25, 27, O 7, 15, and 21, 1879.

30 The lines of the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Co. (formerly the Gilbert Co.) and of the N. Y. Elevated Co. are leased by the Manhattan Railway Co. (see N 10, 1875) for 999 years.—Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., Rapid Transit in N. Y. City and in Other Great Cities, 49. See O 22, 1881.

Oct. 7 Austria and Germany enter into a defensive alliance.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 319–21; Ward, Germany, III: 141–42. See My 20, 1882.

21 Thos. A. Edison perfects the first incandescent lamp.—N. Y. Times, Mr 22, 1925.

27 The "Open Board of Brokers," a new rival to the Stock Exchange, is formally organized.—N. Y. Times, O 28, 1879. It opened for business on Nov. 5, in the old post-office building.—Ibid., N 6, 1879.

30 The Chapel of St. Chrysostom, built by Trinity corporation at the corner of Seventh Ave. and 39th St., is consecrated by Bishop Potter.—N. Y. Times, O 31, 1879; Trinity Church Bicentennial Celebration, May 5th, 1897, 37 and view.

Nov. 5 Arthur Sullivan and W. S. Gilbert, authors of "H. M. S. Pinafore," arrive at New York.—N. Y. Times, N 6, 1879. On Nov. 8, a reception in their honour was held at the Lotos Club.—Ibid., N 9, 1879.

17 A great fair is opened by the Seventh Regiment in its new armory at Park Ave. and 66th St., to raise funds to complete and furnish the armory. Mayor Cooper presides, George Wm. Curtis delivers the principal address, and Pres. Hayes officially opens the fair. It continued until Dec. 6, and the net receipts were $140,549.92. During the fair, a daily journal called The Knapsack was published, containing the news of the fair and contributions from distinguished persons.—Clark, Hist. of the Seventh Reg., II: 274–84. There is complete file of The Knapsack in the N. Y. P. L.

Dec. 1 George Augustus Sala, an English journalist, writing about the changes in New York since his last visit, in 1863–64, says: "I declare that when, with the inquisitiveness of a traveller just arrived in a strange land, I began to look to this side and to that from the windows of the carriage . . . in which we were being jolted over the much tram-rutted thoroughfares on our way from the Scythia's berth on the North River to the Brevoort House, the most forcible impression on my mind was to the effect that that most frugal and ingenious people, the Dutch, had been forced by the machinations of Prince Bismarck to evacuate Holland, and had suddenly colonised the purlieus of Paradise-street, Liverpool, which by some preternatural means or other had been transported across the Atlantic.

1879 Dec. 1 "The little red-brick houses, the high 'stoops' or flights of wooden steps in front, the green 'jalousie' shutters, the handicrafts and shop business carried on in cellars, the amount of mopping, and scrubbing, and scouring going on, the endless procession of open drays full of corpulent little kegs presumably full of schiedam, all at first bespoke the neighbourhood of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, or the Hague . . . and it was only when crossing one of the Avenues . . . that I began to realise the fact that I had reached the only country which as yet possesses that not very artistic-looking but still distinctly beneficial institution, an 'Elevated Railroad'—America. . . .

"I am free, indeed, to confess that, as an old wrestler with wild beasts at Ephesus, and an inveterate grumbler, grievance-monger, and partisan, I am, up to this time of writing sorrowfully disappointed with the coolness, almost amounting to indifference, with which Americans of culture seem to be treating things in general. People talk freely enough about 'H. M. S. Pinafore,' the musical genius of Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the wit and humour of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, and the talent and bonhomie of Mr. Frederick Clay, all of whom are at present among the choicest lions of New York fashionable society; and the 'Princess Toto' they talk about, the millions of dollars which Mr. James R. Keene is reported to be continually making in Wall-street speculations; Mr. Mapleson's opera coming is frequently discussed; people of culture and people who are 'intime' discourse concerning Mr. E. Burne-Jones's pictures or Mr. Whistler's etchings; but they have nothing to say on the Eastern Question; and even the Nicaraguan Canal, Chinese cheap labour, the Customs Tariff, the chances of General Grant as a candidate at the next Presidential Election, Mormon polygamy, and the expediency of the gradual withdrawal of greenbacks from circulation fail . . . to excite anything beyond the most languid amount of interest.

"As for the Rebellion, as for the greatest and most momentous Civil War that modern times have seen, it is never made a subject of conversation in polite society. . . .

"Thus, having traversed in imagination Holland, North Germany, and Ireland, I arrived at length at my destination, the Brevoort House, an hotel situated in a region to which I hesitate to assign a parallel in the way of locality. The truth would seem to be that within the last sixteen years the city of New York has become not only structurally but socially transformed, and that the Brevoort, although as comfortable and as aristocratically frequented as ever, is no longer situated in a fashionable quarter. The Brevoort—it must be told in Gath—is now 'down town.' . . .

"When I came here first, Twenty-fifth-street was accounted as being sufficiently far 'up town,' and Fortieth-street was Ultima Thule. Beyond that the course of town lots planned out and prospected, but structurally yet to come, was only marked by boulders of the living rock having weird graffiti eulogistic of the virtues of Drake's Plantation Bitters, the Night Blooming Cereus, the Balm of a Thousand Flowers, and Old Dr. Jacob Townsend's Sarsaparilla. What has become of these strange stencillings on the living rock? Where I remember wildernesses I behold now terraces after terraces of lordly mansions of brown stone, some 'with marble façades,' others wholly of pure white marble, gleaming like the product of Carrara in the clear blue sky, and lacking only a few palm trees and orange groves to surpass in beauty the villas of the Promenade des Anglais at Nice. Unless my friends in New York are laughing at me, this state of things architectural goes on up to One Hundred and Ninetieth-street . . .; the growth of young Manhattan, as it is much more rapid, is also much more astonishing than our own metropolitan transformation. Growing London absorbs suburbs, villages, and towns. Growing New York has had nothing to absorb but the open. . . ."—Sala, America Re-visited (London, 1883), I: 44–45, 48–49, 50, 53–54. See, further, D 4.

2 Henry A. Holmes, LL. D., of the State Library, Albany, reads an historical essay before the Albany Institute, entitled The Correct Arms of the State of New York as established by law since March 16, 1778 (Albany, 1880). The subject was investigated by a senate commission, which later published: Report of the Commissioners of the Correct Arms of the State of New York, with Appendix: Letter of H. A. Holmes to the Commissioners, Transmitted to the Senate April 13, 1881 (Albany, 1882). Mr. Holmes read a second paper before the Albany Institute, May 24, 1881 (Albany, 1882). The inquiry led to the act of May 20, 1882 (q. v.). The device of the arms of the state, as adopted March 16, 1778 (q. v.), is correctly described in the Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 678, §40. Dec. 2

4 George A. Sala (see D1) writes: "On the whole there seems to be far less social friction in modern New York life than is the case on our side. People here do not trouble themselves much about things calculated to arouse embittered controversy; and in this respect the New Yorkers closely resemble the Viennese. La Bagatelle appears for the moment to be triumphant. There are a multitude of cheap and well-managed theatres open, playing mainly the most frivolous and nonsensical pieces it is possible to conceive; and they are all crowded nightly. How many tens of thousands of dollars a week Mr. Delmonico is clearing I do not know, . . . but his palatial establishment, as well as scores of the restaurants and cafés, continually overflow with guests. . . .

"When I was here last the fashionable or 'uptown' Delmonico occupied a large building at the corner of East Fourteenth-street, and Fifth-avenue. But East Fourteenth-street is now 'down town' and the existing Palazzo Delmonico fronts Broadway, Fifth-avenue, and Twenty-sixth-street. The furniture and hangings are splendid, but very quiet and refined. The establishment comprises an immense café, and a public restaurant of equal dimensions, while on the second floor . . . there are first a magnificent saloon which can be used as a ball room or as a dining hall, and next a series of handsome private rooms for select dinner parties; on the upper floors are a limited number of furnished apartments for gentlemen. . . .

"Next in renown to Delmonico's is that of the Hotel Brunswick [on the n. e. corner of Fifth Ave. and 26th St.] . . . The Brunswick presents an additional attraction of a large garden in the rear; and here, in summer, meals are served under a canvas awning. . . .

". . . I suppose that luxurious life in New York is at the present moment about the most expensive of any life in any city in the world. . . .Good wearing apparel here is surprisingly costly. . . . You cannot obtain a Havana cigar worth smoking for less than ninepence; and two shillings is thought to be quite a moderate price for a Regalia Britannica. There is no drinkable champagne under three dollars or twelve shillings a bottle. Claret is almost equally dear. In fact, so far as my experience goes, I have found that the purchasing power of the dollar in New York does not exceed that of an English florin. . . .

". . . the necessaries of life, properly so called, may be bought in the numerous and excellently provided markets of New York at prices which, estimating them by comparison with our own, we should be entitled to consider as ridiculously cheap. . . ."—Sala, America Revisited (London, 1883), I: 90–99.

Regarding New York's prisons, he says: ". . . as an antechamber to the Tombs, I took a cursory view of the Jefferson-market Gaol, which occupies a very tall tower of brick and stone in the Italian Gothic style of architecture. The cells are airy, and not by any means cheerless; . . . The Tombs—rarely has so appropriate a name been bestowed on a prison—is a really remarkable and grandiose specimen of Egyptian architecture; and but for the unfortunate position of the site it would be the most imposing public building in New York. . . .

"Internally, the Tombs is rather a series of prisons than a single structure. The cells rise in tiers one above the other, with a separate corridor for each tier. There is a grating before each cell, between the bars of which the visitor can converse with the prisoner within. . . .

". . . Finally the chief warder took us to his garden, where there was a vine trained against the wall, with a pigeon-cote amply stocked, and a pretty little pond bordered by turf and flowers. . . ."—Ibid., I: 255–65.

— The population of Manhattan Island is 1,164,673.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910).

— About this time, the 15, 14, 13 puzzle was all the rage.—Champlin, Young Folks' Cyclop. of Games and Sports, 320–21.

— In this year, the telephone was being perfected. Henry Ward Beecher's voice was carried through a Blake transmitter in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, by wires ramifying in all directions as far as Yonkers and Elizabeth, and was distinctly heard in New York.—N. Y. Tribune, My 9, 1880. There were at this time 30,872 Bell telephone stations in the U. S. In 1890, this number 1880 had increased to 211,503; in 1900, to 676,733; in 1910, to 5,882,719; — in 1920, to 12,601,935; in 1925, to 16,720,224.—Ann. Rep., Am. Tel. & Tel. Co. (1926).

— The elevated railroads on both the east and west sides of the city reach the Harlem River. Later the Third Ave. line was carried across the river to Bronx Park.—Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., Rapid Transit in N. Y. City and in Other Great Cities, 49.

— In this year, Riverside Drive was completed and opened to the public.—Message of Mayor Grace, Mr 1, 1881, p. 32.

— In this year was published by J. B. Beers & Co. a Map of Delancey farm, 'eastern part.' Lying in the present 11th and 13th wards. Compiled from official documents. Drawn by dr. Heinrich Windwart, 1880; size, 43 x 37 in.

The same firm published, in this year, a Map of the Corlears's Hook farm, situated in the present 7th ward. Drawn by dr. Heinrich Windward; size, 23 x 35 in.

— Between 1880 and 1886 were published by E. Robinson and R. H. Pidgeon a coloured atlas of the city of New York in 6 vols., folio. It was based upon official records, private plans, and actual surveys. A second edition was published from 1883 to 1888. These were ward maps. A third series in 7 vols., folio, was published in 1889–1893.

— In this year was issued by Maurice M. Minton what appears to be the first volume of The List. A Visiting and Shopping Directory. It was compiled from his mother's visiting list. In 1886, it was combined with Society, and the joint publication was called Society-List.—See copies in N. Y. P. L. The List was a forerunner of the Social Register (see 1887).—N. Y. Eve. Post, D 12, 1925.

— In this year, Frederick MacMonnies, who was born in Brooklyn in 1863, was admitted to the studio of Augustus St. Gaudens (see 1861). For four years he studied at night in the life classes of the Acad. of Design, and Art Students' League, New York. For the development of his career, see Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, Sculptors and Engravers (1926), 224.

— In this year, Louis C. Tiffany, the painter, now art director of the Tiffany Studios, and president of the Tiffany Co., was elected an Academician.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 368.

Jan. Charles Stuart Parnell arrives at New York and is enthusi-
2 astically received. On Jan. 4, he addressed a large meeting at Madison Square Garden on the subject of Ireland's wrongs and their remedy. He sailed from New York in March.—N. Y. Times, Ja 3, 5, Mr 11 and 12, 1880.

7 The board of park commissioners agrees to allow the West Side and Yonkers R. R. Co. to build "a railroad and foot-bridge across the Harlem River from a point near the terminus of Eighth avenue to the east shore of the river, . . . which will connect that railroad with the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad and make a through rapid transit line to the City of Yonkers."—N. Y. Times, Ja 8, 1880.

Feb. The Madison Square Theatre on West 24th St. (see Ap 23,
4 1879) is re-opened after extensive alterations in its interior arrangements, including elaborate decorations by Louis Tiffany and the addition of a double stage, invented by the manager, Steele Mackaye, who had the financial backing of the Mallory brothers, proprietors of The Churchman.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 5, 1880; Brown, II: 415–16.

7 A committee of prominent New Yorkers, under the chairmanship of Hamilton Fish, has been chosen to take measures for the erection of "a suitable monument to mark the spot on Wall-street, now occupied by the United States Sub-Treasury Building, where George Washington first took the oath of office, and in the presence of both houses of Congress inaugurated the Government of the United States under the Federal Constitution."—N. Y. Times, F 6 and 7, 1880. This movement was inaugurated by the Chamber of Commerce.—Mag. Am. Hist., VI: 67. See N, 1881, and N 26, 1883.

10 The name of Eleventh Ave., from 72d to 106th St., is changed to West End Ave.—Ord., etc., App'd by Mayor, XLVIII: 20.

17 James Lenox dies at the age of 80.—Stevens, Recollections of James Lenox, 13.

24 Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, projector of the Panama Canal, arrives at New York to invite American capitalists to invest in the enterprise.—N. Y. Times, F 25, 1880. After a tour of Washington, San Francisco, Chicago, Boston, etc., he returned to New York on March 30 and sailed for Europe on April 1.—Ibid., Mr 31–Ap 2, 1880. For the sale of Panama Canal Co. stock, see D 7.

Mar. The Second Ave. line of the elevated railroad is opened from 1 Chatham Sq. to 67th St.—Hist. of Real Estate in N. Y. City (pub. by Real Estate Record & Builder's Guide, 1894), 45; Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y., Rapid Transit in N. Y. City and in other Great Cities, 49. See Ag 16.

27 The U. S. steamer "Constellation" sails from New York with contributions for the relief of the famishing people of Ireland.—N. Y. Times, Mr 26 and 28, 1880. The famine was caused by a general failure of the crops.

30 The Metropolitan Museum building in Central Park is formally opened by Pres. Hayes.—N. Y. Times, Mr 31, 1880; 10th Ann. Rep., Trustees of the Met. Mu. (1880); Howe, Hist. of Met. Mu. of Art, 143, 189. See also L. M. R. K., III: 957; descrip. of Pl. 164-b, III: 847; and illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XIV: 233, 234.

31 The Broadway Opera House, having been renovated, is re-opened as the Bijou Opera House.—N. Y. Times, Ap 1, 1880.

Apr. Gladstone becomes prime minister for the second time. His — administration lasted until 1885.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 490.

21 Madison Square Garden (see My 22 and 31, 1879) is a scene of panic when 100 ft. of the second storey, fronting on Madison Ave. and including the tower at the north-western corner, fall to the street, carrying away the art gallery, the dancing-room, and part of the restaurant. The masonry falls upon about 20 persons, killing three and injuring fifteen. Many oil paintings and water colours are badly damaged.—N. Y. Times, Ap 22, 1880. See also ibid., My 10, 1880, and L. M. R. K., III: 984. There is a cut of the tragedy in Harper's Weekly, XXIV: 292. See Jl 7.

26 The 7th Regiment moves from the Tompkins Market Armory into its new armory on the east side of Park Ave. between 66th and 67th Sts. (see O 13, 1877).—Daily Graphic, Ap 28, 1880. The armory is shown in Harper's Weekly, XXIV: 289.

May The New York Free Circulating Library Association (see 1879)
4 has opened its first library at No. 36 Bond St.—N. Y. Times, My 4, 1880. See also Harper's Weekly, XXVI: 34.

7 The lands bounded by Bloomfield and Gansevoort Sts., Tenth and Thirteenth Aves., and the block bounded by Gansevoort, Little West 12th, Washington, and West Sts. and Tenth Ave., are declared to be "a public market place for farmers' wagons, whereon farmers and market gardeners bringing their farm and garden produce to the city of New York in wagons may dispose of the same." The city is directed to acquire the property, and the commissioner of public works is to prepare the same for occupancy.—Laws of N. Y. (1880), chap. 191. A map of the land dated 1880 is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 3538. Evidently nothing further was done, for in 1884 (q. v., Je 14), the land was again set apart for market purposes.

12 The department of public buildings informs the stand-holders in Fulton Market that the building is in such a dilapidated and unsafe condition that it must be pulled down.—N. Y. Times, My 13, 1880. On May 28, part of the roof of the market caved in.—Ibid., My 30, 1880. See L. M. R. K., III: 959. A new market was built on the site (see N 16, 1882).

19 The park commissioners appropriate $25,000 for completing the restoration of Tompkins Square as a public park (see S 4, 1879). This was done pursuant to Laws of N. Y. (1878), chap. 411; (1879), chap. 177; (1880), chap. 66; and act of common council, April 17, 1880.—Min. & Doc., Bd. Com. Dept. Pub. Parks (1880–81), 63.

26 The new Metropolitan Concert Hall on Broadway between 41st and 42d St. is opened to invited guests.—N. Y. Times, My 27, 1880. This was a forerunner of the Metropolitan Opera House.—N. Y. Times Mag., Ja 7, 1923.

29 The charter of 1873 (q. v., Ap 30) is amended in several particulars by the legislature. In order to "reduce the burden of taxes to be levied in said city," reductions are made in the salaries of nearly all the officials, with the provision that no one "now in office, during his present term" shall be affected. To cite a few examples, aldermen hereafter will receive $2,000, a reduction of 50%, the president of the board, $3,000 instead of $5,000, the mayor is reduced from $12,000 to $10,000, the corporation counsel, from $15,000 to $12,000, the chamberlain, from $30,000 to $25,000; heads of departments generally are to receive $5,000, and they are required "to reduce the aggregate expenses . . . for salaries and compensation of persons employed" (day labourers receiving less than $2 per day, school teachers, and a few others are particularly exempted from this reduction) during the next fiscal year, by at 1880 least 10%. In making this reduction the heads may "abolish and

May consolidate offices and bureaus, and discharge subordinates."
29 The department of buildings is abolished by this act, and in its stead a fourth bureau is created within the fire department, "the bureau of inspection of buildings." All the officers of this bureau, except clerks and messengers, must be either practical architects, house carpenters, or masons, "shall have served a regular apprenticeship as such, and . . . pass an examination before the board of examiners now by law established for the examination of officers of the department of buildings." An attorney to the fire department, who shall be "a person regularly admitted to the bar and practicing in the city of New York," is to be appointed by the fire commissioners at a salary of $4,000.

Another provision is that all officers "charged with the duty of expending or incurring obligations payable out of the moneys raised by tax" must regulate expenditures so that they "shall not in any one year exceed the amount appropriated by the board of estimate and apportionment," and "no charge, claim or liability shall exist or arise against said city for any sum in excess of the amount appropriated."—Laws of N. Y. (1880), chap. 522.

June 9 The elevated tracks, structures, etc., in Battery Park are ordered removed within six months.—N. Y. Times, Je 10, 1880. See Je 30, 1891.

16 The legislature passes a law for the improvement of Morningside Park (see O 11, 1873).—Laws of N. Y. (1880), chap. 565. See, further, Je 12, 1889.

23 "The last chapter of the Olympic Theatre, which has under different names been a place of public amusement for about a quarter of a century" is completed by the sale of "such play-house effects as remained in the establishment."—N. Y. Times, Je 25, 1880. See L. M. R. K., III: 984, under "Laura Keene's Varieties."

July 14 "At no time since the panic of 1873 have such large sums been expended in the erection of first-class business blocks and elegant and substantial private dwellings as at present. . . .

"At the head of the latter class, and, in fact, of anything of the kind heretofore attempted in New York, are the new and (actually) palatial residences of the Vanderbilts now approaching completion on upper Fifth-avenue. The most costly and conspicuous of these are the two companion houses at Fifty-first-street and Fifth-avenue, which are designed the one for William H. and the other for his sisters, Mrs. Shepherd and Mrs. Sloan. The cost is $750,000 apiece. . . . Both are of brown-stone, and both are as utterly unlike the popular conception of 'brown-stone fronts' as can well be imagined. In place of the innumerable narrow floors, piled one upon another, capped by French roofs and flaring cornices, are modest and quiet exteriors in the Renaissance style, three stories in height, with fluted pilasters at the sides, and fancy carving in stone—grape-vines, oak-leaves, &c,—over the windows. . . . J. B. Snook is the architect of both houses. [Messrs. Herter were the architects; J. B. Snook assisted with the building details.—Mr. Vanderbilt's House and Collection, by Edward Strahan (pseud.); L. M. R. K., III: 953.] The carpets and upholstery of both are being made to order in various cities of Europe.

"A third house, with front and side walks of heavy cut stone, is being finished on the north of the pair already described, for Mr. William K. Vanderbilt. [Designed by Richard M. Hunt, this was the finest town residence in America, until taken down in Feb.-Mar., 1926.]

"Cornelius, son and heir of William H., has a massive new house [see My 15, 1879] of red brick with stone trimmings in process of completion at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth-avenue [designed by George B. Post]. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Jl 14, 1880. Regarding the Vanderbilt mansions, see also ibid., D 9, 1879, and Ag 25, 1881; Am. Architect and Bldg. News, My 21, 1881; Harper's Weekly, XXIV: 41, 43; and L. M. R. K., III: 953.

17 P. T. Barnum has formed a stock company to erect a museum building which shall combine a Coliseum, opera-house, lecture-hall, vast show-rooms, and an immense tropical garden. The capital stock is $3,000,000. The board of directors is composed of leading capitalists and business men, including W. H. Vanderbilt and Henry Cummins. The site is the Madison Square Garden, "famous for its dog shows, revival meetings, walking matches, and recently for falling down and endangering the lives of pleasure-seekers within its walls [see Ap 21].

"The size of the building will be 200 by 425 feet, covering the entire block. It is to be five stories in height, constructed of brick, stone, and iron in the most substantial manner. At the southwesterly corner there will be a brick and iron observatory, about 250 feet high, provided with an elevator, and furnished around its dome or apex with a coronet of electric lights, . . . July 17

"The lower story of the building will be known as the Coliseum. . . . To be used for sporting events, big balls, etc.

"The first or ground floor of the Museum will be devoted in part to an opera-house or theatre, to be known as Barnum's Opera-House. This room will have a seating capacity greater than that of any other theatre in the city. . . .

". . . $800,000 already paid to the Harlem Railroad for the ground. . . .

"The work of tearing down the old Garden . . . will begin some time during August, and the Museum will be completed before the summer of 1881."—Harper's Weekly, XXIV: 453, 455. The old Madison Square Garden was not demolished until 1889 (q.v., Ag 7).

The Egyptian obelisk or Cleopatra's Needle, presented to the U. S. by Ismail Pasha, Khedive of Egypt, arrives in New York Harbour from Alexandria.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 21, 1880; Harper's Weekly, XXIV: 598, 604, which contains view. See O 9, 1880, and Ja 22, 1881, 20

"The Church-theatre, as the hybrid building on the east side of Broadway, opposite Waverly-place, is commonly named, is soon to be pulled down and a business block put in its place. Formerly the Church of the Messiah, when that society removed up town it was turned into a theatre, and has for 15 years or thereabout been noted as the grave of nearly every sort of entertainment undertaken there."—*N. The corner-stone of the foundation on which the Egyptian obelisk (see Jl 27) is to stand is laid in Central Park with Masonic ceremonies.—N. Y. Times, O 10, 1880. See Ja 22, 1881. 9

A great Republican torchlight parade is held on the occasion of Gen. Grant's visit to the city. About 60,000 prominent bankers and business men march, and the spectators number more than 300,000. The whole line of march from 13th St. to 59th St. is brilliantly illuminated.—N. Y. Times, O 10–13, 1880. On Oct. 23, an elaborate reception was held in Grant's honour at the Union League Club.—Ibid., O 24, 1880. 11

20 Broadway, from 14th to 26th St., is lighted with the Brush electric arc light, the lights being placed a block apart. At Menlo Park an exhibition of the Edison electric light system was given for the benefit of members of the New York common council. The New York exhibition was intended to determine the question of expense. The power-house was at 133 W. 25th St. The Tribune stated: "In the development of the electric light, the United States Electric Lighting Company occupies an honoured place. Its lamps are of two kinds—one made on the incandescent principle, and the other on the principle of the voltaic arc. What this company has already accomplished may be seen at the Equitable Building and other large buildings in this city."—N. Y. Tribune, D 21, 1880; N. Y. Times, D 20, 1880. On Sept. 4, 1882 (q.v.), the current was turned on at the first Edison electric light station in New York at 257 Pearl St.

28 A mass meeting is held at Cooper Union, and steps are taken which lead to the organisation of the County Democracy. The object of this was to take the leadership of the Democratic party out of the hands of Tammany Hall and Irving Hall and to give it to the mass of the party's voters.—Ann. Cyclop. (1881), 652; N. Y. Times, D 29, 1880.

— In this year, Alexander III ascended the throne of Russia and began a rigorous policy of reaction. His persecution of the Jews was so severe that tens of thousands left the country, beginning the great Jewish emigration to the United States.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 670–72.

— In this year, France entered upon her protectorate of Tunis.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 554.

— In this year, through the efforts of Gladstone, the "Land Act of 1881" was passed, providing that henceforth the rent of an Irish farm was to be determined by a court established for the purpose and that the government was to loan money on easy terms to the Irish peasants to enable them to buy out their landlords.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 491–92.

— In this year, the Canadian Pacific Railway was begun. It was completed in 1885.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 530.

— The Anneke Jans case is finally disposed of "by the denial of the application of Rynear Van Geisen for letters of administration on the estate of Anneke Jans Bogardus, who died in Albany about two centuries ago, and the affirmation of the decree of the surrogate by the Court of Appeals. . . . This famous estate once included several hundred lots in New York City [belonging to Trinity Church], since built upon, and of enormous aggregate value."—Mag. Am. Hist. (1881), VII: 234. See also N. Y. Times, Je 4, 1881.

— In this year, Harlem (City of New York): Its Origin and Early Annals, by James Riker, was published.

— Judge was founded in this year.—King's Handbook (1893), 626.

— In this year, the name of Scribner's Monthly (see 1870) was changed to the Century.—Tassin, The Mag. in Am., 287–302.

1881 — In this year, The Critic, edited by Jeanette L. and Joseph B. Gilder, was founded.—King's Handbook (1893), 626.

— In this year, Robert Macoy of No. 4 Barclay St. issued an illustrated guide-book to the city, entitled Old Landmarks; or, How to see New York and Its Environs.

— In this year were published by Spielmann & Brush, Hoboken, Certified copies of original maps of property in New York city, filed in the register's office and elsewhere, together with register's index to maps and important notes regarding the same, comprising in all 93 folio maps, coloured. Among them, for example, is Goerck's map of the Common Lands, 1796. See A. Pl. 9-b, Vol. III, with its description, III: 869.

— In this year was published by the Manhattan Railway an Official map and guide to all the elevated railways in New York city; size, 24 x 29 in.

— In this year was published, by David L. Bradley, Bradley's map of the water front. Revised annually; size, 22 x 26 in. It appeared also in 1882.

— New York at this time was often referred to as "the worst paved City in the world." It was urged that asphalt, a "noiseless pavement," like that of Paris, London, and Berlin, be used on Fifth Ave. The commissioner of public works reported that a successful test had been made of it from July, 1878, to 1881, on the block between 26th and 27th Sts., on Fifth Ave., in front of the Hotel Brunswick.—N. Y. Tribune, My 9, 1881.

— In this year, John Jacob Astor, a grandson of the founder of the family in America, erected a new building adjoining the Astor Library, corresponding in size and style with the earlier ones (see Ja 9, 1854, and S 1, 1859). He also made extensive improvements in the interior. The books at this time numbered nearly 200,000 volumes.—Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 703–4.

— The ruins of Fort Washington, erected in 1776, are "still visible on the line of 182d street, within the grounds of James Gorden Bennett, at a height of two hundred and thirty feet above the river."—Mag. Am. Hist. (1881), VI: 94.

— During 1881–82, the Jerome residence at 26th St. (see Mr 31, 1868) was occupied by the Turf Club.—L. M. R. K., III: 950.

— In this year, the Maison Dorée (formerly the Union Place Hotel—see 1871) became known as the Morton House.—Descrip. of Pl. 135, III: 703.

— In this year, the Architectural League of New York was organized. In 1893, it included in its membership St. Gaudens, Ward, McKim, Tiffany, Ware, Upjohn, Renwick, Rich, Port, Bruce Price, Le Brun, Hunt, Gibson, Robertson, and other well-known architects and artists.—King's Handbook (1893), 310.

Jan. 2 The Mount St. Vincent buildings in Central Park at East 103d St., used for the past 16 years partly as a restaurant and partly as a museum, are totally destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ja 3, 1881. The present tavern was built on the site in 1883.—16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 434. See F 18, 1891.

6 Dr. G. M. Beard begins a series of mesmeric séances before the scientific men of the city.—N. Y. Times, Ja 7 and 11, 1881.

11 "The sale by auction [as ordered—see N 18, 1870] of the Tontine Building, at [the n. w. cor. of] Wall and Water streets, in the Exchange Salesroom, at noon yesterday [Ja 11], closed out the famous Tontine Association, formed in 1792 [error for 1791, Mr 30, q.v.] by a number of merchants and others. The original shareholders numbered 203, and the shares were valued at $200 each. The profits of each share were to go to the owner during the life-time of a person whom he selected, and at the latter's death such share was to become invalid. Finally, when only seven of those selected should remain alive, the entire fund, whatever it might be, was to be divided among the existing shareholders. The property cost originally $42,787. The building was known as the Tontine Coffee-house, and was a great resort for merchants." The property was "knocked down" to Peter J. O'Donohue, tea merchant, for $138,550. It comprised Nos. 84, 86, and 88 Wall St., which have a total frontage of 72 ft. 4 in. on that street, 60 ft. 9 in. on Water St., 51 ft. 6 in. on the west side, and 80 ft. 7 in. in the rear.—N. Y. Times, Ja 12, 1881; L. M. R. K., III: 981. The twelve-storey "Tontine Building," which was erected in 1901, now stands on the site.

Feb. 22 The obelisk or Cleopatra's needle, presented to the U. S. by Ismail Pasha (see Jl 20, 1880) and erected on its pedestal in Central Park on Jan. 22, is formally given to New York by the federal gov-

1881 Feb. 22 ernment, the speech of presentation being made by Wm. M. Evarts, secretary of state. The obelisk stands 90 feet high on a knoll on the west of the Museum of Art. It dates from the 16th century B. C., having been quarried at Syene, Egypt, and erected at Heliopolis by Thothmes III. In the year 12 B. C. it was removed to Alexandria by the Romans. The cost of transporting it to New York and erecting the pedestal and base was defrayed by Wm. H. Vanderbilt.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 23, 1881; N. Y. World, F 23, 1881; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., IV: 227–28; Harper's Weekly, XXV: 101, 110. For a voluminous explanation of the inscriptions and of the ancient history of the obelisk, see Moldenke's N. Y. Obelisk (1891). The date of presentation to the city is erroneously given as Feb. 2, 1881 in L. M. R. K., III: 964.

Mar. 1 Thos. A. Edison has moved from Menlo Park to New York City, and the headquarters of the Edison Electric Light Co. have been established at No. 65 Fifth Ave. Edison now considers his electric light invention complete and will devote his time to introducing it into various cities. Detroit has already given the company permission to lay wires in the streets and was the first city to grant this to an electric light company.—N. Y. Times, Mr 1, 1881. See Mr 22.

4 James A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur are inaugurated as president and vice-president respectively.—N. Y. Times, Mr 5, 1881.

5 The Union League Club takes possession of its present club-house at the north-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 39th St. It is considered "the most elegant and luxurious yet built in America."—N. Y. Times, F 16, Mr 4–6, 1881. The first regular meeting in the new club-house took place on March 10.—Ibid., Mr 11, 1881. See also view in Harper's Weekly, XXIII: 746, and ibid., XXV: 118. Dickel's Riding Academy was formerly on the site.—L. M. R. K., III: 962.

22 The board of aldermen authorises the Edison Electric Light Co. (see Mr 1) to lay tubes, wires, conductors, and insulators, and to erect lamp-posts in all the streets of the city under the supervision of the department of public works. The city is to receive one cent per lineal foot for each street occupied.—N. Y. Times, Mr 22 and 23, 1881. On April 19, this resolution was repassed over the mayor's veto.—Eve. Post, Ap 19, 1881.

Apr. 11 Isaac Newton, chief engineer of the department of public works, submits to Commissioner Thompson a report on the city's water supply. He states that the Croton aqueduct has been delivering for the past seven years "a maximum safe discharge" of 95 million gallons per day. "From the time the maximum discharge was first reached to the present the population of the city has increased over twenty-five per cent., so that in each successive year the inadequacy of the water supply has become more and more serious. . . . The time is not far distant when the supply will not in many localities rise above the basement, while in some situations the water will be almost wholly cut off. . . . The works now in progress on the Bronx and Byram rivers . . . will probably require three years to complete . . . [and] this new supply is so small that the rapid increase of population and manufacturies will soon catch up with it."

A table is given of the quantity of water that "has run to waste over the Croton Dam from the year 1868 to 1880," and the construction of a "new aqueduct from the Croton Valley" is urged as "the only practical means of securing an ample supply of water." Mr. Newton concludes: "No other city of equal importance in Christendom is so dependent upon a single engineering structure. A liberal supply of pure water is as important as sunlight, and I believe it is the sense of the community that such a supply should be led into the City as soon as it is possible to do so."—New York Water Supply. Report to Hubert O. Thompson, Commissioner of Public Works, by Isaac Newton, Chief Engineer (1881), in N Y. P. L. "The necessity of constructing a new aqueduct from the Croton River to the city of New York, was realized by the Department of Public Works as early as 1875, when preliminary surveys were made for that purpose. Owing to the condition of the city's finances, it was deemed unadvisable to construct the works at that time, and no further steps were taken in this matter until the severe droughts of 1880 and 1881 drew new attention to the inadequacy of the water-supply of the city."—Wegmann, op. cit., 108. See F 23, 1882.

12 The board of aldermen grants permission to the Brush Electric Company to lay wires, conduits, etc., in the streets of New York for illuminating purposes.—Eve. Post, Ap 12, 1881. This was vetoed by the mayor on April 19.—Ibid., Ap 19, 1881. See Ap 21.

Apr. 12

The Metropolitan Opera House Co. takes title to the land bounded by Broadway and Seventh Ave., 39th to 40th Sts. The price paid is $596,700.—N. Y. Times, Mr 9, 10, and 15, 1881; Eve. Post, Ap 12, 1881. See O 22, 1883.

" 17 "The remarkable increase in building operations which is now manifesting itself in this City . . . is strikingly exhibited on the West Side, especially in the upper and more northerly portions." The proposed buildings include the "Windemere apartment-house" on the south-west corner of 57th St. and Ninth Ave., the Inca Hotel at 62d St. and Broadway, and a "mammoth hotel" which is to extend on Eighth Ave. from 72d St. to 73d St.—N. Y. Times, Ap 17, 1881.

" 21 "In the office of the Brush Electric Light Company, at Seventeenth street and Broadway, may now be seen a large drawing showing the proposed tower which will support the Brush lights to be used in Union Square in case the Brush Company's bid for lighting Broadway from the Battery to Forty-second street is accepted. The tower will be similar in construction to one recently erected in Akron, Ohio, and is to be made of heavy sheet boiler iron, made in lengths of four feet, and riveted together. The diameter at the base will be only four feet and at the top one foot. Four cables will run from the top of the tower to the four corners of the square in order to keep the structure steady. The total height of the tower, including foundation, will be two hundred and eighty feet, or about one hundred feet higher than the top of the cupola on the Domestic Sewing Machine Building at Broadway and Fourteenth street.

"The lighting apparatus will consist of an iron triangle, upon each point of which will be two electric lamps of six thousand candle power each. . . . The iron triangle supporting the lamps will slide up and down the towers upon oiled ways, and will be lowered every morning. Its weight of about a ton will be nearly balanced by lead bars which will run inside the column, and one man can easily manage the whole affair. Changing the carbons will not be more than half an hour's work.

"In view of the results of the tower lights at Akron, Mr. Hayes, the secretary of the New York company, feels justified in promising that the light given by such a tower as the one designed for Union Square will make it possible to read a newspaper at a distance of half a mile from the light. If the first tower is found to work satisfactorily, another will be placed in Madison Square.

"Mr. Hayes is confident that a franchise will be accorded to the Brush Company within the next two weeks, when the city will be able to accept the bids put in by the Electric Light Company in opposition to the gas companies. Since the Brush lights were first used in this city, in Christmas week, they have failed but twice—one for four hours toward the end of January, and at another time for one hour. . . ."—Eve. Post, Ap 21, 1881. See Jl 1.

" 26 By act of legislature, a street cleaning department is created and placed under the charge of a single commissioner, to be appointed by the mayor with the approval of the board of health, and subject to removal in the same way. He shall hold office for six years at a salary of $6,000 per year. Exclusive charge of "the cleaning of streets and the removal of ashes and garbage" is in his hands, except that any special contracts must have the approval of the board of 1881 May 26 estimate and apportionment. Employees "may be provided with some distinctive dress or portion thereof, or some badge designated by said commissioner, to be so worn that they shall be easily recognized as employees of the department."—Laws of N. Y. (1881), chap. 367.

June 4 The use of the reservoir on Fifth Ave. between 40th and 42d Sts. is discontinued, and the commissioner is directed to remove the structure and the pipes connecting with it. The land occupied by the reservoir and the land to the west known as Reservoir Square are to be converted into a public park.—Laws of N. Y. (1881), chap. 456. This act was repealed on May 16, 1883.—Ibid. (1883), chap. 415. See O 18, 1881.

" "The curiosity of persons passing through the Bowery has been aroused during the last day or two by gibbet-like poles which are being set up under the elevated railroad structure. These poles have been erected by the Brush Electric Light Company [see Ap 21] for the support of the wires intended for the general distribution of their lighting power. . . . The poles are placed close under the structure so as to offer the least obstruction to the streets, and they are to be painted a uniform color. The line begins at the Brush Company's station, No. 90 Walker-street, extends up the Bowery and Third-avenue to Fourteenth-street, thence to Broadway and Fifth-avenue where two branches are formed, one running up Fifth-avenue to Thirty-fourth-street, and the other up Broadway to Forty-second-street. The power for the Bowery line will be partly supplied from a station at No. 640 Broadway. Another line, supplied partly from the Walker-street station and partly by a station at No. 48 Washington-street, will be run down Broadway to the Battery and connect with Pier 1 North River, where Brush lights are already furnished to the Iron Steam-boat Company. These lines are intended not to light the streets, but to furnish lights for private purposes, both along the avenues and side streets. The derrick for raising the 150-foot pole by which the Brush Company is to light Union-square is now in position, and the pole will probably be raised to-day. . . . The company has been invited by the Park Department to furnish proposals for lighting Central Park, and if an agreement is entered into a station for supplying the power will be established in the neighborhood of Sixty-third-street and Third-avenue."—N. Y. Times, Jl 1, 1881.

4 The board of aldermen passes the following resolutions:

"Whereas, The attempt to assassinate James A. Garfield, President of the United States, has filled the minds of the people of this City with horror and detestation—horror at the unnatural crime that would strike down the chosen ruler of the fifty millions of her people, and detestation of the vile instrument who attempted the sacrilegious murder, and

"Whereas, It is the duty of the Common Council to give expression to the feelings of indignant sorrow that penetrates its members and all classes of our citizens in view of the unnatural crime, to manifest gratitude that the attempt to take the life of the President has thus far failed, and to cherish the hope that his life may be saved, be it therefore

"Resolved, That this Common Council deeply deplore and indignantly denounce the villainous attempt to take the life of the President of the United States; we gratefully and thankfully acknowledge the mercy of Him who rules the destinies of nations that he interposed between the pistol of the assassin and the life of our venerated chief magistrate, and we fervently implore and beseech Him who carries the destinies of nations in the hollow of His hand to spare the life of President Garfield and restore him to administer the affairs of the high office to which he was chosen by the people of this Republic." Similar resolutions were adopted by the Tammany Society.—N. Y. Times, Jl 5, 1881.

July 12 The aldermen pass resolutions, notwithstanding the veto of Mayor Grace, protesting against the "proposed spoliation of the City Hall Park—'The Common'—revered for its memories by every New Yorker," in the interest of the trustees of the Brooklyn Bridge. "Our taxpayers" already are forced "to pay millions of dollars towards defraying the cost of their bridge structure—for the sole benefit of the City of Brooklyn."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1881), CLXIII: 135–38.

22 Vice-Pres. Arthur is formally inaugurated president. A private ceremony had been held on Sept. 19.—N. Y. Times, S 20, 21, and 23, 1881.

29 Pres. Arthur arrives in New York. During his stay he received numerous visitors, but there were no public demonstrations. He returned to Washington on Oct. 4.—N. Y. Times, S 30–O 5, 1881. He again visited the city in November.—Ibid., N 4–13, 1881.

Oct. 10 A disastrous fire destroys the entire block from 33d to 32d Sts., Fourth to Lexington Aves., and injures several other buildings in the neighbourhood, including the Park Avenue Hotel. Losses amounting to several millions are sustained, and 333 horses are killed.—N. Y. Times, O 11–13, 1881. See also Harper's Weekly, XXV: 717. The block burned over was occupied by the car-barns and stables of the street railway. These were rebuilt.

13 Seven descendants of Baron Steuben arrive in New York on their way to the centennial celebration of the battle of Yorktown. They are welcomed by salutes from Governor's Island and the Brooklyn Navy Yard and received by a committee of distinguished citizens. In the evening they were addressed by Mayor Grace and presented with a copy of the complimentary resolutions adopted by the board of aldermen. German regiments and the German societies held a torchlight parade which was reviewed by the guests from the plaza at Union Square. The celebration closed with the singing, by about 6,000 people, of "Die Wacht Am Rhein," "La Marseillaise," "Hail Columbia," and "Yankee Doodle."—N. Y. Times, O 14, 1881.

18 The common council passes a series of resolutions approving the action of Orlando B. Potter, Nathan C. Ely, and William H. Webb in opposing the attempt to remove the distributing reservoir at Fifth Ave. and 42nd St. They state that "An attempt is now being made to convert the same into a public park and thereby deprive the Corporation of private property held by it since 1686, without compensation and without the consent of the Corporation." They also declare that the block bounded by 40th and 42d Sts., Fifth and Sixth Aves., has been appraised at $3,000,000. They resolve "That the attempt by the Legislature of this State to take away from the City of New York, without compensation, the block of land situated between 40th and 42nd Streets, Fifth and Sixth Avenues, granted to it in 1686, in fee, being part of the grants from the Crown of England, and which grants have been confirmed to it by the Constitution of 1777, 1821, and 1846, which lands are worth many millions of dollars and are pledged to the payment of the debt of the City, now amounting to $100,000,000, be resisted until a final decision in the courts can be obtained deciding 9 Oscar Wilde delivers his first lecture in America, at Chickering Hall. The subject is "The English Renaissance." One of the newspapers, describing the occasion, said: "As the youthful Irish poet and clever æsthetic poseur . . . appeared last evening, with his massive form clad in full dress coat, white vest, black knee breeches and black silk stockings, . . . the love of notoriety, which is said to be one of his striking characteristics, must have been much gratified. The audience . . . was of great size and fine quality. He was listened to with the most quiet and thorough attention, the silence at times being almost painful, . . . by an assemblage which completely filled the hall, the walls of the main floor and balcony being lined by those who were unable to obtain seats. . . . Everybody known in New York society seemed to be there, the solid as well as the lighter element being represented." After the lecture, a reception in Wilde's honour was held at the home of Mrs. John Mack, No. 365 Fifth Ave. His dress was thus described in detail: "Mr. Wilde wore an evening dresscoat, which if worn by a commonplace young man would have been pronounced supremely old fashioned. A double breasted white duck vest, with six pearl buttons, was cut low enough to display a broad expanse of white shirt front of piqué, the grain of the fabric running horizontally. Its immaculate purity was made more apparent by a large solitaire, composed of pearls and diamonds. From his watch pocket a silken fob depended. To this several gold chains were attached. These and the pin were his only articles of jewelry. Under a deep, rather too wide, turned down collar was folded a two-inch cambric cravat. His trousers, if such a word is to be found in his vocabulary, proved that his taste in dressing was beyond the reach and comprehension of the ordinary society votary. They were of shining black doeskin, cut to display an ample allowance of thighs, and reaching to the knees. The latter part of his anatomy and his lower extremities were encased in black silk stockings. Patent leather pumps tied with large black silk bows completed his outfit. His ears struggled to make their way out of the flowing locks which covered them."—N. Y. Herald, Ja 10, 1882.

Commissioner Thompson submits to Mayor Grace a report on the "Proposed New Aqueduct and Storage Reservoir for Additional Supply from Croton River" (see Ap 11, 1881). He says that proposals have been considered by the department "of obtaining pure fresh water from the upper Hudson river, from Lake George, Erie, Ontario, or Champlain, from the Passaic or Hackensack rivers in New Jersey, from the Housatonic river in Massachusetts, or Connecticut, or from the streams in Rockland and Orange counties," and they have all been rejected in favour of an enlarged Croton system. The project of "using the salt water which surrounds the city, as an auxiliary to the city's water supply" is open to so many objections that "engineers do not consider it worthy of serious consideration." The capacity of the Croton water-shed to furnish a minimum supply of 250,000,000 gallons is proven by "accurate observations and measurements of the rain-fall and the quantity of water running over the Croton dam for the past sixteen years," and "the whole question is narrowed down to the selection of the plans and means to secure sufficient storage and to conduct the water to the city."

Feb. 23

The construction of a new dam "on the Croton river at Quaker Bridge, about 4½ miles below the present dam, and five miles above the mouth of the river, forming a reservoir of 3,635 acres in area," is recommended; also a conduit from this dam to the Harlem River, which shall be "a masonry aqueduct, circular in shape, twelve feet in diameter, and capable of delivering about 250,000,000 gallons of water per day" The cost is estimated at $14,000,000. —New York Water Supply. Grace, on Proposed New Aqueduct and Storage Reservoir for Additional Supply from Croton River (1882), in N. Y. P. L. See Ja 9, 1883.

1 The American Art Association is formed by Jas. F. Sutton, R. Austin Robertson, and Thomas E. Kirby, for "the encouragement and promotion of American art." It possessed the lease of the American Art Gallery, consisting of a room, 46 by 36 ft., with offices adjoining, in the building of Wm. Kurtz, a photographer, at 6 and 8 E. 23d St. This building was connected with one having an L on 22d St., occupied by the Palette Club, whose members held exhibitions in the Kurtz gallery. Several rooms in the Pike building (later the Bartholdi Hotel), at the E. 23d St. corner of Broadway, were included in the lease. For the early history of the association, see the Address of Mr. Thomas E. Kirby . . . at the opening of the new Am. Art Galleries . . . Nov. 10, 1922. The business of this association consists primarily of the exhibition and sale of works of art and literature.

" Mayor Edson communicates his first message to the board of aldermen. He believes that those "into whose hands the people have committed the city's finances, government and improvements" should have a "thorough grasp of the stern facts" of the city's "comparatively recent history." New York's manufacturing interests, in 1825, "had not yet assumed noticeable proportions," but today she has become the "largest manufacturing city in the United States," and her advance in commerce and trade has been "no less marked and important." The city has today "a resident population of fully 1,300,000," while in 1842 the number was only 336,000. Improvements have "lamentably failed to keep pace with this remarkable growth." It is obvious "that our wharves and piers are inadequate to the accommodation of the commerce which seeks them; that the supply of water is wholly insufficient for domestic and manufacturing purposes; that the force and facilities for extinguishing fires are too limited in many portions of the city; that the police accommodations in several districts are by no means what they should be; that hospital accommodations, especially for the reception of those affected with contagious diseases, are almost entirely wanting; and that the work of beautifying the city has been neglected and cannot be viewed with just pride by its citizens." The mayor states with emphasis that the government has "no more important and pressing matter for consideration" than "an increased supply of pure water;" he refers to the plan submitted by the commissioner of public works to Mayor Grace, on Feb. 23, 1882 (q.v.), as "possibly the best that can be devised," but believes it wise, "before finally adopting any plan, to have the opinion of business men, as well as engineers, concerning its practicability, the probable cost, and the time required for construction. The execution of whatever plan may be adopted should be surrounded with proper safeguards against extravagance or unnecessary expenditure; to this end I believe you will join me in the recommendation that to a controlling extent the work be supervised by men of known integrity who possess some practical knowledge of such matters" (see Ja 9 and Je 1).—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1883), CLXIX: 19–30.

The mayor makes "useful suggestions as to practicable improvements," says the editor of the World, "such as the building of subways for all the pipes and wires necessary for municipal or private uses, the building of new police station-houses, the enlargement of the accommodations of the Health Department, a more equitable distribution of school-room space, the propriety of relieving the Park Department of all duties not relating to the parks proper, and the hearty coöperation of the municipality in the improvement of Harlem River." The message is termed "a business-like paper, such as might be addressed by an incoming president of a private corporation who had been examining its business thoroughly to its directors and its stockholders."—N. Y. World, Ja 2, 1883. The Times thinks Mayor Edson's message "is neither very instructive nor particularly suggestive."—N. Y. Times, Ja 2, 1883.

" Concerning the "Harlem River Improvement" (see F 18, 1875), Mayor Edson, in his message to the board of aldermen, says: "The State Legislature has at various times ceded by enactments the right of way, has authorized the courts to condemn the land, and has provided for the expenses of commissioners to effect the condemnation. Furthermore, Congress has appropriated toward this improvement the sum of $400,000."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1883), CLXIX: 45–46.

Jan. 3 The new barge office at the Battery (see O 1, 1878) is first opened for use.—N. Y. Times, Ja 3, 1883. Cf. Ann. Rep., Sup. Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1902), 190. The total cost of work on the building and dock to June 30, 1892, was $573,441.—Ibid. (1892), 210.

7 The French societies of New York hold funeral services at Tammany Hall in honour of Leon Gambetta.—N. Y. Times, Ja 4 and 8, 1883.

9 On the basis of a report of the commissioner of public works submitted to the mayor on Feb. 23, 1882 (q.v.), the state senate passes a resolution requesting the present mayor to appoint five citizens who, in conjunction with himself, shall examine this report and make recommendations to the senate concerning plans "for an additional water supply."—Senate Jour. (1883), 106th sess., 25. See Mr 7.

17 The sum of $73,638.97 has been subscribed for the pedestal of the Statue of Liberty (see N 28, 1882).—N. Y. Times, Ja 17, 1883. On Feb. 3, a dramatic entertainment was held at the Academy of Music for the benefit of the fund. It was "one of the most brilliant social gatherings that has ever been held in a public place in this city."—Ibid., Ja 14, 18, 28, F 4, 1883. See also ibid., Mr 2, 1883. See Jl 4 and Ag 5, 1884.

20 Mayor Edson returns to the aldermen with his veto a resolution permitting the erection of a watering-trough on the corner of Tenth Ave. and 24th St. He gives two reasons for his action: First, because "there is a watering-trough only one block distant;" second, because of the "pressing need for economy in the use of water" (see F 23, 1882).—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1883), CLXIX: 165. Mayor Edson's term of office was characterized by a great many vetoes thwarting the often ill-considered liberality of the aldermen in granting privileges. These privileges included obstructions on the sidewalk in the form of storm-doors, bay-windows, meat-racks, stands for the sale of oysters and other commodities, posts, poles, signs, bill-boards, curtains, awnings, coal-boxes, and thermometers. —Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1883), consult indices of Vols. CLXIX, CLXX, CLXXI, CLXXII, under "Mayor."

30 The state assembly adopts the following resolution: "That the mayor of the city of New York be and he is hereby invited to inform the House what legislation, if any, he may consider necessary in order to economize, simplify and improve the local government of New York City."—Assemb. Jour. (1883), 106th sess., I: 152. See F 8.

" The remains of Archbishop Hughes are transferred from the vault in old St. Patrick's Cathedral (on Prince St.) to the archiepiscopal crypt of the new cathedral on Fifth Ave.—Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 133.

Feb. 1 It being difficult to get English yachts to compete for the "America's" cup, because the American rules of measurement are so different from the English, the New York Yacht Club, on motion of Anson Phelps Stokes, appoints a committee of five "to report on the feasibility of changing the present system of measurement, and to consult with other clubs on the matter. . . ." The committee's report, basing measurement on water-line and sail area, was adopted on May 28. "This made international yacht-racing possible here and revived interest in it."—Stokes Records, I: Part 2, pp. 228–29.

8 In response to the invitation of the state assembly (see Ja 30), Mayor Edson expresses the opinion that "economy and simplicity in the local government . . . can be secured only through the responsibility, to the people, of the Chief Executive for the proper conduct of the business of the necessary departments of the municipal government; and I know of no way to secure such responsibility other than to entrust the Mayor with the power to appoint and to remove the heads of such departments without the intervention of any other authority." He recommends, further, that "the head of each department should consist of one person, who should be held responsible by the Mayor for the faithful and efficient conduct of the affairs of his department."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1883), CLXXIII: 73–74. For the legislation that resulted, see Mr 17, 1884.

9 The legislature enacts that, after July 1, 1883, the marine court of the city of New York shall be called the "city court of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 26.

Mar. 7 In accordance with the resolutions of the senate of Jan. 9 (q.v.), Mayor Edson informs that body that he did appoint a committee to consider with himself "an additional water supply," and he 1883 Mar. 7 submits the report of that committee. It is the unanimous opinion that the Croton water-shed is "the best source from which to obtain an increased supply of water," and that a new aqueduct, "not less than fifteen feet in clear inside diameter," should be built immediately. In regard to additional storage facilities within the water-shed, the committee is "divided in opinion" as to building the "Quaker Bridge Dam" (see F 23, 1882), or "separate dams for storing water in the Croton basin at and above Croton Dam." It recommends that this question be referred to "an unprejudiced commission . . . which shall have charge of the construction of the work."—Report of Committee on Water Supply (1883), in N. Y. P. L. For the legislation that resulted from this action, see Je 1.

13 The board of aldermen, by a vote of 21 to 3, authorises the N. Y. Electric Lines Co. to tear up the streets of the city and to lay telegraph wires underground, on condition that the company pay the city 2% of its gross receipts.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CLXIX: 679–83. This was vetoed by Mayor Edson, on March 27, but was repassed over the veto on April 10.—Ibid., CLXIX: 776–79; CLXX: 141–44. A year later, the legislature required immediate action to remove the overhead wires.—See Je 14, 1884.

16 The state gives its consent to the purchase by the U. S. for customs purposes, of the land bounded by Washington, West, Laight, and Hubert Sts., now leased by the federal government for appraisers' stores.—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 108. Here the present federal building was erected.

21 The common council passes a resolution that the body of John Howard Payne, author of "Home Sweet Home," now on its way to New York "from a far-off grave in Northern Africa," be placed, in the governor's room of the city hall, before being taken to Washington for final burial.—Ordinances, etc., App'd by Mayor, LI: 90. The body arrived from Tunis on March 22, and was ceremoniously conducted to the city hall, where it lay in state until the afternoon of March 23. About 5,000 viewed it. The flags on public buildings and the principal hotels and business houses were also lowered to half mast in Payne's honour.—N. Y. Times, Mr 23 and 24, 1883.

26 Lester Wallack resumes possession of his old playhouse at Broadway and 13th St. (see S 15, 1881) and reopens it as the Star Theatre.—N. Y. Times, Mr 27, 1883; Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, II: 303; L. M. R. K., III: 986. It retained this new name until its demolition in 1901 (q. v.).

Apr. 2 The new Fulton Market (see My 12, 1880), erected on the block bounded by South, Front, Fulton, and Beekman Sts., the site of the old, is opened.—Eve. Post, N 16, 1882; Ap 2, 1883; descrip. of Pl. 104-b, III: 606. It was abandoned by the city in 1914.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., II: 93, 142–46; N. Y. Times, Ag 12, 1917.

4 Peter Cooper dies, and the flags on the public buildings are placed at half mast.—Eve. Post, Ap 4, 1883. He was buried on April 7.—Ibid., Ap 7, 1883.

" The legislature directs the dock department of the city to construct a pier "upon the lands under water situate and belonging to said city, between the new pier, number one, North river, and Castle Garden." The police department is to have the exclusive use of the pier and is authorised to erect thereon such buildings as may be necessary for the transaction of business.—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 189.

21 A law is passed reorganizing the board of emigration, which is placed in the hands of a single commissioner to be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate.—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 286; Ann. Cyclop. (1883), 570.

May 10 The corner-stone of Sherred Hall, the first of the new buildings erected by the General Theological Seminary (see 1882), is laid by the Bishop of Albany. It was dedicated on Jan. 25, 1884. From that time until 1903, nearly a score of buildings were erected. Lorillard Hall, the last, was occupied in Sept., 1903. The buildings occupy what is called Chelsea Square, the block bounded by Ninth and Tenth Aves., 20th and 21st Sts.—Perry, Hist. of Am. Epis. Ch., II: 506–34; Cat., Gen. Theol. Sem. (1912–13), 61; Schaff-Herzog, Encyc. of Religious Knowledge, XI: 384.

16 The corner-stone of the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum is laid at Amsterdam Ave. and 137th St.—Eve. Post, My 16 and 17, 1883; L. M. R. K., III: 954. The building was dedicated the following year.—Daly, Settlement of the Jews in N. Am.; Jewish Encyclop., IX: 280.

May 24 The Brooklyn Bridge is formally opened to the public, and the occasion is celebrated in New York and Brooklyn with parades, speeches, etc. Pres. Arthur, Gov. Cleveland, and other distinguished visitors are present.—Eve. Post, My 24, 1883; Harper's Weekly, XVII: 326. For view of the bridge at this time, see Brown's Book of Old N. Y. (1913), 377. Plans and estimates for the bridge were first drawn by Wm. C. Kingsley in 1865 (q. v.), and it was through his efforts that the first $5,000,000 for the work was raised. The N. Y. Bridge Co. was incorporated on April 16, 1867 (q. v.), and the company was organized in the following May. John A. Roebling was first appointed engineer (see My 23, 1867), but on his death his son, Col. Washington A. Roebling, succeeded him. Work was commenced on the Brooklyn tower, Jan. 3, 1870. The Brooklyn caisson was finished March 11, 1871, and the New York caisson in May, 1872. On June 5, 1874 (q. v.), a law was passed authorising the cities of New York and Brooklyn to assume control of the work, and on May 14, 1875 (q. v.), the N. Y. Bridge Co. was dissolved. The Brooklyn tower was completed in May, 1875, and the New York tower in July, 1876. The first wire rope was stretched across the river, Aug. 14, 1876, and the first crossing on the wire, on a "traveller," took place Aug. 25, 1876. A foot bridge was finished and crossed Feb. 9, 1877, and the last wire was hung on Oct. 5, 1878.

The bridge extends from a point in Brooklyn near the junction of Sands and Washington Sts., about 38½ feet above high-water mark, to Chatham St., New York, near city hall, about 61½ feet above high-water mark. The length of the New York approach is 1,562½ feet. This approach extends from Chatham, over North William, William, Rose, Vandewater, Cliff, Pearl, and Cherry Sts. The New York tower is 350 feet from base to summit, and 271 feet 6 inches above high-water mark. The depth of New York foundations below high-water mark is 78½ feet. The width of opening through tower is 33 feet 9 inches. The length of the main span, tower to tower, 1,595 feet 6 inches; height of main span above high-water mark, 135 feet 6 inches; number of cables, 4; diameter of cables, 15 feet 9 inches; length of each cable, 3,578 feet 6 inches; number of wires in each cable, 5,434; number of wires in the four cables, 21,736.—Green, Complete Hist. of the N. Y. and Brooklyn Bridge. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925, and Lossing, Hist. of N. Y. City, II: 858–61.

30 A panic on the Brooklyn Bridge, precipitated by the fall of a woman, results in the death of 12 persons and the injury of many others.—Eve. Post, My 31 and Je 1, 1883.

June — The Chamber of Commerce leases a large hall in the new Mutual Life Insurance building on Nassau St., and shortly afterward moved here from Cedar and William Sts. (see 1858).—26th Ann. Rep., Ch. of Com. (1883–84), XVI. In 1901 (q. v., N 8), it laid the corner-stone of its own building.

1 An act is passed by the legislature in which commissioners are named "to provide new reservoirs, dams and a new aqueduct with the appurtenances thereto, for the purpose of supplying the city of New York with an increased supply of pure and wholesome water" (see Ja 9). These men are to be known as "the aqueduct commissioners." They are required, prior to the final adoption of plans, "to afford to all persons interested a full opportunity to be heard respecting such plan or plans" and to "give public notice of such hearing."—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 490; cf. Ann. Cyclop. (1887), 555–58. "In accordance with this requirement the Aqueduct Commissioners held many public meetings (especially during 1883 and 1884, when the plans for the new aqueduct were being matured) at which prominent engineers and other citizens appeared and expressed their views with reference to the adoption of the proposed plans. . . . The construction of the new aqueduct was commenced in January, 1885. . . . By July 15, 1890 (q. v.), the work was sufficiently advanced to let the water flow through the new aqueduct from Croton Lake to the Central Park reservoir."—Wegmann, op. cit., 114–15.

2 The first provision for a state civil service commission is made by act of legislature. Three persons, to be appointed by the governor with the consent of the senate, and "not more than two of whom shall be adherents of the same party," shall constitute the commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 354. This act was inspired by the "Pendleton Act," which had been passed by the U. S. congress on Jan. 16. Its provisions were not made obligatory on the cities of the state until the following year (see My 29, 1884). Cleveland was governor at this time.

1883 July 20 "The site of the Potter Building, bounded by Park-row, Beekman, and Nassau streets, which was destroyed by fire on the 31st of January, 1882 [q. v.], when several lives were lost, is to be covered by an eleven-story structure to be erected by Mr. Orlando B. Potter, at a cost of about $700,000. . . . N. G. Starkweather is the architect."—N. Y. Times, Jl 20, 1883.

25 The old Washington Market, begun in 1812, is being demolished. It is to be replaced by a new iron building.—N. Y. Times, Jl 25, 1883. The corner-stone, dated Oct. 8, 1812, was unearthed on Aug. 7.—Ibid., Ag 8, 1883. See Je 12, 1884.

Aug. 18 The first trial trip of a passenger car over the cable road of the Brooklyn Bridge is made with great success.—N. Y. Times, Ag 19, 1883. Cars began running regularly over the bridge on Sept. 24.—Ibid., S 25 and 26, 1883. See also ibid., D 28, 1883.

Oct. 17 The centennial of the disbanding of Washington's army is celebrated with elaborate ceremonies at Newburgh, N. Y.—N. Y. Times, O 16, 18, 19, and 20, 1883.

20 Henry Irving and Ellen Terry arrive at New York.—N. Y. Times, O 21, 1883. On Oct. 27, Irving was the guest of honour at a dinner given by the Lotos Club.—Ibid., O 28, 1883.

22 The Metropolitan Opera House (see Ap 12, 1881) is opened, on the block bounded by Broadway, 39th St., 40th St., and Seventh Ave. The opera is "Faust," Italo Companini and Christine Nilsson being the principal singers.—N. Y. Times, O 23, 1883; Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, III: 442; King's Handbook (1893), 588. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985. It was destroyed by fire on Aug. 27, 1892 (q. v.).

Nov. 26 Mlle. Giglio Nordica (Lillian Norton) makes her début, at the Academy of Music in "Faust."—N. Y. Times, N 27, 1883.

" Mayor Edson, pursuant to the provisions of the Rapid Transit Act (see Je 18, 1875), appoints five "Rapid Transit Commissioners." The immediate occasion of the mayor's action is the receipt by him of a declaration, signed by "more than fifty reputable householders and taxpayers," that there is need "for a steam railway or railways for the transportation of passengers, mails or freight," a need which he desires these commissioners to investigate.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXIV: 853–54; Carman, Street Surface Railway Franchises of N. Y. C., 179–80. See Je 30, 1884.

30 The centennial anniversary of Washington's farewell to his officers at Fraunces Tavern is celebrated by the Chamber of Commerce and the N. Y. Historical Society with a turtle feast in the long-room of the historic building. John Austen Stevens proposes that those present shall form a society to be called the "Sons of the Revolution."—N. Y. Times, D 3 and 5, 1883. See also Browne, A Sketch of Fraunces Tavern (1919), 19.

Dec. 4 The Standard Theatre in West 33d St. (see F 20, 1878) is almost totally destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, D 15 and 16, 1883. See also Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, III: 235–50. It was rebuilt and opened on Dec. 23, 1884.—N. Y. Times, D 24, 1884.

14 The "Rapid Transit Commissioners" (see N 30) resolve that "there is a necessity in the City and County of New York for a steam railway or railways for transportation of passengers, mails or freight," and that "such necessity exists, notwithstanding the facilities offered by the steam, surface and elevated railways now in operation."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXIV: 854–55. See Ap 28, 1884.

— During 1884–85, a general conference was held at Berlin, attended by the United States and all the countries of Europe, except Switzerland, to settle claims to the Congo region. The conference recognized the independence of the Congo Free State, and declared that trade in it was to be open to all nations on equal terms. The new state, however, became practically Belgian and in 1908 was made a Belgian colony subject to the Belgian parliament.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 555–57.

— In this year, Gladstone carried through the "Reform Bill of 1884," extending the borough franchise to the counties so that the mass of workingmen would have the right to vote whether they lived in town or country. This bill and those enacted for Scotland and Ireland "increased the total number of the electorate from over three to over five millions" and transformed England "from an oligarchy into a democracy."—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 492–93.

— During the five years from 1880 to 1884 inclusive, 1,928,167 alien immigrants arrived at the port of New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (Washington, 1891), 64, 108, 109.

— In this year, the first long-distance telephone line in the world was constructed, between New York and Boston. In 1885, a line was put into operation between New York and Philadelphia, and in 1892 one between New York and Chicago.—Encyclop. Amer., XXVI: 374–75.

— In this year, Benson J. Lossing's History of New York City was published. It embraces a very brief history of the city from its foundation to 1830, and a full account of its development from 1830 to 1884. It is essentially a social history, describing aspects of home life, business activities, and social organizations during a period of two generations.

— In this year was published a statement, signed by Peter Somers and Wm. Lalor, entitled Reasons why an exterior street should be constructed along the East River, from 64th to 91st St., in the city of New York. See Je 25, 1887.

— About this time, John S. Sargent, the portrait painter, who in this year made his home in London, began to paint portraits in New York, which are now among his best known works.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 316.

Jan. 1 The Charity Organization Society opens its first "Wood Yard," at 402 East 24th St. This was established "not with any idea of providing work at fair prices for the unemployed, but purely as a means by which to test the good faith of those seeking relief under

MAYOR MCCLELLAN, THE RAPID TRANSIT COMMISSIONERS, AND OTHER GUESTS OF THE CHIEF CONTRACTOR, JOHN B. MCDONALD, STARTING ON FIRST INSPECTION TOUR OF THE SUBWAY, JULY 19, 1904. SEE P. 2056.

1884 Jan. 1 the plea of inability to procure work." Tickets were printed which were purchased by charitable persons who gave them to beggars they encountered on the street or at home. Each ticket admitted a man to the "Wood Yard" and entitled him to a "day's work," the cutting of about one-eighth of a cord of wood. Lighter work was provided for men who were not strong. On completion of his task, each "man with a home" received fifty cents in cash, and each homeless man received two meals and a night's lodging. On Feb. 9, 1886, the "Wood Yard" was transferred to the newly-formed New York Labor Bureau Association, but on Oct. 9, 1888, the society resumed its management. After the founding of the municipal lodging-houses in 1886 (q. v., Je 2), many men were sent to the "Wood Yard" by the city to pay for the food and shelter they had received.—Brandt, Charity Organization Soc. of City of N. Y., 1882–1907, 22–23, 107–9, 151, 152, 154.

10 Mayor Edson sends his second annual message to the board of aldermen. He tells of the progress made during the year toward an increased supply of water (see Ja 9, Mr 7, Je 1, 1883), emphasizes "the imperative necessity for economy in the use of water," and declares it to be the duty of all officials and good citizens "to suppress waste, and to oppose any increase in the distribution of water except in cases of extreme necessity." The mayor pronounces the present building laws "crude and inoperative," and recommends that "representative architects, builders, and property owners, in conjunction with the head of the Bureau of Inspection of Buildings [see My 29, 1880], should consult together and agree upon such recommendations to the Legislature as will be likely to secure the adoption of measures which will protect public interests without retarding legitimate individual enterprise."

Another recommendation is that a "thorough investigation" be undertaken "of the present system and of the methods pursued in making valuations of realty [see Mr 14] by the Department of Taxes and Assessments." In an "examination and valuation of eighty-seven pieces of real estate by men possessing expert knowledge," it has been discovered that "the fair aggregate actual value" is $43,030,000, while the valuation of the same property as taken from the books of the department is only $27,496,360. Furthermore, while many of these pieces of property "are valued by the Department at very nearly their full value, many others are valued at less than fifty per cent of their real value." Such a situation, he declares, affects "the whole financial structure of the city, inviting widespread dishonesty in efforts to escape the payment of a just proportion of the necessary expenses of government."

The "necessity for a Municipal Building" is emphasized. "The City Hall . . . has long since ceased to be much more than an Executive Building, with rooms for the Mayor, the Board of Aldermen, and a Governor's Room occupied only on State occasions. Its style of architecture is such that, without marring its present symmetry, it cannot be enlarged to the required extent. Our city is now put to great annual expense in hiring rooms in various buildings for very many of its public offices, and much time is lost in passing from one to another." The mayor believes "a disinterested commission" should consider the possible purchase of the Stewart building at the corner of Chambers St. and Broadway.

By authority conferred upon mayors by the Civil Service Act of June 2, 1883 (q.v.), Mr. Edson says that, with the "assistance of the Civil Service Commissioners of the State," he has prepared "rules and regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of this city," and appointed "Boards of Examiners" who will "immediately enter upon the performance of their duties."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXIII: 29–75.

15 The state assembly appoints a special committee, with Theodore Roosevelt as chairman, "to investigate the local government of the city and county of New York."—Assemb. Jour. (1884), I: 80–83. This committee rendered a report on March 15 (q.v.).

23 The Union League Club holds a reception in honour of Pres. Arthur. Nearly 2,000 guests are present, including Mayor Edson. Wm. M. Evarts, Gen. and Mrs. George B. McClellan, Whitelaw Reid, Henry Ward Beecher, Parke Godwin, Elihu Root, and Cyrus W. Field—Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 113-14.

" The Grolier Club is founded at the residence of Robert Hoe by a group of nine publishers, printers, and book-lovers, for promotion of the arts pertaining to book production. The first rooms occupied by the club were at 64 Madison Ave. The club continued to occupy these quarters until the removal to its new club-house, No. 29 East 32d St., in Nov., 1889. The club was incorporated on Aug. 2, 1888.—Transactions of the Grolier Club, Part II, and records of the club. Jan. 23

As this is the 100th anniversary of the inauguration of James Duane, the first mayor of the city after the Revolution, the board of aldermen passes the following resolutions: 7

"Resolved, That we urgently call upon all the citizens of New York of to-day to follow the example of this eminent man by taking a hearty interest in the welfare of representative popular city government, and by insisting upon its maintenance as an integral part of our political system and as necessary to the due protection of the many and various interests of this vast city; that we regret the growing indifference of our citizens to affairs of State, and especially the neglect of many of our best citizens to attend the polls on election day; and that we deplore the boast of many that they 'take no interest and know nothing of politics,' as predicating a state of affairs which must eventually destroy all hope of self-government by the people;

"Resolved, That in honor of this centennial of the reconstruction of the municipality under a free government, the flags be displayed on the City Hall, and that hereafter upon the recurrence of this, the birthday of our city, the said flags be so displayed."—Ordinances, etc., App'd by Mayor, LII: 16–18.

" Resolutions are passed by the board of aldermen objecting to the employment of "an unnaturalized person of English birth, a subject of the Queen of Great Britain," to prepare the volumes of the "proceedings attendant upon the celebration of the 'Centennial Evacuation Day' [see N 26, 1883], . . . to be placed among the archives of the New York Historical Society." This is called "an insult to the graduates and scholars of the public schools of this city, and its system of education, as well as to the memory of those patriots who a century ago laid down their lives for the perpetuity of American institutions." The resolutions were subsequently reconsidered.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXIII: 277–79. One member of the board declared the resolutions "claptrap, and demagogism of the very worst quality." The Tribune editor believes such resolutions a powerful argument "to limit the activity" of the board. "If their powers for mischief go no further, we shall not suffer much."—N. Y. Tribune, F 8, 1884.

25 The department of parks is directed to improve "the park in Mission Place, in the sixth ward of the City of New York, which park is commonly called Paradise park," by planting trees, placing benches, repairing the fountain, and removing "the iron structure now erected and standing thereon." The sum of $1,000 is to be appropriated for these improvements.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 18. See also L. M. R. K., III: 971.

Mar. 3 On this and the following days, Geo. A. Leavitt & Co. sold at auction the library of the late Henry C. Murphy, of Brooklyn, consisting of Americana and books relating to America.—See cat. of the sale, in N. Y. P. L. At this sale, the Long Island Hist. Soc. secured the Labadist views and the Journal by Jasper Danckaerts and Peter Sluyter which accompanied them for $5.50 (No. 3054). The views are reproduced as Pls. 17, 18, and 19, Vol. I.

14 The special committee of the state assembly appointed, on Jan. 15 (q.v.), to investigate the local government of the city and county of New York, renders its report. They find the whole government in a condition "absolutely appalling." In the county clerk's office, the present fee system is found to net the incumbent during his term of office "the enormous sum of a quarter of a million dollars; a large part of this is not retained by him for his own use, but is turned over to the various political organizations which supported him for the position."

The register's office, unlike the county clerk's, "is not supported in any way by the city," all the expenses being borne by the register personally, who likewise receives all the fees; "a net income of at least $75,000 or $80,000 a year" is lost to the city by this practice.

1884 Mar. 14 The surrogate's office is surrounded by so many irregularities and illegal practices that it seems to be run "simply for purpose of blackmail on those unable to defend themselves." One great source of wrong and injustice is the granting of desk-room in the office to certain persons "not officially connected with the office," who are permitted "to perform certain services for the public at large and to exact from the public therefor amounts greatly in excess of what the services are really worth."

Worse still are conditions in the sheriff's office. "In addition to the fees which are specifically fixed, the sheriff is authorized to receive a reasonable compensation for performing certain other services required of him by law and for which he looks to the county for his pay." The "reasonable compensation" fixed by the board of aldermen for him to receive for informing the secretary of state of each conviction in the city criminal courts is 50 cents; this work brought to the sheriff's pocket last year $26,299. The committee contends an ordinary clerk at a salary of $1,200 to $1,500 could easily perform this routine duty. Further, the sheriff received last year $23,109 from the county for conveying prisoners from the city prison to the courts, a distance of "about six city blocks," at $1.75 a head, and "your committee is of the opinion that $5,000 per annum would be a very liberal allowance" for that work. Then again, for feeding prisoners during the year, he received $29,139, "more than half of which was, undoubtedly, clear profit." The committee also observes that, "by the grace of the board of aldermen," the sheriff "is given about six hundred dollars whenever a person is hung."

Notwithstanding these liberal allowances, it is evident "that the sheriff has in his possession moneys to which he has no possible title, and which were taken from the treasury of the city of New York by means of fraudulent vouchers sworn to by his subordinates; he has benefited to the extent of thousands of dollars by their misdeeds; and the conclusion seems inevitable that these misdeeds were committed by his instigation, or with his connivance. Many of his subordinates and deputies . . . are plainly shown to have been guilty of the most outrageous blackmail and extortion upon the unfortunate beings with whom they were by the nature of their duties, brought in contact."

Most amusing is the situation which the committee discovered in the department of parks. "The commission is four-headed, and the president, who is elected by the board, is the only one who has a salary; as a consequence, the board remained unorganized for two years, each member persistent—refusing to vote for any one except himself for president; and it was only organized at last by the adoption of the curious expedient of a rotary presidency, each member, the Republicans as well as Democrats, being elected in turn for a few months, to what one of them called, in the evidence taken before the committee, 'the office of emolument and trust.' A more undignified squabble for the spoils of office has rarely been seen."

In the department of taxes and assessments the "grossest inequalities" were found to prevail in the manner of assessing real estate. The assessor in charge of assessing "all the immensely valuable property in the first ward," when questioned as to the method by which he arrived at the value of any given lot of land, "was finally forced to admit that it was by means of 'that intuitive consciousness that God gives us all.'"

Embodied in the committee's report are bills for enactment by the legislature to remedy the various situations.—Assembly Docs. (1884), VIII: no. 125. For the resulting legislation, see Laws of N. Y. (1884), chaps. 295, 297, 299, 530, 531.

17 The power of the board of aldermen to confirm appointments made by the mayor is abolished (after the current year) by legislative enactment. This law did not change the power of removal from office.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 43; Ann. Cyclop. (1884), 580. At the time when this measure was introduced the Tribune editor declared: "Elect Mayors that will represent the genuine worth and dignity of this great metropolis and hold them responsible for their appointments. . . . The government of [by] groggeries has gone too far. The majority of our aldermen have risen to their positions from behind the bars of corner dramshops, and few of them know as much of the city charter as they do of the composition of cocktails."—N. Y. Tribune, F 8, 1884.

"The expediency of such a measure," says the Sun, "had long been discussed by the press, and public opinion was finally influenced in its favor by the repeated excuses offered for bad appointments by the present Mayor to the effect that it was useless for him to make good appointments, because the Aldermen would not confirm them."—N. Y. Sun, My 20, 1884. Mar. 17

The "Rapid Transit Commissioners," appointed by Mayor Edson, Nov. 30, 1883 (q.v.), report to him that they have "determined and located" 29 routes, three of which are "longitudinal or main routes" and the rest such as "may be generally described as cross-town routes;" that the "cable traction system," which has been "in successful operation in San Francisco for about eight years, and Chicago for about two years," seems to them the most practical plan for operation; that they adopted "Articles of Association for the New York Cable Railway Company" and opened a "book of subscription to the capital stock" of the same, the entire allotment of 20,000 shares being subscribed by 41 individuals; that these shareholders have elected a board of directors, so that now "nothing remains to be done, except to obtain the consent of the local authorities and of the property owners to permit the corporation to proceed with its work." The commissioners express the opinion that the company should pay to the city annually 2½% of its gross earnings "as a compensation for the franchises that may be conferred upon it." This report was submitted to the aldermen on June 30, and referred by them to the committee on railroads.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXIV: 856–66; Carman, op. cit., 180. See D 8. 28

The Marine Bank fails, wrecked by Grant & Ward. Two days later, the latter firm suspended, and a panic in the stock market followed, known as the "Grant & Ward panic." The height of the panic was reached on May 14; by July 1 it was over. It resulted in 15 failures, including the Metropolitan Bank and the Atlantic Bank.—Clews, Twenty-Eight Years in Wall St., 520–21; Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 63. See also Eve. Post, My 14–17, 1884, and Harper's Weekly, XXVIII: 333. 6

Ulysses S. Grant was a special partner in the firm of Grant & Ward; his name and property were used in the business, but he took no active part in the management. The failure ruined him and his family, and an unsuccessful effort was made to hold him personally liable. To satisfy his creditors he surrendered all his property, including the unique collection of souvenirs, swords, and other mementoes gathered during his world tour, and this collection eventually became the property of the nation. Soon after the failure, Grant commenced to write his memoirs, hoping that the 1884 May 6 sale would furnish a competence for his wife. Though suffering intensely from cancer of the throat, he continued this work for about a year and finished his book shortly before his death on July 23, 1885 (q. v.).—Encyclop. Am., XIII: 138.

" An important measure, giving to "local authorities" in cities, towns, and villages, the power "to provide for the construction, extension, maintenance and operation of street surface railroads," passes the legislature. This "General Surface R. R. Act" expressly excludes surface railways from the authority of the "Rapid Transit Act of 1875" (q. v., Je 18). Hereafter, under regulations, associations of persons formed "for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating a street surface railroad" shall become corporations automatically by filing "articles of association" with the secretary of state. It is provided that local authorities "may, at their option, provide for the sale of, and sell at public auction the franchise" for such a surface road; also that, in cities of 250,000 or over, the corporation shall pay to the city annually for the privilege 3% (after five years, 5%) of its gross receipts; also that the corporation shall "keep in permanent repair" that portion of the street between the tracks and for a space of two feet outside the tracks. A five cent fare "for one continuous ride" is specified with certain qualifications.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 252.

8 The legislature authorises the N. Y. and Harlem R. R. Co. to enlarge its passenger depot (the Grand Central Station) by extending it to a line 80 feet east of Fourth Ave., from 42d to 45th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 261.

" The legislature empowers New York City, through the commissioners of public charities and correction, to purchase Riker's Island, the total expenditure in the transaction not to exceed $180,000. The island is to become a part of the 23d Ward.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 262.

17 The corner-stone of the New York Cancer Hospital is laid at Eighth Ave. and 106th St.—Eve. Post, My 19, 1884. See 1887.

23 The commissioners of public charities and correction are authorised to acquire title to the whole of Ward's Island at a reasonable price.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 342.

29 The state civil service act of June 2, 1883 (q. v.), is so amended as to make its application obligatory on New York City and the other cities of the state. Within two months from this date, the several mayors are required to classify "all subordinate clerks and officers in the public service;" after another month has elapsed, "no officer or clerk shall be appointed, and no person shall be admitted to or be promoted in either of the said classes . . . until he has passed an examination, or is shown to be exempted from such examination" under the commission's regulations.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 410; cf. Ann. Cyclop. (1884), 589.

31 The College of Pharmacy (see 1878) is incorporated.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 424.

June 2 The department of parks is authorised to enlarge the Metropolitan Museum of Art at an expense not exceeding $350,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 447.

" A more effective measure aiming at improvement in city tenement-houses is passed by the legislature. For earlier ones see My 14, 1867; Je 16, 1879. It provides for a non-salaried commission of 11 members "to investigate and inquire into the character and condition of tenement-houses, lodging-houses and cellars in the city of New York." For the expenses of the commission $5,000 is appropriated. The members of the commission are Alexander Shaler, Joseph W. Drexel, S. O. Vanderpoel, Felix Adler, Oswald Ottendorfer, Moreau Morris, Anthony Reichardt, Joseph J. O'Donohue, Abbot Hodgman, Chas. F. Wingate, and Wm. P. Esterbrook.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 448; De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 102–3; II: 333–34. See F 15, 1885.

12 The commissioners of accounts, created by the Charter of 1873 (q. v., Ap 30), are now made officers with power by a legislative act authorising them "to compel the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths and to examine such persons as they may deem necessary." The salary of the office is fixed at $5,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 516. June 12

" The first half of the new Washington Market on Vesey St. (see Jl 25, 1883) is informally opened. The remainder will be completed in about six months.—Eve. Post, Je 12, 1884.

14 A commission is appointed by the mayor, in accordance with an act of the legislature, to select land for public parks in the 23d and 24th Wards of the city, which lie north of the Harlem River. The commission chose the sites of Van Cortlandt, Bronx, and Pelham Bay Parks, together with land for three smaller parks—Crotona, Claremont, and St. Mary's—and prepared a bill enabling the city to acquire them. This was presented to the legislature and became law on July 14, 1884.—Laws of N. Y. (1883), chap. 522; Ann. Cyclop. (1884), 581. For a detailed account of the steps leading to the choice of these parks and a description of them, see Mullaly, N. Y. Parks Beyond the Harlem (1887).

" The legislature again sets apart the land bounded by Bloomfield, Gansevoort, and West Sts. and Thirteenth Ave. for market purposes; and the block bounded by Little 12th, Gansevoort, Washington, and West Sts. and Tenth Ave. is again declared a public market-place for the exclusive use of farmers and market gardeners (so first declared on My 7, 1880, q. v.).—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 525. The former ground became the site of the new West Washington Market (see Ja 26, 1889). The latter site was first called the Farmers' Market but is now known as Gansevoort Market.—L. M. R. K., III: 959. A map of the ground, dated Oct. 1886, is filed in the bureau of topography, borough president's office, as Map No. 4023.

" The board of street openings is authorised, whenever it shall be deemed necessary for the public good, to acquire title to the lands bounded by Cherry and Jackson Sts. and the East River, and to convert them into a public park.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 529. The property was acquired in 1893 (q. v., Jl 17) and became Corlear's Hook Park.—L. M. R. K., III: 969. See also O 20, 1889, and My 8, 1894.

" The legislature passes a law requiring that "all telegraph, telephonic and electric light wires and cables" shall be "removed from the surface of all streets or avenues" before Nov. 1, 1885.—Laws of N. Y. (1884), chap. 534.

6 The aldermen, by a vote of 21 to 1, give consent to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. to "construct, maintain, operate and use a railroad with double tracks" on lower Broadway "for a single fare of five cents."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXV: 236–40. Mayor Edson vetoed the resolution on Aug. 18 (q. v.).

10 New York City and the surrounding country is slightly shaken by an earthquake, which causes much excitement, but no damage in the city.—Eve. Post, Ag 11, 1884. Another earthquake occurred on March 8, 1893 (q. v.).

18 Mayor Edson vetoes the resolution of the aldermen granting a franchise to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. (see Ag 6). He declares the interests of the city are not served when a franchise is granted with so few limitations or restrictions; he is "convinced that this franchise can be sold for at least one million of dollars, upon such terms and conditions as will protect the great thorough-

1884 Aug. 18 fare from desecration, insure a proper construction and the use of rails which will produce the least possible obstruction in the streets, and at the same time guarantee efficient service."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXV: 431–37. The aldermen repassed the measure over the veto, on Aug. 30 (q.v.).

25 The common council gives direction to the commission having authority to make contracts for street lighting, to cause all those portions of Fifth and Eighth Aves., 59th and 110th Sts., to be lighted with electricity.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, LII: 278.

27 The new barge office at the Battery is formally opened.—Eve. Post, Ag 27, 1884. See also L. M. R. K., III: 973.

30 Notwithstanding the objections of Mayor Edson (see Ag 18), the aldermen pass again the resolution granting a franchise to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXV: 503–4. "The corruption of this board of aldermen was such it came to be known as 'the Boodle Board.' The sequel is well known. Aldermen Duffy, Fullgraff and Waite turned state's evidence. Alderman Henry W. Jaehne was convicted on his own confession and sentenced . . . to penal servitude at hard labor for the term of nine years and ten months, for having received a bribe of $20,000 for his vote. Alderman 'Honest' John O'Neill was sentenced . . . to imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison for four years and a half and to pay a fine of two thousand dollars. Alderman Arthur J. McQuade was sentenced . . . to seven years in the state prison for bribery and to return five thousand dollars of bribe money to the city. He was released . . . and . . . after a new trial . . . acquitted. Jacob Sharp was sentenced . . . to four years in the state prison, and to pay a fine of five thousand dollars. He obtained a stay and a new trial, but died . . . before the retrial was held. Aldermen Keenan, DeLacy, Dempsey, Rothman, Sayles, and Maloney fled to Canada and other parts. Aldermen Farley, Finch, Kirk, Miller, Pearson, Reilly, Shiels, Wendel, Cleary, and Richmond were indicted, but . . . these indictments were dismissed."—Myers, Public Franchises in N. Y. C., 143. See also "Final Report of Committee on Railroads Relative to Broadway Surface Railroad Company," Senate Doc. (1886), No. 79.

Sept. 4 Indignation at the recent action of the aldermen (see Ag 30) is the cause of a mass meeting in Chickering Hall, at which resolutions are adopted providing for a committee of fifty, "charged with the duties of protecting the franchises of the city; securing their value to the City Treasury when sold; of bringing to justice the unfaithful officers who have attempted or shall attempt to give these franchises away; of breaking up the existing scheme to capture the franchise for a Broadway railroad, and generally of assisting the Mayor in all practicable ways to protect and defend city property."—N. Y. Times, S 5, 1884. See O 6.

Oct. 6 Because of popular dissatisfaction (see S 4) with the terms of the franchise granted to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. (see Ag 30), the company presents a second petition to the common council accompanied by a letter from the president. He asks that the whole subject "may be considered anew, and that any citizen or property-owner having objections to offer may have a full opportunity of being heard." Promises are given not to employ cable as a motive power, to use "the most approved plan for the construction," to pay to the city annually 3% of the gross receipts as required by law and to make "such compensation for use of the street as shall be just to the public and fair to the company;" also to provide, by agreement with the Broadway and Seventh Ave. company, a five cent fare from the Battery to Central Park.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 6–12.

At a meeting, also on this day, of the committee of fifty (see S 4), it is resolved that "the franchise of a railroad in Broadway should only be granted to the highest responsible bidder at public auction."—N. Y. Times, O 7, 1884.

7 The new military parade-ground in Van Cortlandt Park is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, O 7, 1884.

13 Mayor Edson communicates a special message to the aldermen, expressing reasons additional to those offered on August 18 (q.v.) why they should not take favourable action on the new petition of the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. He shows how any agreement between this company and the Broadway and Seventh Ave. company (see O 6), to allow each the use of the other's tracks is "an ingeniously contrived prelude" to a scheme by which the city will be "juggled out of revenues which the Legislature intended should be secured to it as compensation for the grant of a valuable franchise." He estimates that the net income of the company the first year will be "little short of $400,000," and raises the question: "Why should they, of all the million and a half inhabitants of this city, have such an enormous fortune conferred upon them at the expence of their fellow citizens?"—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 242–55. Oct. 13

The city acquires title to the land on the west side of Columbus Ave. between 61st and 62d Sts. On this the armory of the 12th Regiment was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber of Conveyances. 14

The subject of introducing electricity as a motive power on elevated railways is under discussion.—N. Y. Mail & Express, N 21, 22, 24, D 1, 2, 5, 9, 10, 13, 16 et seq., 1884. Nov. —

Grover Cleveland and Thos. A. Hendricks, Democrats, are elected president and vice-president. The Republican candidates were James G. Blaine and John A. Logan.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 201–31. 4

Wm. R. Grace (see N 2, 1880), who had been nominated for mayor by the citizens' committee, and was supported by the County Democracy and Irving Hall, is again elected mayor.—N. Y. Times, N 5 and 6, 1884; Ann. Cyclop. (1884), 589. Grace was succeeded by Abram S. Hewitt (see N 2, 1886). "

At the state elections, a large majority of the voters approves an amendment to the state constitution forbidding a city of 100,000 inhabitants or over to incur indebtedness in excess of 10% of the assessed value of the city's real estate.—Leg. Manual (1885), 126. "

The city acquires title to the land comprising the block bounded by Broadway, Columbus Ave., 67th and 68th Sts. On this the armory of the 22d Regiment of Engineers was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Libers of Conveyances. 11

With two dissenting votes, the aldermen, "in lieu of, or in substitution for, the resolution" passed on Aug. 30 (q.v.), grant a franchise to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. for the use of Broadway to Union Square, declaring that "an urgent necessity exists for a railroad in Broadway between the Battery and Union Square." In addition to the legal requirement of an annual payment to the city of 3% of gross receipts at first, and, after five years, of 5%, the additional annual payment of $40,000 is exacted.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 706–17. This measure was vetoed by Mayor Edson, on Nov. 24 (q.v.). 13

A season of German opera is begun at the Metropolitan Opera House, under the management of Edmund C. Stanton and with Leopold Damrosch as musical director. "Tannhäuser" is the first presentation.—Brown, III: 443; King's Handbook (1893), 588. This experiment was so successful "that a similar policy was pursued for the six years following. During that period, all Wagner's operas (excepting Parsifal) were produced in magnificent style, some of them for the first time in America. In the spring of 1891, the stockholders decided to set aside German opera for the time being, and contracted with Henry E. Abbey for a season of Italian and French opera, to be given during the winter of 1891 and 1892."—Ibid. 17

Mayor Edson returns to the aldermen with his veto a second resolution (for the first, see Ag 6) granting a franchise in lower Broadway to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. (see N 13). He observes that the "value of the franchise is now admitted" by the board, but he is convinced that it is not conferred upon the local authorities by the new law (see My 6) "to arrive at the value of this franchise in any other way than by public auction," especially when "several companies are asking consent to construct a railroad through this great thoroughfare, each claiming to afford better facilities for public travel than the other."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 777–84. See D 5. 24

The aldermen give permission to the Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Co. to extend its tracks from Park Row through Mail St. "to any tracks that may be constructed in Broadway."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 816–23. "This seemingly was a minute and unimportant extension, but it effectually furthered the elaboration of a gridiron system of railroads which Sharp [president of this company and leading petitioner for the Broadway Surface Railroad Co.] and his associates had in view."—Myers, Public Franchises in N. Y. C., 145. This measure was vetoed by Mayor Edson, on Dec. 4 (q.v.). "

The city acquires title to the land comprising the block bounded by Madison and Park Aves., 94th and 95th Sts. On this the 25

1884 N 25 armories of Squadron A and the 8th Regiment were afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber 1842.

26 The aldermen grant a franchise to the Chambers Street and Grand Street Ferry Railroad Co. This railroad, it is declared, will "supply to the public the only means of crossing the city from river to river, by a direct route . . . south of Canal and Walker streets."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 873–77. Mayor Edson vetoed this measure on Dec. 8.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 1016–19. See D 30.

Dec. 4 Mayor Edson vetoes the resolution of the aldermen permitting the Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Co. to extend its tracks (see N 24). His chief objection is that "no compensation is required to be paid to the city for the privilege."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 981–83. Myers, Public Franchises in N. Y. C., 145, errs in ascribing this veto message to Sept. 5. The resolution was passed again on Dec. 20 (q.v.).

5 The aldermen repass over the mayor's veto (see N 24) their resolutions favouring the Broadway Surface Railroad Co.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 938–42. "Thus, after trying first in 1852 (q.v., Jl 16) and every little while thereafter, Jacob Sharp finally succeeded in getting control of Broadway."—Myers, Public Franchises in N. Y. C., 143.

8 The committee on railroads of the board of aldermen reports favourably on the grant of a franchise to the New York Cable Railway Co. (see Ap 28). The committee believes the cable system "gives speed without danger," and "gives a constant service irrespective of snow and ice;" furthermore, under the scheme as proposed by the transit commissioners, it gives "immense facilities for rich and poor" by providing "transit up-town, down-town, cross-town for a single fare of five cents, on a line of seventy miles of road."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 1030–34. The report was laid over for further consideration. Before the next meeting of the common council took place, an owner of abutting property along one of the proposed routes secured a temporary injunction restraining the board from making the grant. This injunction was dissolved, and immediately another owner obtained a similar writ, which continued in force until December 31, 1884. "It was vacated at too late an hour to give the then outgoing Mayor opportunity to consider whether he ought to approve the consent of said Board to the construction of said railway or railways in case said Board should adopt a resolution to that effect."—Ibid. (1886) CLXXVI: 151. See F 2, 1885.

9 The new buildings of the Union Theological Seminary (see Mr 1837), on Fourth Ave. from 69th to 70th Sts., are dedicated.—N. Y. Times, D 10, 1884; L. M. R. K., III: 941.

20 The board of aldermen repass the resolutions favouring the Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Co., despite Mayor Edson's veto (see D 4).—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 1082.

23 Harrigan & Hart's Theatre Comique (see Ag 29, 1881), on the east side of Broadway between 4th St. and Astor Place, is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, D 24, 1884; L. M. R. K., III: 984. See Mr 2, 1885.

30 By a vote of 22 to 2, the aldermen repass, over the mayor's veto (see N 26), their resolutions favouring the Chambers Street and Grand Street Ferry Railroad Co.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1884), CLXXVI: 1205–7.

— The Pasteur treatment for hydrophobia, by inoculation with rabic virus, was first applied to human beings in this year, after prolonged investigation and experiments on animals.—Encyclop. Brit., XIV: 169–70.

— In this year, the Dunlap Society, named in honour of Wm. Dunlap, was organized to issue reprints of rare books and pamphlets relating to the American theatre and to collect and preserve portraits of distinguished American actors, dramatists, and other theatrical celebrities.—The Dunlap Society (1885), pamphlet in N. Y. P. L.

— The Holland Society of New York is founded, chiefly for historical but also for social purposes.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 148.

— In this year, the Cosmopolitan was founded, with James Brisben Walker as editor.—King's Handbook (1893), 636.

— In this year, Gottlieb Daimler produced the first motorcycle and Carl Benz, another German, built the first successful gasoline-driven motor-car.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 479.

1885 — In this year, Little Lord Fauntleroy, by Mrs. Francis Hodgson Burnett, was first published, as a serial in the magazine Saint Nicholas.—Encyclop. Am., XVII: 521. See also Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 278.

— In this year, The Rise of Silas Lapham, by Wm. Dean Howells, appeared.—Encyclop. Am., XIV: 459.

— In this year, the Tenement House Building Co. of N. Y. was founded to erect model tenement-houses. It built at 338 to 344 Cherry St. and opened its houses on Dec. 1, 1887.—Gould, The Housing of the Working People, 196–200, including view and plan.

— A bronze bust of Washington Irving by Friedrich Beer is given to the city and placed in Bryant Park.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 161; L. M. R. K., III: 964. It follows the Plumbe daguerreotype portrait of Irving.—See the Seligman collection in the N. Y. P. L.

— In this year, the first cable cars were installed, on the 125th St. and the Amsterdam Ave. lines of the Third Ave. R. R. Co.—N. Y. Electrical Handbook (pub. by Am. Inst. of Electrical Engineers, 1904), 127; N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 10, 1885. Cf. Rapid Transit in N. Y. City (pub. by Ch. of Com., 1905), 7, and Engineering Mag., IV: 351.

— In this year, Robinson's Atlas of the City of New York was published. Elisha Robinson was Bromley's partner in publishing the similar atlas of 1879 (q.v.). This atlas shows, by various colours, lines, and names, the different structures of brick, stone, wood, and iron; the open streets and proposed streets; old farm lines and names, old water-courses; the block, lot, and house numbers, block dimensions, elevations above high tide at street intersections; horse and cable car-lines, steam railroad lines, and fire hydrants. As in the Bromley atlas, principal buildings of all kinds are named, as well as owners of the more extensive properties. The atlas contains 43 maps, the work of Robinson and Pidgeon (see 1880).

— In this year, Frederick S. Church, who received his art education partly in the Natl. Acad. of Design and the Art Students' League in New York, was elected to the National Academy.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 65.

Jan. 3 Commissioners appointed by the supreme court, on the application of the Broadway Surface Railroad Co., to determine whether such railroad "ought to be constructed," hold their first public hearings These hearings continued through Feb. 24.—Broadway Railroad: Proceedings before Commissioners, 2 vols.

5 Mayor Grace, in his message to the aldermen, takes a position regarding the matter of franchises that is very like that of the retiring mayor. No franchise, he says, "should be awarded except upon such conditions as will secure to the city the largest possible revenue. The proper means to attain this end I conceive to be the undeviating adherence to the plan of putting all such franchises up at public bidding."

The mayor declares his purpose of employing the commissioners of accounts (see Je 12, 1884) to "undertake a thorough and exhaustive examination into all the city and county offices." He would like to see municipal elections held "in the spring of the year," so that purely local interests may not be "sacrificed for the sake of party supremacy." He urges a bureau of elections "independent of the Police Department," denouncing the present system as "a standing menace to the safety and purity of the ballot-box." He advocates "single heads" instead of "a multiplicity of Commissioners" for departments, "save only the Tax and Health Departments."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1885), CLXXVII: 22–67.

19 Mayor Grace sends a second message to the aldermen urging them to revoke franchises granted during the preceding year to six companies which, he believes, have "not yet acquired contract or property rights by constructing and operating the railways."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1885), CLXXVII: 110–12.

26 Khartoum, capital of the Soudan, is stormed by the Soudan chief known as the Mahdi, during a religious war against Egypt, and the English garrison, consisting of Gen. Gordon and 11,000 men, is massacred. The English expedition, sent out in Sept., 1884, for Gordon's relief, did not arrive until Jan. 28, 1885. Prime minister Gladstone was held responsible for the tragedy, and his ministry was overthrown. Lord Salisbury became prime minister and held the office until Feb. 1, 1886 (q.v.).—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 497, 561–62.

Feb. 2 The New York Cable Railway Co. (see D 8, 1884) petitions again for a franchise. "Referred to the Committee on Railroads."

1885 —Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1885), CLXXVII: 166–67. The company
Feb. renewed its petition on Feb. 22 (ibid., 417–31), reciting the history
2 of the case during the preceding year. This was also referred to the committee on railroads. The company and many property owners "frequently urged and argued for the granting of said petition before said Committee, and presented petitions in favor thereof." One of these bore the signatures of more than 70,000 "resident voters and workingmen," which signatures were "duly verified under oath." The committee, however, "omitted to report" and, on Dec. 8, was discharged by the board "from the further consideration of the petition."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1885), CLXXX: 1178; ibid. (1886), CLXXXI: 152–55. See Ja 19, 1886.

9 The aldermen follow the recommendation of Mayor Grace (see Ja 19) and revoke the franchises granted to the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. and five other companies during the preceding year.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1885), CLXXVII: 271–72. For the decision of the state court of appeals regarding such action, see N 27, 1888. "In the spring of 1885 the company [above-mentioned] caused its track to be constructed over the route authorized, and from that time to the 4th of May, 1886 [q.v.], when it was dissolved by an act of the legislature, in connection with other railroad companies, ran its cars over such road and the connecting lines."—N. Y. Reports, Court of Appeals, CXI: 32; Ann. Cyclop. (1885), 642.

15 The tenement-house commission appointed on June 2, 1884 (q.v.), makes its report to the legislature. It recommends, among other things, that the requirements for new tenement-houses be extended to old buildings, altered to be used as tenements; that water be supplied on each floor of every tenement-house; that every tenement-house occupied by eight or more families have a resident janitor; that rooms and halls in all new tenement-houses have direct light and communication with the open air; that the board of health be required to make a semi-annual inspection of all tenement-houses in the city, and an annual report to the mayor; that the number of sanitary policemen be increased from 30 to 40 and their duties limited entirely to the inspection of tenement- and lodging-houses; that the name and address of the owner of every tenement-house be filed in the department of health; that a permanent tenement-house commission, composed of the mayor and the heads of the departments of health, public works, buildings, and street cleaning be appointed to meet annually to consider the desirability of change in the tenement-house laws; that certain streets be opened so as to do away with Mulberry Bend, a notorious "slum" district; and that free public baths be established throughout the tenement-house districts. The commission published a report containing these recommendations and also the result of a sanitary inspection of nearly 1,000 tenement-houses. Their suggestions did not result in legislation until 1887 (q.v., Mr 25).—Report of the Tenement House Committee of 1894, 19–21; De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 103–4.

12 The cause of the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. (see D 5, 1884) is advanced by the decision of the commissioners appointed by the supreme court (see Ja 15) that "there is a public necessity for the construction and operation of a surface railroad on Broadway between the Battery and Union-square," and that "a horse railroad is more appropriate [than a cable road] for such a thoroughfare and will better subserve the public convenience and accommodation."—N. Y. Times, Mr 13, 1885. The Times agrees editorially with the commissioners and believes "the financial conditions on which the consent of the Common Council was granted [see N 13, 1884] . . . are as favorable as could be expected."—Ibid. "It is unpleasant to know and painful to relate that the commissioners . . . are not entirely free from suspicion—one at least is believed to have held confidential relations with Sharp's son-in-law, who was his clerk or book-keeper."—Senate Docs. (1886), IV: No. 52, p. 5.

"The bare and dilapidated suite of three rooms which oc- " cupies the front second story of the City Hall has been renovated by a firm of decorators in a bright key of color. New carpets have been laid, and the old furniture, which was used by Washington in the old City Hall, on Wall-street, has been furbished up and supplied with neat coverings. The table desk at which Washington sat and the more elaborate desk at which he transacted business when New-York hoped to remain the capital of the country are here in such bravery for their curious and somewhat simple architecture as varnish and oil can give. The ceilings of the three apartments have been frescoed and gilded with more taste than usually befalls our public offices. . . . Coats of arms in each of the rooms are painted near the ceiling, while the compartments on the ceilings themselves have appropriate decorative designs of a mixed peaceful and warlike character. . . . The most interesting decorations, however, are the priceless tier of oil paintings,

4 "Die Meistersinger" is produced for the first time in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House.—Brown, III: 443.

" Mayor Grace communicates his annual message to the board of aldermen. Of particular interest are his figures relating to the civil service; he shows a table wherein it appears that "the number of persons examined for admission to the Civil Service in this city is equal to more than one-third of those examined for admission to the whole Federal Civil Service; while it is nearly four times as large as the number examined for admission to the State service." Of the whole number examined, "seven eighths succeeded in obtaining the minimum of 70 per cent. which is fixed, and were rated as eligible. The examinations . . . are of a thoroughly practical character, and are solely directed to the determination of the qualifications required for the position to which application is made." The mayor is convinced "not only of the merits of the Civil Service system in its general scope, but of its perfect feasibility and justice." In another table Mr. Grace shows that the rental of offices for the city officials during the past year cost $99,750, an argument for the erection of a municipal building.

The mayor reiterates his recommendation of the previous year that the departments and commissions, with the exception of the tax and health departments, be under the control of a single commissioner, who can be held to a strict accountability for his official acts. "Even the Health Department might be included to advantage if power were vested in the Mayor to veto health ordinances, leaving their initiation to the single Commissioner at its head."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 30–61.

16 A banquet in honour of Lieut. Greely, of Arctic fame, is held at the Lotos Club. The guests include Gen. Horace Porter, Commander Schley, Chief-Justice Daly, and others.—Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 114–15.

19 The New York Cable Railway Co. (see F 2, 1885) petitions for a franchise once more, reciting the story of its previous efforts. "Referred to the Committee on Railroads."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 143–55; City Record, XIV, pt. 1, 155–56. See Mr 2.

26 The "Council of Municipal Reform" publishes figures to show that, on the basis of moneys expended in 1884, New York City's expenses are "four times greater than the average of all other cities in the world," namely, $36.57 per capita, against an average of $11.92.—N. Y. Tribune, Ja 26, 1886.

Feb. 1 Gladstone enters upon his third ministry.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 499. See Ap 8.

2 The board of aldermen grants franchises to the "Madison Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street Railway Company" and to the "St. Nicholas Avenue and Crosstown Railroad Company."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 463–66, 467–73. Mayor Grace vetoed both grants, the former on March 9 (q.v.), the latter on March 16 (q.v.).

" The board of aldermen follows the recommendation of its committee on railroads and grants a franchise to the New York Cable Railway Co. (see Ja 19). In its report the committee virtually apologizes to the petitioning company for requiring it to pay to the city annually 2½% of its net earnings, declaring that they acquiesce "in deference to the suggestion of Mayor Edson's Rapid Transit Commissioners" (see Ap 28, 1884). It has been a "serious question, with your Committee," they say, "whether the company could afford or ought to be required to pay any percentage of its net revenue into the city treasury," in view of the "numerous routes and large mileage . . . over which a five-cent fare confers upon each passenger the privilege of a free transfer ticket."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 473–93. This action was vetoed by Mayor Grace on March 19 (q.v.).

3 From March 3 to 15, the sale of the paintings, porcelains, silver, literary property, and etchings of Mary J. Morgan, deceased, was held at the Am. Art Galleries. They yielded $1,205,153 With the exception of the Duke of Hamilton collection, this was "the largest total ever obtained [up to that time] at public sale of one collection in the world." Jules Breton's "Communicants" brought $45,000; Vibert's "Missionary Story," $25,000; and "The Sentinel" (8 by 11 in.), by Barque, $12,500.—Address of Mr. Thos. E. Kirby . . . Nov. 10, 1922, 19; A Plan and Interesting Information concerning the Am. Art Ass'n. The famous "peach blow" vase was sold on March 8 for $18,000.—N. Y. Tribune, Mr 9, 1886.

7 "The Arcade underground railroad scheme [see Ap 26, 1870, and Je 11, 1881], promises quick transit from the Battery to 1886 Mar. 7 Harlem river at a speed of forty miles an hour by a safe, well-ventilated and well-lighted road on a solid foundation. The Arcade plan has outlived all its rivals in the last twenty years and has a right to plume itself on its present vitality, as an instance of the survival of the fittest. Twice an Arcade bill has passed the Legislature, and on each occasion has been set aside, first by Governor Cleveland and subsequently by Governor Hill, and it is to be hoped that the present amended bill will meet the approval of both Legislature and Executive, and that, in the interest of the traveling public, the Arcade road will realize the truth of the old proverb—'third time and win.' If the company having the project in charge redeems its promises—and there seems to be no good reason why it should not—it will place New York far in advance of any city in the world in the matter of quick and convenient passenger transit."—N. Y. Sunday Mercury, Mr 7, 1886. See also N. Y. Arcade Ry. Co. A Pamphlet for the use of Owners of Property on Broadway, giving a Summary of the Purpose, Plan and Advantages of its Proposed Railway, etc. (1886), illus. pamphlet in N. Y. P. L. See Ap 13.

9 Mayor Grace vetoes the resolution of the board of aldermen granting a franchise to the "Madison Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street Railway Company" (see Mr 2). He is compelled to take this action, he says, even though he fully recognizes the necessity for the road, because "only the minimum fixed by the statute is secured to the City for such franchise." He emphasizes again that all such franchises should be subject to "sale by auction."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 564–65.

10 Permission is granted by the legislature to the federal government to acquire the block bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water Sts., together with the building thereon known as the Old Produce Exchange.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 46; see also N. Y. Times, Mr 31, 1885. The building was reconstructed and became the U. S. Army building.—L. M. R. K., III: 925. See O 25.

16 Mayor Grace returns to the aldermen with his veto the resolution granting a franchise to the "St. Nicholas Avenue and Cross-town Railroad Company" (see Mr 2). "An adequate return for the privilege ceded is not secured," he declares.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 665.

" Mayor Grace returns with his veto the resolution of the aldermen (see Mr 2) granting a franchise to the New York Cable Railway Co. He does not see "how surface cable roads under the peculiar conditions of our city life can ever properly solve the problem of rapid transit." He believes there are "serious legal objections" to the grant, one being that "the act of 1875 [see N 30, 1883] contemplated only elevated or under-ground railroads." He does not consider that 2½% of the net profits is a "proper consideration" for the "sweeping privileges;" indeed, "under the methods of corporate organization, which are to-day only too prevalent, and by which bonds are sold below par and stock is given away as a bonus," he regards the proof of "actual earnings" to be "very difficult of ascertainment" and, therefore, any return to the city board on such earnings as "almost illusory."

An important feature, however, of this veto message is a recommendation "for the sale of franchises generally" on a plan "similar to that under which ferry franchises are now granted." Under this plan the commissioners of the sinking fund would "lease all franchises at public auction for a term of not less than ten or more than twenty years," and would "appoint an auditor who, with the officers of the road shall certify under oath the actual money value of the road and equipment at the time of construction, i. e., its real cost." The recipient of the franchise would get "all profits on the operation of the road up to ten per cent. on the actual investment for construction and equipment, all sums earned in excess of such ten per cent. to be paid quarterly into the city treasury." In case of a new lessee, "let the City pay the old lessee the estimated cost of replacing the plant, charging a like sum to the new lessee who shall be represented in the appraisement."

The mayor claims the result of such a system would be:

"First—the City and not monopolists would reap the benefit accruing from the increase of traffic incident to the growth of the City; i. e., the city itself would, as it should, be the beneficiary of the 'unearned increment.'

"Second—There would be sufficient inducement to lead to the proper investment of capital and labor of superintendence.

"Third—The franchises of our City could ultimately be made to pay a much larger part of our taxes than they do now, instead of building up great and practically irresponsible monopolies at the public cost."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 675–86; Carman, op. cit., 182–83. See Je 16. Mar. 16

The legislature provides by the "Cantor Act" that hereafter local authorities must (by the law of May 6, 1884, q. v., they "may, at their option") require a franchise for a surface railway to be "sold at public auction" to the highest bidder.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 65. This act was amended, on June 15, to require the purchasing company to complete the road and put it in operation within three years from the date of sale.—Ibid., chap. 642. 22

The board of aldermen appoints a special committee "to present to Mrs. U. S. Grant the album containing a copy of the preamble and resolutions adopted by the Common Council on the occasion of the death of her lamented husband."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXI: 719–20. 23

Gladstone introduces in parliament the Irish Government (or Home Rule) Bill, providing for an Irish parliament to sit in Dublin and legislate on Irish affairs. The Irish were to be excluded from the British parliament but to contribute $\frac{1}{14}$ toward the imperial expenses. The bill precipitated one of the fiercest struggles in English parliamentary history and, after much discussion, was defeated on June 8. Gladstone therefore dissolved parliament and appealed to the people, but he was again defeated, and Lord Salisbury became prime minister. The Salisbury ministry lasted until 1892.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 500–5. Apr. 8

Mayor Grace approves a resolution of the board of aldermen changing the name of Chatham Street to Park Row.—N. Y. Times, Ap 7 and 10, 1886; L. M. R. K., III: 996. 9

Dennis O'Brien, attorney-general, delivering an opinion on "The Legal Status of the Arcade Railway," cites the law of 1873 (q. v., Ap 9) regarding the time allowed for the construction of the railway (formerly the Beach Pneumatic) and declares that by the failure of the Arcade Co. to begin construction and to expend 10% of the required capital within five years (which was one of the rules governing any railroad corporation) they had forfeited their right to corporation.—The Legal Status of the Arcade Ry., pamphlet in N. Y. P. L. 13

The charter of the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. (see Ag 6, 18 and 30, O 6 and 13, N 13 and 24, D 5, 1884) is annulled by the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 268. The court of appeals, however, in a decision of Nov. 27, 1888 (q. v.), held that the franchise could not be taken away. 4

The department of parks is authorised to set apart so much of Riverside Park and Drive as may be suitable for the interment of the remains of U. S. Grant and his widow and for the erection of a monument to his memory. The construction of the temporary vault in the park (see Jl 23, 1885), is validated.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 338. The corner-stone of Grant's tomb was laid on April 27, 1892 (q. v.). 13

The New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital is chartered.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 438. 25

By act of legislature the commissioners of charities and correction are authorised "to hire one or more buildings . . . with sufficient ground attached to each to be known as municipal lodging-houses." When these houses are ready for the reception of applicants, no police official shall thereafter "shelter as a lodger in any police station, situated within the limits of one mile from such lodging-house, any person other than women, children and aged or infirm men." Any applicants for shelter whom the commissioners may think proper to receive shall be "bathed on admission" and given "plain and wholesome food and a night's lodging free of charge." No person shall be received "more than three times in any one month in the same lodging house," and all lodgers shall be required "to perform a reasonable amount of labor in return."—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 535. June 2

" "The Fifth Avenue Transportation Company (Limited)" is authorised by the legislature to run "a line of stages . . . from Eighty-ninth street . . . down Fifth avenue, across Washington park, and along South Fifth avenue to the Bleecker Street Elevated station," provided the consent of a majority of the property owners on said avenue and streets is obtained. The usual license fee for such a franchise shall be paid to the city, and the fare limit is to be five cents.—Laws of N. Y. (1886), chap. 536.

1886 June 16 — The New York Cable Railway Co. once again (see Mr 16) petitions the board of aldermen for a franchise, without success.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1886), CLXXXII: 650–51. "Possibly the inner transactions of the board of aldermen relative to the Broadway surface railroad [see Ag 30, 1884], the details of which were becoming public, were responsible, in part at least, for the non-passage of this grant."—Carman, op. cit., 183.

July 14 — The contract is awarded for the construction of the new Harlem bridge (see Je 11, 1885).—N. Y. Tribune, Jl 15, 1886. It was completed in 1888 (q. v., Jl 3), and was later given the name of Washington Bridge. See L. M. R. K., III: 927; Hutton, The Washington Bridge (1889).

Aug. — In this month, the history of the Christian Science movement in New York City began, when Mrs. Laura Lathrop chartered her "Christian Science Institute," at 137 W. 34th St. Students and patients were received for instruction in the rudiments of Christian Science and for healing.—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. Heitman, Christian Science Committee on Publication for the State of New York. See, further, N 27, 1887.

Sept. 1 — The Calumet Club opens its new club-house at the n. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 29th St.—N. Y. Times, S 3, 1886. See also ibid., S 26, 1886; King's Handbook (1893), 547.

" — Dwellings to the number of 886 are being erected on the west side of the city between 59th and 155th Sts., and 34 have just been completed. Of the unfinished buildings, 788 are between 59th and 110th Sts., and 98 are above 110th St.—N. Y. Times, S 11, 1886. For the great part played by rapid transit in opening up the west side, see S 11.

3 — The first conduits for putting the telegraph wires underground are laid, before a large crowd of people.—N. Y. Times, S 4, 1886.

11 — "The west side of the city presents just now a scene of building activity such as was never before witnessed in that section, and which gives promise of the speedy disappearance of all the shanties in the neighborhood and the rapid population of this long neglected part of New-York. . . . The huge masses of rock which formerly met the eye, usually crowned by a rickety shanty and a browsing goat, are being blasted out of existence. Streets are being graded, and thousands of carpenters and masons are engaged in rearing substantial dwellings where a year ago nothing was to be seen but market gardens or barren rocky fields. . . .

"The west side of New-York with all its natural advantages, was left to an unproductive and unprofitable existence until now because of the lack of facilities for reaching it. Until the building of the Sixth-avenue elevated road there was practically no way for a man of moderate means to reach his home, supposing he possessed one in that section of the city. The Eighth-avenue surface line ran a few cars up to One Hundred and Fifty-fifth-street, and there was a line of stages from Thirty-second-street and Sixth-avenue, but these methods of transportation were slow and unsatisfactory. . . . With the building of the elevated railroad the future of the west side was assured. Then for the first time it became almost as accessible to the people who do business down town as Thirty-fourth-street had been before. . . .

"The elevated road was the first agency to open up this great part of the city to population, and gave the first impetus to building. Following it came the Tenth-avenue cable road and the new Boulevard road, both of which, by adding to the facilities for reaching the west side, gave an increased energy to the building operations. Within the last year, too, another attraction has been added to the west side as a quarter for residences, in the tomb of Gen. Grant at Riverside. . . ."—N. Y. Times, S 11, 1886.

Oct. 20 — The first block of electric cable is laid underground on Sixth Ave. between 37th and 38th Sts.—N. Y. Times, O 21, 1886.

23 — Prince Louis Napoleon, grand-nephew of Napoleon Bonaparte, is visiting New York incognito.—N. Y. Times, O 24, 1886. See also ibid., N 5, 1886.

25 — M. Auguste Bartholdi, Count Ferdinand de Lesseps, and other prominent Frenchmen arrive at New York for the unveiling of the statue of "Liberty."—N. Y. Times, O 26, 1886. A reception and concert in honour of the French guests was held at the Academy of Music on Oct. 26.—Ibid., O 27, 1886. See O 27.

Oct. 25 — The corner-stone of a new federal armory, to be erected on the site of the old Produce Exchange (see Mr 10), is laid.—N. Y. Times, O 26, 1886. This was the U. S. Army building; it was completed in 1889.—L. M. R. K., III: 925; King's Handbook, 541–42.

27 — M. Auguste Bartholdi is formally received at the city hall by Mayor Grace and presented with the freedom of the city. After this the French delegates visited the Produce Exchange and in the evening dined at the Union League Club.—N. Y. Times, O 28, 1886. See O 28.

28 — Bartholdi's statue of "Liberty" is unveiled on Bedloe's Island amid great enthusiasm, and it is formally accepted from the people of France by Pres. Cleveland. Addresses are also made by Count de Lesseps, Sen. Wm. M. Evarts, and Chauncey M. Depew. The occasion is marked by magnificent land and water parades, imposing ceremonies, and the presence of a great multitude.—N. Y. Times, O 29, 1886; Inauguration of the Statue of Liberty (1887); Harper's Weekly, XXX: 714, 717. Anson Phelps Stokes, who sat on the platform close to the speakers, wrote about the occasion: "Mr. Evarts had got only part way along in his speech when the applause was mistaken by an eminent Frenchman present as the signal for him to pull the rope which unveiled the statue, upon which all the steamers and steam-tugs which were in attendance about the island started their steam-whistles, and the crowds on board them cheered, making a terrific din, which they kept up for a long while. Mr. Evarts went right on with his speech, and President Cleveland, who presided, appeared as if giving strict attention to him, although it was impossible to hear what the orator was saying."—Stokes Records, I: Part 2, p. 235. For a brief history and description of the statue, see 22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 220–26. See also Bartholdi's article in N. Am. Rev. (1885).

Nov. 2 — Abram S. Hewitt, supported by Tammany Hall and by the County Democracy, is elected mayor. In this election, for the first time, working men organised in unions presented a candidate for mayor. Their nominee, Henry George, was also supported by Irving Hall. Theodore Roosevelt was the Republican candidate.—N. Y. Times, N 3 and 4, 1886; Ann. Cyclop. (1886), 648. Hewitt succeeded Wm. R. Grace (see N 4, 1884).

15 — The new buildings projected this year largely exceed in number and cost those of any previous year. Up to Nov. 1, they number 3,704 at an estimated cost of $53,119,068. The need of better homes for people of moderate means is felt. An "underground road" is mentioned as a possible solution of the crowding of the Elevated Railroad. The Brooklyn Bridge is over-crowded, and a new bridge at Blackwell's Island is projected.—N. Y. Tribune, N 15, 1886.

17 — Munkacsy's painting "Christ Before Pilate" is placed on exhibition in the Twenty-Third Street Tabernacle, at 141 W. 23d St.—N. Y. Tribune, N 18, 1886; King's Handbook (1893), 599.

27 — The Lotos Club gives a dinner in honour of Henry M. Stanley, who has just returned to New York after many years' absence completing Livingstone's work in Central Africa. Stanley is introduced by the club president, Whitelaw Reid, and relates some of his experiences. Lieut. Greely and Chauncey M. Depew also make addresses.—N. Y. Times, N 28, 1886; Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 115. On Nov. 29, Stanley also delivered a lecture at Chickering Hall.—N. Y. Times, N 30, 1886.

Dec. 1 — "Tristan und Isolde" is performed for the first time in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House.—Krehbiel, Chapters of Opera, 167; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 901.

— "There are, on the average, sixteen souls to every dwelling-house in New York City. It is said that there are only about forty thousand old-fashioned 'householders,' that is, heads of families, who occupy a whole house by themselves in New York City. Most of the people live in 'apartments.'"—Loomis, Modern Cities (1887), 63; Tenth Census of the U. S., I: 670.

— In this year, the first issue of the Social Register appeared.

— Scribner's Magazine was founded in this year.—King's Handbook (1893), 636.

— In this year, The Evening World was founded by Joseph Pulitzer and The Evening Sun by Chas. A. Dana.—King's Handbook (1893), 622.

— In this year, the N. Y. Cancer Hospital at Central Park West and 106th St. (see My 17, 1884) was completed, mainly through the generosity of Mrs. John Jacob Astor, and D. O. Mills erected a 1887 — home for trained nurses at Bellevue, supplementing the previous gift of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Osborn.—Message of Mayor Hewitt, Ja 31, 1888, p. 38. See also King's Handbook (1893), 485, 490.

— The Stock Exchange building is enlarged for the third time. "The Broad Street end of the building, about 65 feet square, was added to the Board Room, thus utilizing for the Board Room all the ground space of the present site" (1894).—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 65.

— In this year was published Olmsted and Vaux's General plan for the improvement of Morningside Park,—a large folded map.

— In this year, the N. Y. Neighborhood Guild was founded by Dr. Stanton Coit in a five-storey tenement at No. 146 Forsyth St. Its object was to help the poor people in the vicinity by the establishment of various clubs, a kindergarten, dancing and other classes, lectures, debating societies, theatrical entertainments, gymnastic exercises, etc. In the autumn of 1889, the Guild moved across to No. 147 Forsyth St.—Univ. Settlement Soc. Bulletin (Jan., 1892), 6–13. See 1891.

Jan. 3 — In a message to the aldermen that is remarkable for its brevity, Mayor Hewitt calls attention to "the erroneous impression which prevails in some quarters that the Mayor controls a large amount of official patronage." Actually such power resides "exclusively with the Commissions;" when the mayor has appointed a commissioner his (the mayor's) powers cease. He believes appointments made by his predecessor under the new law (see Mr 17, 1884) have improved "the character of the Commissions," and he hopes to maintain such a "standard of excellence."

The mayor recounts several needed improvements and declares that the city "has reached a point in its development, which demands such large and generous treatment in all directions, as will facilitate business, provide the best appliances of modern civilization, spread the opportunities for knowledge and refinement and give the freest possible play to the humanizing influences of the fine arts, morality, and religion." However, the power to accomplish these results, he asserts, "does not reside either in the Common Council or in the Mayor, singly or jointly, and yet it is made his duty to communicate the facts having a bearing thereon, so far as he shall be able to obtain them, in the expectation . . . that the legislative power of the State, which makes and unmakes Mayors, Commissions and Common Councils at its constitutional pleasure, may by wise law render it possible for New York to become worthy of its eminence as the chief city of the United States in wealth, enterprise, culture, and (with good government) in the general comfort and prosperity of its citizens." You may "count upon my hearty co-operation," he says, "in any measures looking to this end which under your restricted powers you may be able to devise."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1887), CLXXXV: 27–33.

10 — Denman Thompson appears in "The Old Homestead" for the first time in New York, at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. He later appeared in it at Niblo's Garden, the Academy of Music, the Harlem Opera House, the Grand Opera House, and other theatres. The play had an exceptionally long run.—Brown, I: 224, 328; II: 106, 107, 113, 114, 229, 337, 495, 497, 651; III: 551, 555, 557.

18 — The new Y. W. C. A. building, at No. 7 East 15th St. (see D 1, 1885), is opened.—N. Y. Times, Ja 19, 1887. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XXXI: 43, 45.

Feb. 4 — The Interstate Commerce Act becomes law.—Macdonald, Select Statutes, etc., 352–71.

27 — Closing services are held in the Lafayette Place Reformed Dutch Church (known since 1854 as the Middle Dutch Church) prior to its demolition. A large clothing establishment is to be built on the site.—N. Y. Times, F 28, 1887; L. M. R. K., III: 935. The congregation worshipped at 14 Lafayette Place until the new building at Second Ave. and 7th St. was erected in 1891 (q.v., My 17).—Corwin's Manual, 996, 997–99.

Mar. 15 — Mayor Hewitt returns to the board of aldermen with his veto a resolution granting permission to a "Cleaning Bureau" to employ a man "to carry a portable sign on his breast and back through the streets of this city, where the sidewalks are not less than ten feet wide." If a permanent "advertising sign" on the sidewalks constitutes an obstruction contrary to the law, a "peripatetic sign," he declares, "multiples the objections to the stationary one many fold. The public will never know where to find the wearer. He will naturally seek the most crowded thoroughfares, and will unquestionably be most frequent during the busiest hours of the day."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1887), CLXXXV: 629–30.

Mar. 23 — From March 23 to 31, the art works and books belonging to the estate of the late A. T. Stewart were sold at the Am. Art Galleries for $575,079.42. Rosa Bonheur's famous painting, "The Horse Fair," was bought by Mr. Samuel P. Avery, a dealer, for $53,000. Mr. Avery sent it the next day to the Metropolitan Museum of Art "with the compliments of Cornelius Vanderbilt."—Address of Mr. Thos. E. Kirby . . . Nov. 10, 1922, 20.

25 — Acting on some of the recommendations made in 1885 (q.v., F 15), by the tenement-house commission, the legislature amends the tenement-house law by increasing the number of sanitary police from 30 to 45, by providing for a permanent tenement-house commission composed of the mayor and the heads of the departments of health, public works, and street cleaning, who are to meet once a year to discuss tenement-house needs, by requiring the owners of all tenement-houses to file their names and addresses with the board of health, by requiring the board of health to make a semi-annual inspection of all tenements, and by making more stringent regulations regarding the erection of tenement-houses.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 84; De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 104. See, further, My 26.

26 — The Tilden Trust, established by the will of Samuel J. Tilden, is incorporated for establishing and maintaining a free public library and reading-room.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 85. The resources of this corporation were materially reduced by the failure of Mr. Tilden's testamentary design, the trusts which he attempted to create by his will being declared invalid by their indefiniteness. Had the Tilden Trust received his entire estate, the trustees would probably have felt compelled to establish an independent library and reading-room as directed by his will. As it was, the $2,000,000 saved for the trust was inadequate for a new public library, but did contribute very materially towards establishing the present New York Public Library (Astor, Lenox, and Tilden Foundations).—N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1912), 79, 94.

Apr. 10 — For the last five years, Fifth Ave. residences have been remodelled one by one for business purposes.—N. Y. Times, Ap 10, 1887.

13 — Columbia College celebrates its 100th anniversary with a parade and with exercises at the Metropolitan Opera House. Frederic R. Coudert delivers the principal address.—N. Y. Times, Ap 14, 1887.

16 — The freight yards of the N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R. Co., extending along the Hudson for a dozen blocks north of 59th St., are destroyed by flames from burning oil. The loss is about $120,000.—N. Y. Times, Ap 17, 1887.

19 — The Harvard Club of the City of New York (see 1865) is incorporated.—N. Y. Times, Ap 20, 1887. See also ibid., Ap 30, 1887. See, further, Je 9.

27 — The legislature appoints a commission "to inquire into the feasibility and necessity of constructing a means of transit, either by bridge or tunnel, across the East River at a point at or near Broadway, between Kent and Bedford avenues, or thereabouts, in the city of Brooklyn, to a point at or near Grand street, between the river and East Broadway, or thereabouts, in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 231.

" — The corner-stone of the Harlem Y. M. C. A. building is laid on 125th St. near Fifth Ave.—N. Y. Times, Ap 28, 1887. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXI: 559, 565. It was dedicated on Sept. 24, 1888 (q.v.).

May 10 — "Erminie" is produced for the first time in America, at the Casino Theatre with Pauline Hall in the title role and Francis Wilson as Cadeaux.—Brown, III: 489, 490. See also Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 234.

12 — An estimate of the probable cost of erecting a new "figure" (of Justice) on the top of the cupola of the city hall is presented to the board of estimate and apportionment. This report states that one of sheet bronze with iron frame, weighing about 2,500 lbs., will cost about $6,000. A cast bronze figure, weighing at least 6,000 lbs., will cost about $9,500. "The present structure will carry the lighter figure with safety. Some necessary repairs of tower will be indispensable from the change, and the whole cost, if the light figure be adopted, may be estimated at about $6,500."—Min., Bd. of Est. and App. (1887), 144. The report was ordered placed on file. See Jl 15 and N 3.

13 — The legislature passes the "Small Parks" act, authorising the board of street opening and improvement "to select, locate and lay out such and so many public parks . . . south of One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street, as the said board may from time to time determine."—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 320. Under this law the 1887 May 13 city acquired the following parks up to 1902: De Witt Clinton Park, Mulberry Bend Park, Hudson Park, the park at North and Baxter Sts. adjoining Mulberry Bend Park, Washington-Lafayette Park, and the East River Park extension.—Ann. Rep., Dept. of Parks (1902), 11. See also Je 4, 1897.

15 "The river and harbor improvement work in the vicinity of the city is at present going on somewhat slowly, owing to the fact that the last session of Congress did not result in adding to the appropriation for that purpose. The work, which is very diverse, is being carried on upon the unexpended funds remaining of the previous appropriation. It covers a wide area, however, and is of very general interest.

"In the East River, ever since Flood Rock went first up into the air and then down into the water, in October 1885 [see O 10, 1885], the task has been simply one of dredging. . . . Only one dredger is now at work, the second contract being in progress. The first was for the removal of 30,000 cubic yards and was completed in last July. The second covered 50,000 yards, of which 30,000 have now been taken away. The dredger has double crews and is at work night and day.

"The results thus far consist in a 350-foot channel across the reef, with a depth across the entire width of 18 feet. No wrecks have been known in Hell Gate since the explosion, where before they were of daily and, in fact, tidal occurrence. The estimated traffic passing through there is now $4,000,000 per day. . . .

"The work is by no means completed, however. To create a depth of 30 feet across the whole reef will require the removal of 350,000 cubic yards. Flood Rock proper is still out of water, though the rock is broken up to a depth of 30 feet. Its removal is simply a question of dredging. The Nigger Head Reef has a depth of 18 feet at low tide. The Hen and Chickens also has a depth of 18 feet and these two were the main obstructions. The Gridiron is almost bare at low tide, but the plans contemplate a uniform depth of 26 feet at low tide over the entire area.

"Over Frying Pan Rock, a reef about 200 by 100 feet in size, 1,000 feet north of Flood Rock, there is now a depth of about 18 feet, which is to be increased to the regulation limit. . . . Negro Point is at the south end of Ward's Island. This reef is 300 feet long and is about two acres in area. It will require to be mined and be subjected to the gentle suasion of 50,000 pounds of powder to destroy its present cohesiveness. . . .

"The Harlem River project by which the North and East Rivers will be united through a channel 15 feet deep, is in a promising condition. . . .

"The improvements in the Raritan Bay Channel, through to South Amboy, are well advanced, but require further work. . . .

"The most important work now in progress is the deepening of the main bay channel. Proposals have been asked for the dredging of 1,000,000 cubic yards in the vicinity of Flynn's Knoll and the award will be made next Wednesday. The knoll is a shoal two miles long, west and north of the South Spit. Its present minimum depth at low tide is 23 feet 3 inches. It is proposed to make a channel 30 feet deep and 1,000 feet wide. A contract has already been let for deepening and widening Gedney's Channel to the degrees named, and this work is now in progress. Gedney's and what is known as the main channel are the means of approach for all the large sea-going vessels. Work is also in progress for the deepening of Buttermilk Channel from 22 feet in places to 26 feet uniformly. Gowanus Creek is to be dredged to a depth of 18 feet up to the Hamilton-avenue bridge and Newtown Creek to a depth of 18 feet as far as the drawbridge.

"Surveys are also in progress to ascertain the condition of the bar. . . ."—N. Y. Times, My 15, 1887. See also ibid., Jl 9, 1890.

18 The commissioners of the sinking fund are authorised to acquire a site in the city and to erect thereon a building for the criminal courts.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 371. The corner-stone of the building was laid on Oct. 25, 1890 (q. v.).

24 The "Madison Square Garden Company" is incorporated by the legislature with a capital stock of $1,500,000. The company is authorised "to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise" the real estate bounded by 27th St., 26th St., Fourth and Madison Aves. and to "undertake, manage, and carry on . . . restaurants, theaters, exhibitions, industrial, mechanical, agricultural, horticultural, sanitary and all other shows, fairs, meetings, concerts, and all other lawful amusements and entertainments."—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 434. See Je 9, 1888. The old structure on the site named above (see Jl 17, 1880) was demolished in 1889 (q. v., Ag 7). May 24

As suggested by the tenement-house commission in 1885 (q. v., F 15), the legislature extends the requirement that no new tenement- or lodging-house "shall occupy more than sixty-five per centum" of an ordinary city lot, corner lots excepted (see Je 16, 1879), to old buildings that are being "enlarged or altered" or "converted to the purposes of a tenement or lodging-house."—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 288. 26

A fire starting in the Belt Line R. R. car-stables at 53d St. and Tenth Ave. destroys the stables, kills 1,400 horses, and burns six tenement-houses in West 54th St. and injures several others. The total loss is about $700,000.—N. Y. Times, My 28–Je 1, 1887. 27

Wm. O'Brien, Irish patriot and editor of United Ireland, is given a public reception at the Academy of Music, and resolutions are adopted expressing "the sympathy of the law-abiding people of New York with the evicted tenants, their condemnation of Lord Lansdowne and other evicting landlords, and the Governmental policy which supported them."—N. Y. Times, Je 3, 1887. See also ibid., Je 5, 1887. On June 6, O'Brien was received at the Press Club.—Ibid., Je 7, 1887. On June 7, a farewell dinner was held at the Hoffman House in his honour.—Ibid., Je 8, 1887. June 2

The Harvard Club (see 1865, and Ap 19, 1887) takes possession of its first club-house, at No. 11 West 22d St.—N. Y. Times, Ap 23 and Je 10, 1887. See, further, 1894. 9

A jubilee choral service to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Queen Victoria's accession to the throne is held in Trinity Church.—N. Y. Times, Je 20, 1887. See Je 21. 19

Queen Victoria's jubilee is celebrated by the British residents of New York at the Metropolitan Opera House. Speeches are made by Mayor Hewitt and Erastus Wiman. The Irish residents hold an anti-jubilee at Cooper Union "in honor of the victims of Queen Victoria's 50 years of misrule," the hall being draped in mourning.—N. Y. Times, Je 21 and 22, 1887. 21

An exterior street is ordered to be laid out along the westerly shore of the East River from 64th to 86th St.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 697. On May 10, 1888, the northerly limit of the street was changed to 81st St.—Ibid. (1888), chap. 272. 25

The N. Y. Central & Hudson River R. R. Co. is authorised to build a parapet wall 611 feet west of Eleventh Ave. from 60th St. to 72d St.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 714. "

A Board of Electrical Control is established by act of the legislature, whose powers and duties embrace the subjects of construction, maintenance, and control of electrical conductors, and their conduits or subways. Except by permission of this board, no poles or wires can hereafter be erected or retained above ground.—Laws of N. Y. (1887), chap. 716. "

The wooden statue of Justice which has stood on the dome of the city hall since 1859 (see My 7, 1860) is taken down because it is much rotted away and is liable to fall down and injure some one.—N. Y. Times, Jl 16, 1887. A new statue was erected on Nov. 3 (q. v.). July 15

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" is first acted, at the Madison Square Theatre, with Richard Mansfield in the dual title-role.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, II: 426. Sept. 12

An electric car is tried with success on the Fourth Ave. line from 32d St. to 117th St., and creates as much surprise as "that caused by the first steamboat on the Hudson." "The patent under which it is constructed is that of the Sprague Company. Under the seats in the car are storage batteries from which the electricity is conducted to an armature underneath. This armature's revolutions turn an axle which, by means of cog wheels, turns the axles of the car wheels. A big hard-wood box on either dashboard has a sliding bar by which the amount of electricity is graduated and the car stopped by cutting off the current."—N. Y. Times, S 24, 1887. The Railroad Men's Building or Railway Y. M. C. A., at n. e. cor. of Madison Ave. and 45th St., erected by Cornelius Vanderbilt for the use of the employees of the railroads entitled to use the Grand Central Station, is opened and formally inaugurated. Addresses are made by Mr. Vanderbilt, Chauncey M. Depew, and others.—N. Y. Times, O 4, 1887. See also ibid., O 9, 1887. Oct. 3

Charles Dickens, Jr., makes his first appearance before the 25

1887 Oct. 25 American public, at Chickering Hall. He begins a series of public readings from his father's works, starting with "Doctor Marigold" and a part of "Pickwick." He is introduced by Chauncey M. Depew.—N. Y. Times, O 26, 1887. See also ibid., N 12, 1887.

31 The Rutgers Presbyterian Church at 29th St. and Madison Ave. has been sold to the Scottish Masons and is to be known as "Scottish Rite Hall."—N. Y. Times, O 31, 1887; L. M. R. K., III: 931. See Ja 19, 1890.

Nov. 3 A new statue of Justice, made of copper and weighing 170 pounds, is erected on the dome of the city hall.—N. Y. Times, N 4, 1887. See Jl 15.

5 The trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine agree to purchase, for $850,000, the Leake and Watts Orphan Asylum property at 110th St. and Tenth Ave. (see N 1, 1843) as the cathedral site.—N. Y. Times, N 6, 1887; 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1816), 537–48; L. M. R. K., III: 932, 954. The asylum purchased a plot of 30 acres on the dividing line between New York and Yonkers and abandoned its old building on Oct. 27, 1891 (q. v.).—Hist., Charter, Act of Incorporation, etc., Leake & Watts Orphan House (N. Y., 1893?).

14 The city acquires from Daniel D. Lord and others the land at the intersection of Broadway and Amsterdam Ave. between 70th and 73d Sts. Here Sherman Square was laid out.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 971. It received its present name in 1891 (q.v., Mr 3).

27 The Christian Science Society, which has been holding informal meetings, holds its first regular Sunday service, in "Columbia Institute," No. 720 Sixth Ave.—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. — In this year, the bronze statue of Giuseppe Garibaldi, by G. Turini, was erected in Washington Square.—Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City, 135.

— In this year, Elisha Robinson published "Certified copies of important maps appertaining to the 23d and 24th wards, city of New York, filed in the register's office at White Plains, . . ."

— In this year, the New York Club occupied the Caswell residence, at the south-west cor. of Fifth Ave. and 35th St. See 1846.

— In this year, Edward Bellamy's Looking Backward appeared.—Encyclop. Brit., III: 694. See also Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 176.

— During 1888–89, the Tower Building, at 50 Broadway, was erected. Bradford Lee Gilbert was the architect.—Tablet placed on building in 1899 by the Soc. of Architectural Iron Manufacturers of N. Y.; L. M. R. K., III: 968; descrip. of Pl. 159-a, III: 841. This is generally accepted as the earliest example in N. Y. City of modern skeleton construction, in which the entire weight of the walls and floors is borne and transmitted to the foundations by a framework of metallic columns and beams.—See, however, O 1, 1855; and 19th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1914), 140–42, describing three earlier examples of very similar construction, the earliest one being in New York and the other two (one built in 1885) being in Chicago. The Tower Building was demolished in 1914.—Ibid.

— Between 1888 and 1889, the Church of the Ascension, on the north-west cor. of Fifth Ave. and 10th St. (see N 5, 1841), "was beautified by a new chancel, furnished by Stanford White, and adorned with angel figures by St. Gaudens, mosaics by Maitland Armstrong, a richly carved memorial pulpit and walls of Siena marble." Above these was placed a large picture of the Ascension painted by John La Farge and donated by the Misses Rhinelander.—Kings Handbook (1893), 356.

Jan. 5 The Society of Old Brooklynites addresses a petition to congress reviewing the burial of the remains of the prison-ship martyrs by the Tammany Society in 1808 (q. v., My 26), and the transfer of the remains from the temporary wooden vault on Jackson St. to the permanent tomb at Fort Greene (see Je 17, 1873), and requesting that at least $100,000 be appropriated for the erection of a monument to their memory. The petition was approved by the state legislature, the New York common council, and the Kings County board of supervisors. The society published its petition in this year, together with the names of 8,000 persons who perished on board the "Jersey." The whole number of prison-ship victims was stated to be more than 12,000.—A Christmas Reminder, etc. (pub. by Soc. of Old Brooklynites, 1888). Bills for appropriating money for the monument were introduced in congress in 1889 and 1890 but failed to pass.—An Appeal to the Congress of the U. S. from the Soc. of Old Brooklynites, etc. (1890). Regarding the question of the number of Americans who perished on board the British prison-ships, see Ap 25, 1783. The "Martyrs' Monument" was not erected until 1908 (q.v., N 14).

9 The Reform Club, organized "to promote honest, efficient, and economical government," is incorporated by Anson Phelps Stokes, Everett P. Wheeler, Geo. Haven Putnam, John De Witt Warner, Wm. M. Ivins, Robert B. Roosevelt, and E. L. Godkin.—Westminster Rev., CXXXVI: 609; King's Handbook, 564. See also N. Y. Times, Ja 6, 7, and 14, 1888. The first public meeting was held on Jan. 21 (q.v.). Mr. Stokes was elected the first president of the club.—Stokes Records, I: Part 2, p. 242.

10 Mayor Hewitt devotes the major part of his annual message to the board of aldermen to an explanation of the increased amounts for the different departments that appear in the "final estimate for 1888." He shows that many of the expenditures for new improvements are "mandatory upon the City," less than half the total amount being "subject to revision by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment." He believes the legislature "should have the power to reduce but never to increase the expenditures provided for in the City budget. In no other way can a proper responsibility be imposed upon the public officers for the control and expenditure of the public moneys."

Most notable in the message, however, is the mayor's expression of belief that the city "would largely gain by the abolition of all taxes upon personal property," even though "the amount thus collected at this time is about one-sixth of the whole amount of taxation." This tax, he argues, "is notoriously impossible of collection. . . . Those who ought to pay the most part of it pay the least, while the humble citizen, who is unable to 'fix up' his statements, is subjected to the full amount of lawful taxation." The mayor calls it "scandalous" when the "estates of widows and orphans and wards in chancery pay the full amount of taxation required by law, although in most cases it can be least afforded, while 'bloated' capitalists either entirely escape taxation or compromise for a very inadequate sum." If the taxes on personal property were repealed, he believes it would not be difficult "to devise a system of taxation upon corporations enjoying public franchises which would not be onerous to them, and which would more than make up the amount thus canceled."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1888), CLXXXIX: 28–67.

21 The newly organized Reform Club (see Ja 9) holds its first public meeting in the form of a "tariff-reform" dinner at the Metropolitan Opera House assembly-rooms. Pres. Anson Phelps Stokes, Congressman W. C. P. Breckinridge of Kentucky, Representative Melbourne H. Ford of Michigan, Col. Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier, M. D. Harter of Mansfield, Ohio, Frederick R. Coudert of New York, ex-Mayor Grace, Jackson S. Shultz, and Everett P. Wheeler make addresses.—N. Y. Times, Ja 22, 1888; Stokes Records, I: Part 2, 242. The immediate purpose of the club was the reform of the tariff "by reduction or abrogation of so-called protective taxes, especially of those either so discouraging to imports as to yield to the Government but a small revenue when compared with the enormous subsidies thereby compelled to be paid by the people at large to the favoured few, or so enhancing the cost of materials to manufacturers as to bar them from the markets of the world."—Westminster Rev., CXXXVI: 609.

30 Four large buildings on the west side of Broadway between Prince and Spring Sts. are destroyed by fire with a loss of $1,770,000.—N. Y. Times, Ja 31 and F 1, 1888.

Feb. 3 The Christian Science Society (see N 27, 1887) is incorporated as a church, called "Church of Christ, Scientist." It continued with this designation until April 7, 1896, when its name was changed to "First Church of Christ, Scientist, New York City."—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. Heitman, Christian Science Com. on 1888 Feb. 3 Publication of the State of N. Y. For its own church building, see N 30, 1899. Before its church was built, the Second Church was organized (see O, 1891), and was the first to build.—See Ap 2, 1899.

28 The Union Square Theatre, opened in 1871 (q.v., S 11) on the South side of 14th St., between Broadway and Fourth Ave., and the Morton House adjoining it at the corner of Broadway, are almost wholly destroyed by fire.—N. Y. World, F 29, 1888. See also illustration and description in Harper's Weekly, XXXII: 167, 173. The theatre was rebuilt and opened on March 27, 1889 (q.v.).

Mar. 3 The new Broadway Theatre, begun in 1887 at the south-west corner of Broadway and 41st St., is opened with the first American performance of Sardou's "La Tosca." Fanny Davenport plays the title role.—N. Y. Times, Mr 4, 1888; Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, III: 396; L. M. R. K., III: 982.

11 Between March 11 and 14, a great blizzard did much damage along the Atlantic coast, and business was temporarily blocked. An average depth of 22 inches of snow fell in New York.—N. Y. Times, Mr 13, 1888; Am. Meteorological Jour., May, 1888.

Apr. 12 James Russell Lowell, George Wm. Curtis, Anson Phelps Stokes, and others, speak at a "house-warming" of the Reform Club at 12 E. 33d St. On April 13, Lowell delivered an address on "The Place of the Independent in Politics," under the auspices of the club at Steinway Hall.—Stokes Records, I: Part 2, 244–45.

26 The legislature authorises the board of education to provide special classes "for the purpose of giving instruction in the English language to foreigners, whose ages or avocations are such as to prevent their attending the grammar, primary or evening schools."—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 183.

29 According to a prominent city official, "The architectural features of New York City are passing through a transitional period." He says in regard to the evolution in building and the changes which are now going on: "Of all the business buildings and a considerable portion of all other buildings that were erected over 20 years ago there will not, in my opinion, be one in a hundred remaining 10 years hence. Several reasons combine to confirm me in this conviction, the principal of which is the manifest demand for every possible square foot of enclosed space that can be had anywhere on Manhattan Island. This was not always so. Only within the last few years has the opinion gained general acceptance that the population of New York City . . . would assuredly in time fill every available foot of space on the island and continue to overflow as it has for years upon the contiguous shores.

"Now no one doubts that the island will within a few years be completely covered with buildings and that every building will be in constant demand. . . . The elevated railroads and the almost universal employment of elevators have so far reduced the time required in transit from the residence to the place of employment and return as to widely extend the possible limits of expansion of both the business and the residence districts. Further improvement in rapid transit, either by arcade, underground, or through-the-blocks railroads that will enable people to reach the centre of the business district from points beyond the Harlem River in the time now required to travel half that distance, will more than double the area of possible expansion of the business district and will extend the limits of possible expansion of the entire city almost beyond comprehension.

"But these time-economizing agencies—the elevator and rapid transit—are comparatively new institutions. Most of the structures of which the city is composed were put up before their advent and altogether without reference to them. . . . The various branches of business were concentrated in districts peculiar to themselves and in some measure they have retained their localities. The iron trade still haunts the east side below Spruce to Fulton street; the leather trade clings to 'the Swamp'; the tobacco trade divides the district between the Fulton, Wall, William and South streets with the cotton and cordage trades; jewelry is still the feature of Maiden-lane; groceries and provisions continue as of old to impart special features to the west side from Greenwich to West street and from Canal to the Battery; and the dry goods trade that some 40 years ago was centred about upper Pearl-street, has spread over the region between Duane and Houston and Elm and Greenwich streets. The office building district, beginning at the Battery and extending northward, has crowded all these districts in its continued expansion, until now it reaches along some of the avenues as far north as Canal-street. In a sense and to a certain degree these districts have become so firmly established that there is little prospect of any territorial expansion. Apr. 29

"But the amount of business to be transacted will steadily increase, and with it the need of more room in which to transact that business. The advent of the elevator made it possible to increase the area of available inclosed space without territorial expansion. This was to be gained by building the structures higher by several stories than they had ever been known before. . . .

"But with the increased size of the buildings came a greater demand than the country had ever previously known for architectural skill and science in their construction. New problems in economic and artistic architecture were involved that had not previously existed, and for which there were no precedents in the architectural archives of the world. In fact, it may be consistently stated that American architecture as an independent school began its existence with the invention and adaptation of the elevator. Previous to that the problems in civil architecture were in but few essentials different from those which all other civilized nations had faced for many centuries. . . . In a very few exceptional cases, such as the Capitol at Washington and the New-York City Hall, was precedent departed from in a manner, and an effort made to design something expressive of the new order of things in the new country. Outside of public buildings and churches there was but little demand for architectural science or little employment for the architect. And as a natural sequence the architectural force in America was recruited principally from foreigners of foreign education and who were full of foreign precedents for everything. . . .

"But with the advent of larger buildings the native school of architects began to make an impression upon the country—slowly and faintly at first, but in recent years emphatic and distinct. . . . In the beginning the materials at their disposal to work upon were necessarily meagre, for the country was comparatively new and far from rich. . . . And in the constant effort to secure artistic expression in their work the rising school of American architects had recourse to changes in the materials employed in the structures, some of which figured but for a short period in the building annals of the city—sufficiently long, however, to indicate an epoch in the general architectural growth of the city. First of all, of course, there was wood, but that speedily demonstrated its want of fitness as a material for the upbuilding of a great city. Then came the era of red bricks, as plainly and solidly thrown together as was possible and with hardly an effort at consistency of expression or artistic design. Then granite held a brief but more creditable sway. Several buildings in the lower part of the city of the simplest possible architectural appearance first appeared, followed toward the close of the era by the large and more pretentious building at the northwest corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, and lastly by the best expression in granite so far of all in the Astor House, a nearly perfect example of the Doric order of architecture.

"This was followed by a period during which iron in fanciful elevations, with some show of imitation of the Corinthian order of architecture, but in tout ensemble peculiarly amateurish American, divided with brick set off with stone the preference with builders. Then came the brownstone era, and with it more earnest and effective attempts at unity and consistency of architectural expression. Capable of easy molding with the chisel, and expressing intrinsically a higher merit than any of the materials thus far employed, it held popular favor for a longer period than any of its predecessors. . . .

"But the use of brownstone in business structures was early discontinued for the reason that it was quickly demonstrated that the stone would not withstand fire, but cracked and scaled and crumbled away before it as no other material employed in exterior walls was ever known to do. Within recent years its use has therefore been confined to the construction of dwellings and to occasional employment for window and door trimmings. . . . Until recently the real estate proprietors have not felt justified by the outlook in investing much in the higher forms of artistic structures. There was not that reliable promise of satisfactory returns upon the money invested in making their buildings artistically beautiful and harmonious in design that is now perfectly apparent. . . .

"But the change has come at last, and in response to the in-1888 Apr. 29 creased demand for more room that has come with the rapid increase in population and to the popular conviction that New York City is destined to become the most beautiful city in the Western Continent, if not in the whole world, the owners of property have begun the redemption of the city from its reproach of ugly monotony, and the older buildings are gradually giving way to the construction of more imposing edifices, many of them expressive of a higher order of architectural beauty than the world has ever before seen and which, although not departing in a pronounced manner from the ancient and established precedents, yet combines them with new departures in such effective and novel designs as to indicate a peculiarly American origin and to establish the American order of architecture."—N. Y. Times, Ap 29, 1888.

May 7 The legislature authorises the board of estimate and apportionment to appropriate a sum of money for the suitable celebration of the centennial year of the inauguration of Gen. Washington as the first president of the United States.—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 230. See Ap 24, 1889.

13 The old Times building, erected in 1857 (q.v., My 12) on the site of the old Brick Church, is being demolished.—N. Y. Times, My 13, 1888; descrip. of Pl. 152-b, III: 772. See Je 7.

18 By act of the legislature commissioners are designated to provide for the erection of a municipal building (such a building had been urged by several mayors—see Ja 10, 1884; Ja 4, 1886) "in the neighborhood of the county court house building . . . but not in the city hall park." The commissioners shall select the exact site and "advertise for the submission to them of plans and specifications for said building."—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 323. See Mr 27, 1889.

June 4 The legislature passes a law providing that all criminals sentenced to death shall be executed by electricity.—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 489.

5 The Normal College, heretofore in the charge of the board of education, is incorporated as a separate and distinct organization. —Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 580.

7 The corner-stone of the new Times building (see My 13) is laid on the old site at Nassau St. and Printing House Square.—N. Y. Times, Je 8, 1888. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXII: 817, 818.

9 The legislature authorises the "Madison Square Garden Company" (see My 24, 1887), with the approval of the mayor, "to construct and maintain an ornamental arcade over the sidewalks . . . immediately adjoining the property of said company." The mayor is to prescribe regulations "for the lighting and policing by said Madison Square Garden Company of said arcade when constructed."—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 534. The new "Garden" was opened on June 16, 1890 (q.v.).

" Provision for adult education, i. e., "for the benefit of working men and working-women," by the city board of education is authorised by the legislature. One school in each ward, "where practicable, shall be designated" for this purpose, and "at least three lectures shall be delivered in each school in each week" between Oct. 1 and March 31, except during the Christmas holiday season.—Laws of N. Y. (1888), chap. 545.

July 3 The Manhattan Bridge (later named Washington Bridge), from 181st St. on Manhattan Island to the bluff on the opposite shore (formerly the estate of Wm. B. Ogden), is completed.—N. Y. Times, Jl 3, 1888; L. M. R. K., III: 927. See also Hutton, The Washington Bridge (1889). See Je 11, 1885, and Jl 1886.

5 The Jackson Square branch of the N. Y. Free Circulating Library, in 13th St. near Eighth Ave., is opened. It is the gift of George W. Vanderbilt. This is the fourth branch library, the others being the Bond St. branch, the Ottendorfer on Second Ave., and the Bruce in W. 42d St.—N. Y. Times, Jl 6, 1888.

Aug. 13 The Convent of the Sacred Heart, at Manhattanville, between 126th and 135th Sts., Tenth and St. Nicholas Aves., burns. It was an imposing structure of brown stone, about 300 feet long and four storeys high. The central portion comprised the old Lorillard mansion, which, with the additions, had been occupied by the nuns for nearly 50 years. The convent was formerly on Houston, and later in Bleecker, St.—N. Y. World, Ag 14 and 15, 1888.

Aug. 13

The first electric car open to passengers in New York begins to run on the Fourth Ave. line between 86th St. and the Post Office. It was made by the Julien Electric Traction Co. A second electric car will be added in a week.—N. Y. Times, S 16 and 18, 1888. See S 23, 1887.

Sept. 17

The Plaza Hotel on the west side of Fifth Ave. between 58th and 59th Sts. is purchased by the N. Y. Life Insurance Co. for $925,000.—N. Y. Times, S 19, 1888. See also ibid., N 24, 1888. For the opening of the second Plaza Hotel on this site, see S 29, 1890.

"The spires of St. Patrick's Cathedral, at Fifth-avenue and Fiftieth-street, are now complete. . . . While these spires give the cathedral a finished appearance it still lacks much of realizing the original plan. There is yet to be built a chapel extending from the main building back between the Bishop's house and the priests house to Madison-avenue. This will make the entire structure 400 feet long. . . . A new sacristy will also be built by the northeast corner of the cathedral. When this shall have been completed the one now in use will be demolished. This will finish the exterior of the cathedral and will fill up the entire block bounded by Madison and Fifth avenue and Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets. But there is much interior decoration that will probably not be finished for years. There are several hundred niches to be filled with figures and there are 10 Chapels in which altars will be placed. . . ."—N. Y. Times, O 7, 1888; Farley, Hist. of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 140.

Oct. 7

Benjamin Harrison and Levi P. Morton, Republicans, are elected president and vice-president, defeating the Democratic nominees, Grover Cleveland and Allen G. Thurman, though Cleveland had a larger popular vote than Harrison.—McKee, National Conventions and Platforms, 232–59.

Nov. 6

Hugh J. Grant, the Tammany candidate, is elected mayor.—N. Y. Times, N 7, 1888. He succeeded Mayor Hewitt whom the County Democracy renominated and supported. The Republicans, however, nominated a separate candidate (Erhardt) who "took votes enough from Hewitt to elect Grant."—Wheeler, Sixty years of American life, 337. Grant was re-elected in 1890 (q.v., N 4).

The Daft electric motor is tried with success on the Ninth Ave. Elevated R. R. from 14th to 42d St. It draws three cars containing invited guests and takes up the electricity from a cable laid outside the track from 50th to 14th St.—N. Y. Times, N 27, 1888. In 1889 (q.v.), electric power was installed on the line.

26

The "Memorial House," adjoining St. George's Church on East 16th St. and given to the parish by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, N 27, 1888.

The state court of appeals renders an important decision regarding railroad franchises, a decision that was brought about by the action of the common council, on Feb. 9, 1885 (q.v.), in revoking franchises, and that of the legislature, on May 4, 1886 (q.v.), in annulling the charter of the Broadway Surface Railroad Co. The court holds that the latter corporation "took, through its grant from the city, an indefeasible title in the land, necessary to enable it to construct and maintain a street railway in Broadway and to run cars thereon," and that any questions which have arisen "with reference to the propriety of the means by which the corporators of the company obtained the consent of the municipal authorities [see Ag 30, 1884] are not involved in the case."—N. Y. Reports, Court of Appeals, CXI: 1–66.

— In this year, an elevated railroad case came before the supreme court "in which the fundamental question involved was whether the Dutch Roman law prevailed on Manhattan Island before 1664, under which law the railroad claimed that the State absolutely owned the streets and that adjacent owners had no rights or easements therein. This question depended upon the determination of the historical question who, under the law of nations, discovered and settled New York." To aid the court in the solution of this problem, Wm. Henry Arnoux presented an argument to prove "that under the law of nations as it has always been declared in both Europe and America the English were the lawful owners by right of discovery under governmental authority, perfected by taking possession long before the Dutch ever landed here, and continued by assertion of such ownership down to the time of the conquest. On the other hand, the Dutch were interlopers, intruders, squatters. They had no title in fee to the land before 1673."—Arnoux, The Dutch in Am. (1890), 3, 41-42.

Judge Arnoux did not mention the title of the case in which this argument was used, possibly because the case was still pending in the courts. It was the case of Hine vs. N. Y. Elevated R. R., the firm of Arnoux, Rich & Woodford appearing for the respondent when argued before the supreme court at the November term, 1889. See Supreme Court Reports, Vol. 61 (Hun, Vol. 54), 425; and Court of Appeals Reports, Vol. 132 (Sickles, Vol. 87), 571.

— In this year, the Narrative and Critical History of America, edited by Justin Winsor, was published.

— During the five years from 1885 to 1889, inclusive, 2,046,602 alien immigrants arrived at the port of New York.—Arrivals of Alien Passengers and Immigrants (Wash., 1891), 64, 108, 109.

— In this year, the Am. Art Ass'n brought to this country, exhibited and sold at the Am. Art Galleries the great collection of paintings, rugs, and relics, belonging to the Russian patriot, painter, and writer, Verestchagin.—Address of Mr. Thos. E. Kirby (1922).

— In this year, 60 sets of competitive designs for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine were received by the trustees in response to circulars sent out by the committee on architecture. The committee selected 13 of the designs and referred them to a group of experts composed of Chas. Babcock and Wm. R. Ware, architects, and John Bogart, engineer. After eliminating all others, four sets were recommended to the trustees for further action, namely those of Heins & La Farge, Halsey Wood, Wm. A. Potter, and Huss & Buck. These were exhibited at the National Academy of Design from March 24 to May 17, 1891. Finally, in July, 1891, the design of Messrs. Heins & La Farge was approved and accepted.—Cathedral Church of St. John the Divine (1916), 20.

The competition having been won by Heins & La Farge, the choir, two apsidal chapels, and the main structural elements of the crossing were carried out under their direction. The contract between the trustees and Heins & La Farge provided that, in the event of the death of either member of the firm, the trustees might terminate the contract. Mr. Heins died. The trustees thereupon terminated their contract with the original firm, and, on April 20, 1911, appointed Mr. Ralph A. Cram in his personal capacity as consulting architect. By authority of the trustees, he caused new preliminary sketches to be prepared showing how the work could be continued after a stylistic fashion differing from that determined by the original architects. These sketches were approved in principle by the trustees, and Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson, who in 1889 the meantime had acted as architects for synod house, bishop's — house, deanery, and chapel of St. Martin of Tours, were appointed on April 5, 1915, architects for the nave. Since then, Cram & Ferguson have been authorised to prepare complete preliminary sketches for the completion of the entire building; and have also been made architects for the west front, the north transept, the baptistry, and the chapter-house, and have been authorised to prepare plans of the remaining element,—i. e., the lantern and spire.—Information supplied by Canon R. E. Jones, and by Cram & Ferguson. Heins & La Farge's original plan was perhaps the most successful piece of ecclesiastical planning ever produced in America. The spire over the "crossing" was also a bold and effective innovation.

Electric traction was first introduced in New York on the — Ninth Ave. Elevated R. R. at the beginning of this year. Two years before, there were only 20 electric cars in operation in America. Thos. A. Edison operated an electric motor at Menlo Park in 1881. In 1883, Leo Daft, the electrician of the Daft Electric Light Co., made the first public exhibition with the electric motor-ampere on the Saratoga and Mt. McGregor Railway. It was Mr. Daft who introduced the electric motor in New York City. He had tried it on the Ninth Ave. line on Nov. 26, 1888 (q. v.)—N. Y. Tribune, F 24, 1889.

"Hamilton Grange" is moved from the west to the east side — of Convent Ave.—Mag. of Am. Hist. (1889), XXI: 6. It later became the rectory of the new St. Luke's Church, which stands beside it on the north-east corner of 141st St.—Ibid. (1892), XXVII: 336. See also descrip. of Pl. 153-c, III: 774. In 1924, the Grange was presented, by an anonymous donor, to the Am. Scenic and Hist. Pres. Soc. as a memorial.—N. Y. Times, N 18, 1924.

In this year, Troop A, an outcome of the First Hussars, was or- — ganized by Capt. (afterwards Gen.) Roe. It was a fashionable cavalry company like the Ancient and Honorables of Boston, or the Philadelphia City Troop.—King's Handbook (1893),538.

During the decade from 1889 to 1899, the Museum of Natural — History in Manhattan Square was greatly developed—the central section of the south building in 1889–1893; the east wing of the south building in 1893–1895; the west wing of the south building in 1895–1897; the south-east and south-west corner wings in 1897–1899. Acts of the legislature, authorising the enlargement and making appropriations for the purpose, were passed in 1871, 1875, 1887, 1889, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, and 1900. Ordinances of the board of aldermen for the same purpose were passed in 1902, 1903, 1905, 1909, and 1911.—Growth of the Building of the Am. Mu. of Nat. Hist. (1912).

In this year, additions covering the entire block bounded by — 70th and 71st Sts., Madison and Park Aves., were made to the Presbyterian Hospital.—21st Ann. Rep. (1889). The hospital was partially burned on Dec. 19.—N. Y. Times, D 20, 1889.

In this year, the College Settlement was established at No. 95 — Rivington St. by women college graduates. "The residents, with outside helpers, conduct clubs for women, boys and girls; classes in cooking, millinery, dressmaking, embroidery, kitchen-garden, wood-carving, drawing, singing, literature and municipal government; a library and reading-room; a penny-provident fund; and a kindergarten."—King's Handbook (1893), 421–22.

In this year, the "Penny-Provident Fund of the Charity Or- — ganization Society" was established "to inculcate habits of providence and thrift among the poor, by supplying them with facilities for small savings, such as savings-banks do not afford."—Ibid., 454.

In this year, Kenyon Cox, painter and illustrator, was a prize- — winner in the exhibition of the Natl. Acad. of Design. For his later successes, see Fielding's Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 80; also Helen W. Henderson, A Loiterer in N. Y. (1917), 450.

In this year, Nellie Bly made a record by travelling around the — world in 72 days, 6 hours, 11 minutes.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 559. See, however, Jl 21, 1901.

Mayor Grant sends his first message to the common council. Jan. He criticizes the acquisition of Van Cortlandt and Pelham Bay 7 Parks because they are too inaccessible "to the mass of our citizens," and "for years these lands will be utterly useless to the city, for park purposes, while it is indisputable that their maintenance and preservation will be a constant source of expense, estimated, I believe, at about $50,000 per annum." He suggests that the northerly portion of Van Cortlandt Park be sold to private purchasers, and that its boundaries be so changed "that the property

1889 Jan. 7 to be immediately benefited by the construction of the park will be wholly within the limits of the City of New York." Pelham Bay Park, he thinks, should be "utilized as a site for almshouses and charity improvement in place of those now maintained on Blackwell's Island;" and "Blackwell's Island could be readily converted into a park, which, at trifling expense, would be made easily accessible to all our citizens, while its extensive water-front could be made available for bathing purposes. Property along the East river would be greatly benefited by such a change and the health of the city materially improved."

The "necessity for an improved system of docks" is another subject discussed by the mayor. "At the present time there is little or no classification of shipping at our docks. Ferry-boats, seagoing vessels and the smaller craft which ply between this city and adjacent towns are crowded indiscriminately together. Passenger-boats and freight vessels sail from the same piers. Lines of trucks laden with merchandise render the streets in the neighborhood of the freight depots impassable to foot passengers. . . . In order to preserve the commercial primacy of our city, it therefore becomes our paramount duty so to improve and regulate our magnificent water-front that our supremacy as the chief port of the Western Hemisphere will be forever secured.

"It is now generally conceded that in order to make provision for our commerce it is essential that the city acquire title to all the water-front. The rights of private owners should therefore be acquired with as little delay as practicable. . . . On the East river, from Grand street to Eighth street, and from Seventeenth street to Thirty-fourth street, a plan of improvement has quite recently been adopted, which we may hope soon to see pushed to a successful completion."

Regarding the pavements, the mayor says: "The granite-block pavement appears to be the one best adapted to our climate and soil, though recent experiments on Madison avenue seem to show that in certain localities an asphalt pavement might meet the public requirements. The cost of both pavements being about equal, the selection might be determined by the character of the thoroughfare to be paved and the amount of traffic which it would be compelled to bear."

The "filthy condition" of the streets "is the cause of universal and well founded complaint," and Mayor Grant expresses his intention to do everything in his power "to see this state of affairs remedied."

As the system under which taxes are now collected is a source of confusion and annoyance, the mayor suggests the passage of a law providing that all taxes be collected by a single officer "so that the taxpayer may be readily afforded complete information as to the extent of his obligations."

Mayor Grant also reminds the board of the necessity for the construction of a municipal building as soon as possible, for the city is now paying about $100,000 per annum for the rental of offices for public departments. Although laws for this purpose were passed by the legislature in 1887 and 1888, nothing has been done by the city. The municipal building, the mayor says, "might well be erected upon the City Hall Park, although it is undoubtedly true that many good citizens are opposed to having this park encumbered by any additional buildings."

Electric wires and telegraph poles continue to disfigure the streets and obstruct the thoroughfares, notwithstanding the general demand for the burial of the wires.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CXCIII: 11–19.

26 The new West Washington Market, on the block bounded by Thirteenth Ave., West, Bloomfield, and Gansevoort Sts. (see Je 14, 1884), is formally opened, and the event is celebrated by a parade, a banquet, and addresses by Mayor Grant and others. The site was formerly that of Fort Gansevoort.—N. Y. Times, Ja 13, 15, 18, 20, 26, and 27, 1889. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXII: 1007–9, and L. M. R. K., III: 960. On Aug. 25, 1890, the market was partially destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Ag 26, 1890.

29 The United Service Club is organized, with a temporary clubhouse at 16 W. 31st St. It is composed of commissioned officers and ex-officers of the army, navy, and National Guard, and graduates of the U. S. Military and Naval Academies.—N. Y. Eve. Telegram, My 10, 1913; King's Handbook (1893), 560. See 1897.

Mar. 4 The first performance in America of the cycle of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" took place at the Metropolitan Opera House on March 4, 5, 8, and 11, 1889.—Brown, III: 446; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 895. Mar. 4

Benjamin Harrison is inaugurated president.—N. Y. Times, Mr 5, 1889. "

Proctor's 23d Street Theatre, built on the site of the old tabernacle, at 141 W. 23d St., near Sixth Ave., is opened by Neil Burgess in "The Country Fair."—N. Y. Times, Mr 6, 1889; King's Handbook (1893), 599. 5

A second act is passed by the legislature (for the first, see My 18, 1888) providing for the construction of a municipal building. The same commissioners as before are designated, but they are now instructed to choose a site within the park on the easterly side.—Laws of N. Y. (1889), chap. 81. See Instruction for Architects in preparing Plans for a Public Building to be erected in City Hall Park (1889), which shows that the commissioners had in mind a building "six stories in height including the basement." 27

The idea of putting the new building within the Park aroused much adverse comment. "Enormous sums of money are being expended," says the Tribune editor, "in the acquisition of open spaces in different parts of the city, and it is much to be regretted that a necessity should arise for diminishing a single one of those already possessed and enjoyed by the people." Also fear is felt that the city hall will not be left "to its quiet and graceful supremacy."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 25, 1889. See S 18.

The new Union Square Theatre opens with an English version of Scribe's "Bataille des Dames."—N. Y. Times, Mr 27 and 28, 1889; L. M. R. K., III: 986. The old theatre was burned on Feb. 28, 1888 (q. v.). "

The office of city chamberlain, "the most lucrative office in Mayor Grant's gift," is turned over to Richard Croker, "the recognized leader of Tammany Hall."—N. Y. Tribune, Ap 10, 1889. Apr. 9

"Ward McAllister's venture into the ranks of the great public to take a hand in the management of the centennial ball is likely to be attended with disastrous results to him as a social leader. When Mr. McAllister awoke to the fact that he was not the entire committee—merely a member of it—it astonished him. To have his dictates questioned in social affairs was a new, novel, and rather unpleasant experience. . . . [Cf. 1872.] "

"The trouble is that the deposition from leadership in centennial affairs isn't all that is liable to be the outcome of the sudden and startling discovery that the social world can wag without the assistance of Mr. McAllister. This latter fact has struck the society leaders, or those who would be such, with peculiar force. . . . It has led to more animated discussion in the Union and Knickerbocker Clubs than has any subject. . . . The matter was started at the Union Club, when a member, who is also a Patriarch, is said after an hour's deep thought, to have created almost a panic by the inquiry:

" 'I say there, would it be possible to give a Patriarch's ball and have it managed by a committee instead of by Ward McAllister, doncher know?'

"Society is deeply agitated by the matter. The Knickerbocker Club has already decided against Mr. McAllister. The Union Club is very evenly divided just now, with a tendency committee-ward, though the official action of the Governing Committee had not been bulletined up to midnight last night. The general belief, however, is that the next assembly of the Patriarch's will be under the management of a committee instead of under a dictatorship. Social lights fear that the result may be disastrous, but the male element in the much-talked-of four hundred seem determined because Mr. McAllister has actually brought them into scorn and ridicule by his failure to retain his dictatorship and thus their prestige."—N. Y. Times, Ap 9, 1889. The centennial committee appointed Edmund C. Stanton director of the ball, and McAllister, though nominally manager, was left without any important powers. He therefore resigned from the committee and did not attend the ball, which he criticized as "the most grossly mismanaged affair I ever heard of."—Ibid., Ap 10, 15, 19, and My 3, 1889. It was held on Saturday, April 29 (q. v.).

28 Services in honour of the centennial of Washington's inauguration are held in Trinity Church, St. Paul's Chapel, the Church of the Holy Trinity, the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church, St. Paul's M. E. Church, Chickering Hall, and the B'Nai Jeshurun Synagogue.—N. Y. Times, Ap 29, 1889.

" A triumphal arch, designed by Stanford White, and built of wood covered with "staff," is erected on Washington Square at the foot of Fifth Ave. by private subscription. The arch is surmounted by a wooden statue of Washington 10 feet in height. "This statue is said to have been erected on the Battery in 1792, and to have been the first erected in the city. It bears evidence of great age."—N. Y. Times, Ap 28, 1889; Harper's Weekly, XXXIII: 343, 344. The corner-stone of a permanent arch of granite, designed by the same architect, was laid on this site on May 30, 1890 (q. v.).

Regarding the alleged placing of a wooden statue of Washington "on the Battery in 1792," no record has been found to substantiate the statement. Richard Watson Gilder describes the temporary arch in Chap. 21 of Bowen's Hist. of the Centennial Celebration of the Inauguration of Geo. Washington (1892), 410, with a photographic view showing the statue in position. He refers to it simply as "a colossal wooden statue of Washington, of ancient workmanship." The N. Y. Hist. Soc. owns a small photograph of the statue, taken probably about 1898, showing it standing in the back part of a store. On the back of this picture is pasted a printed account of the statue containing the following statements, unsigned and unauthenticated, but probably intended to aid the sale of the statue: "It was erected at Bowling Green and placed in the small park in 1792, near Battery Park, to replace the Statue of King George. . . . The statue was the first erected in New York and bears convictions of its great age. . . . It stood for 51 years, from 1792 to 1843, in the small park at Bowling Green . . .; and was sold at auction on Liberty Steet to a collector of relics named Jaques, and after his death it was sold at auction to Mr. D. Schiff, and afterwards to Mr. F. Theobald who sold it to the present owner, Mr. Joseph Liebman, in 1892. . . . It is the only and oldest wooden statue of Washington in the United States, 106 years old [1792–1898?], 9 ft. 5 inches from the base and weighs over 800 pounds." The design of the statue is described as "in Continental uniform," etc. Joseph Liebman was a tobacconist with a shop at 266 W. 125th St. —See City Directory. A fuller account of the statue, by H. Dick, was published in the "Magazine" section of The World, Feb. 20, 1921. This reports that Liebman "opened negotiations with the Historical Society for its purchase," but that his price —$5,000— was too high to interest this society. The writer adds that, in 1913, the statue stood in front of a barber-shop at St. Nicholas Ave. and 182d St. The barber, like Liebman, tried to sell it to various patriotic societies. "But his ideas were even loftier than Liebman's. He wanted $10,000." Later, writes Dick, "Gen. Coleman Du Pont is said to have found it in a junk shop and bought it for $800 to give to the Historical Society of his native State, Delaware." It was placed in the basement of the city hall at Wilmington. Casual writers (see, e. g., the N. Y. Times, Ag 23, 1925) have used the statements from the Liebman photograph as authentic history; but, from the thorough researches undertaken for the present work, having particular regard for the known and discoverable monuments and statues of Washington in New York (see Index), it can be said with reasonable certainty that this wooden effigy never stood on either the Battery or Bowling Green.

The old common council always strictly safeguarded public property against private encroachment or incumbrances. There is no petition or permit in the minutes or filed papers of the city clerk, at any time, referring to this statue on either of these or any other public lands. Had it been placed there even briefly, without official authority, for some temporary celebration or otherwise, it would have been noticed and made known by some newspaper paragrapher, some correspondent, diarist, traveller-author, or guide-book writer; but no such mention of it has been found to substantiate the claim of the imaginative tobacconist. Its only claim to distinction is that it was placed atop the temporary memorial arch at Washington Square in 1889. Its origin and early history are unknown. Apr. 28

The celebration proper of the centennial of Washington's inauguration is begun with an enthusiastic welcome of Pres. Harrison, Vice-Pres. Morton, and other national officials, a brilliant marine parade, a public reception at the city hall, and a ball at the Metropolitan Opera House. The city is crowded with visitors and is everywhere decorated with flags and bunting.—N. Y. Times, Ap 28–30, 1889; The Cincinnati in the Centennial Celebration (1889), 84. See also Bowen, Hist. of the Centennial Celebration (1892); and Harper's Weekly, XXXIII: 357, 362, 365. One of the most interesting features of the day's events was the trip of the president and vice-president from Elizabethtown Port. They came in an open barge, as Washington had done, rowed by 13 sailors, and landed at the foot of Wall St. Cf. Ap 23, 1789. 29

On this day, the anniversary was commemorated with religious services in St. Paul's Chapel, where Washington used to attend; special exercises on the steps of the sub-treasury building at Wall and Nassau Sts. (the site of old Federal Hall), at which Chauncey M. Depew delivered the principal address; a military parade of nearly 50,000 troops; and a banquet at the Metropolitan Opera House. Centennial services were also held in the Collegiate Reformed Church, the South Church, St. Patrick's Cathedral, Calvary Baptist Church, the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and the Church of the Ascension.—N. Y. Times, My 1, 1889; The Cincinnati in the Centennial Celebration (1889), 84–85. See also Bowen, Hist. of the Centennial Celebration (1892), and Harper's Weekly, XXXIII: 375. 30

The third and last day of the centennial celebration is marked by a parade of trade and labour organizations, college students, benevolent societies, volunteer firemen, and Swiss, Italian, German, and Irish divisions.—N. Y. Times, My 2 and 3, 1889; The Cincinnati in the Centennial Celebration (1889), 85. See also Bowen Hist. of the Centennial Celebration (1892). May 1

Commissioners are designated by the legislature, to be known as "municipal bathing-house commissioners," who are authorised to erect within the second assembly district "a public bathing-house containing baths of hot and cold water and adapted to the different seasons of the year." The expense is not to exceed $75,000, and when completed it is to be under the control of the department of public works.—Laws of N. Y. (1889), chap. 452. This appears to have been the first public bathing-house other than the so-called "floating baths" moored on the river front. "

The Society of American Artists (see Je 1, 1877), the Architectural League of New York (see 1881), and the Art Students' League (see 1875) form the American Fine Arts Society. This is incorporated, on this day, under the Business Corporation Law by filing a certificate with the secretary of state, for the purpose of erecting a building as a home for these societies and headquarters of the graphic arts in New York.—King's Handbook (1893), 310; and sec. of state's records. 19

The Am. Art Ass'n buys, for 580,650 francs ($115,000), Millet's painting, "The Angelus," after the French senate's refusal to appropriate the money to buy it at a public sale in Paris. The painting measured 18 by 30 inches.—Kirby's Address. See O 13. July 16

Upon invitation of Mayor Grant, a number of prominent New Yorkers meet in the governor's room of the city hall to initiate measures for holding a world's fair in New York in 1892, in commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America. They authorise the mayor to appoint four committees for formulating detailed plans.—N. Y. Times, Jl 18 and 26, 1889. See also ibid., S 21, O 2, and D 27, 1889. 25

Sept. 18 — A hearing is held in Mayor Grant's office on the subject of the selection of a site for a new municipal building. Protests against the location of such a building within the Park (see Mr 27) were numerous, including one in the form of a "preamble and resolutions adopted by the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects."—N. Y. Tribune, S 19, 1889. For a new act of the legislature concerning the proposed building, see My 6, 1890.

Oct. 2 — The corner-stone of the present Academy of Medicine (see My 17, 1875) is laid in West 43d St.—N. Y. Med. Jour., Jl 22, 1911. It was opened on Nov. 20, 1890.—Ibid.; N. Y. Times, N 21, 1890.

7 — Barnard College opens at 343 Madison Ave.—N. Y. Times, O 8, 1889. At this time it had a provisional charter, but in Jan. 1900, it was incorporated as a part of Columbia University. It moved to its present site in the autumn of 1897.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 397–408. See also L. M. R. K., III: 939.

10 — The corner-stone of the World, or Pulitzer, building, is laid at Park Row and Frankfort St. on the site of French's Hotel, which was bought by Joseph Pulitzer in 1888 (N. Y. Daily Tribune, Mr 11, 1888). The Pulitzer building was completed and opened Dec. 10, 1890 (q. v.).—N. Y. World, O 11, 1889. See also L. M. R. K., III: 968; Harper's Weekly, XXXIV: 44, 47; and descrip. of Pl. 163, III: 846.

13 — Millet's "Angelus," for which the Am. Art Ass'n paid $115,000 (see Jl 16), arrives at New York. In November, it was exhibited at the American Art Galleries, 6 E. 23d St.—N. Y. Times, O 15 and N 16, 1889. It was resold later for $150,000; and now hangs in the Louvre.—Address of Mr. Thomas E. Kirby . . . Nov. 10, 1922.

20 — Plans are laid and work is about to begin on the Mulberry Street and Corlears Hook (see Je 14, 1884) Parks, and the widening or extending of several streets, notably College Place. Work is in progress on the High Bridge and East River (now Carl Schurz) Parks, the latter being enlarged by adding territory from 86th to 89th St. The car-line through Central Park at 86th St. is soon to be built.—N. Y. Tribune, O 20, 1889.

Nov. 13 — The mayor approves a resolution of the board of aldermen giving consent to the Broadway and Seventh Ave. R. R. Co., the South Ferry R. R. Co., and the successors to the franchises formerly held by the Broadway Surface R. R. Co., and to their successors and assigns respectively, to use cable power in the operation of the street surface railroads, owned or operated by them respectively, from Central Park to South Ferry by way of Seventh Ave., Broadway, Whitehall, State St., and Battery Place. This franchise permits the companies to make any changes in the construction of these roads or roadbeds, necessary for the use of cable power, upon certain specified terms and conditions.—Ordinances, Resolutions, etc., Approved by the Mayor, LVII: 158–59. See also The Cable Traction System of the Rapid Transit Cable Co. (1889). The Broadway cable line was completed in 1893 (q. v., My 17).

22 — The N. Y. Kindergarten Ass'n is organized, in the belief that the public school system of N. Y. City does not extend far enough, and that the children in their earliest years should have the benefit of kindergarten training. On March 10, 1890, the association opened its first kindergarten in the store floor of No. 351 E. 53d St., leased for the purpose. Its second school was opened on Oct. 27, 1890, at the n. w. cor. of First Ave. and 63d St. This association, for the benefit of the less fortunate children of New York, in its first year had the following officers: Richard Watson Gilder, president; Mrs. Grover Cleveland, 1st vice-president; Hamilton W. Mabie, 2d vice-president; Mrs. Sidney Webster, 3d vice-president; a board of managers, a secretary, and a treasurer. It was incorporated Feb. 12, 1892.—1st and 2d Ann. Reps., N. Y. Kindergarten Ass'n, pub. 1901 and 1902. Its work is described in "The Free Kindergarten" (reprint from Harper's Mag., 1905), issued by the N. Y. Kindergarten Ass'n (524 W. 42d St.), at which time there were 36 kindergartens under its direction.

Dec. 15 — Among the buildings now being erected in the city are Carnegie Hall on the corner of 57th St. and Seventh Ave., the new Century Club in 43d St. just west of Fifth Ave., the Lenox Lyceum on Madison Ave. near 59th St., and the Manhattan Athletic Club at the corner of Madison Ave. and 45th St.—N. Y. Times, D 15, 1889. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXIII: 876, 879, 892, 895.

Dec. 16 — The delegates to the pan-American congress recently held in Washington arrive on a visit to New York, and are welcomed by a reception committee. Mayor Grant later received them at the city hall.—N. Y. Times, D 17, 1889. See also ibid., D 18, 19, 20, and 21, 1889. They left for Washington on Dec. 21.—Ibid., D 22 and 26, 1889.

— "Prior to 1890, the automobile was merely waiting for the proper type of engine to make it a popular success. In 1887, R. E. Olds built a buggy driven by a steam engine, in which the steam was produced by using gasoline as a fuel. In 1889, Serpollet and De Dion in France revived the flash boiler principle and gave the steam carriage a fresh impetus. They made it a success, but it came at a time when the gasoline engine was about to enter the field. In Germany, two engineers, Daimler in Cannstadt and Benz in Mannheim, attempted to solve the problem by substituting for the steam engine an explosion motor. After trying other methods Daimler took out a patent in 1885 for a vehicle driven by a petrol motor, and this was the beginning of the modern automobile. Daimler sold his patent in France to Panhard and Levassor in 1889, and they began the construction of motor cars as they are to-day, the first car being completed in 1891."—"The Evolution of the Automobile," by John J. Macfarlane, in Commercial America (F, 1917), XIII: 11. See, further, 1892.

Jan. 6 — Mayor Grant, in his annual message, informs the common council that the city debt has been increased during the past year by $7,349,936.94, due largely to the purchase of new parks. He calls attention to the fact that at present "the water supply can scarcely be deemed adequate to the necessities of its people," as the daily supply is still 112,000,000 gallons, as it was five years ago, although during that time the city has greatly increased in population, buildings, manufactures, and commerce. However, the approaching completion of the new Croton aqueduct with its capacity of 300,000,000 gallons per day makes it certain "that before the close of the year we will be in the enjoyment of such a generous supply of water as will meet every requirement of the population."

The matter of street pavements, long a source of criticism and reproach, has been solved to some extent. "In obedience to a general demand by property-owners, residents and the newspaper press, it has been decided to adopt smooth asphalt pavements for those streets which are not extensively used for business purposes. In laying these pavements the Department of Public Works has adopted a form of contract by which the companies who undertake the work are compelled to guarantee that the pavement will be kept in a condition of thorough repair for the space of fifteen years, free of all expense to the City, and for these pavements with this guarantee of permanent maintenance the total cost will be less than the amount paid for the pavement now upon Fifth avenue, which, after a few years of use, is already in need of repair."

1890 Jan. 6 Since Jan., 1889, the bureau of incumbrances has removed 2,495 telegraph poles and about 14,500,000 ft. of electric wires; and it is "confidently believed that every pole will be removed from the streets and that every electrical wire will be operated under ground in properly constructed subways" by the end of next summer.

Several "laudable reforms," says the mayor, have been accomplished in the department of public works. "By dispensing with the services of unnecessary employees and by the reduction of excessive salaries a saving in the expenses of this department has been effected, amounting to $50,000 a year. The law which provides that all contracts shall be let to the lowest bidder after an honest competition has been obeyed in its spirit as well as in its letter. By the terms of the statute such letting is compulsory only where the amount to be expended exceeds the sum of $1,000. In former years a few contractors obtained by private arrangement, without competition, contracts which often were for one dollar less than that sum. This system of awarding $999 contracts by private agreement has been abolished, and no work or materials involving the expenditure of more than one hundred dollars are now ordered, except upon competitive bids."

During the past year, "the city has obtained possession of the plot of ground immediately north of the City Prison. The old structure of the Harlem Railroad Company has been removed and the ground has been made ready for the construction of a criminal court. . . . The erection of this building will be pushed to a speedy completion so that the expense of transporting prisoners between the Tombs and the Courts may be saved to the city."

The construction of a municipal building for the accommodation of the various city departments is still a great need.

The mayor complains that the state legislature has for many years treated the city unjustly. "The State Board of Equalization has uniformly fixed the valuation of real estate within this county at a much higher percentage of its real value than is established for any of the other counties of the State. The taxpayers of this city are, therefore, compelled to pay an unjust proportion of the cost of the government of the State." Also, in every city and village outside of New York, armories are constructed at the expense of the state, while this municipality is forced to issue its own bonds for the purpose. In consequence, New York City is not only compelled to pay for its own armories, but also to bear about 45% of the cost of all the armories erected in other parts of the state.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CXCVII: 6–19.

This edifice was removed in July, 1925, to make way for an office building; and a new church was built on the north side of 73d St. adjoining the Ansonia Hotel. This was dedicated on March 21, 1926.—N. Y. Times, Mr 22, 1926.

30 The 8th Regiment armory, erected on the west side of Park Ave., between 94th and 95th Sts., is opened. The 8th Regiment, which had its beginning in 1786, did duty at Fort Gansevoort, foot of West 13th St., in the War of 1812, and served in the Civil War and the Spanish War. For a time it occupied the upper part of Centre Market, Grand and Centre Sts.—*Souvenir of the Grand Opening of the new Armory of the Eighth Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y. However, the club remained here only until 1899 (q. v., My 2).

4 Andrew H. Green presents a memorial to the legislature having as its object to emphasize the importance of official inquiry into the expediency of enlarging the area of the city of New York. After calling attention to his earlier communication (see D 30, 1868), he says: "The encounter is one between the retreating forces of the tribal system and the coming forces of the cooperative system, between barbaric tradition and educated aspiration, to which there can be but one result, when the frontier lines of the Manhattan, the Montauks and the Raritans shall be obliterated, and New York, Brooklyn, Long Island City and Staten Island shall be one politically as they are already in every other relation. . . . There are some spheres of administration whose proper regulation is most vitally important to the common welfare and which must be apportioned out among different territorial authorities. The navigable water system of the port belongs in common to all the cities and towns and counties of the port. Its development and protection is the concern of all, but under existing arrangements is the duty of none. . . . The rogueries of garbage and mudscow boatmen in making the channels dumping place for all sorts of waste are past finding out. From Sandy Hook to Yonkers all the shore and all the water space is open to lawless enterprise. Every little district has its marauders, who by encroachment, appropriation, and misuse deplete the general system to transfuse its vitalities into some niggard scheme of individual profit."—Assembly Docs. (1890), II, Doc. 71.

25 Congress passes an act providing that the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus shall be celebrated in 1892 by an international exhibition at Chicago.—Laws of U. S., 51st cong., 1st sess., chap. 156. See O 21, 1892.

26 The legislature provides for a bi-partisan commission of 38 members, to be appointed by the governor with the concurrence of the senate, to revise the judiciary article of the state constitution.—Laws of N. Y. (1890), chap. 189. This commission rendered a report on March 4, 1891 (q. v.).

27 Protestant Episcopal services are held for the last time in Zion P. E. Church at the s. e. cor. of Madison Ave. and 38th St., and the consolidation of Zion Church with St. Timothy's is consummated.—N. Y. Times, Ap 25 and 28, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 934. The united congregations erected a new church (see Ap 29, 1891), and the old Zion Church edifice was sold to the South Reformed Dutch congregation (see N 30).

30 The legislature incorporates the New York and New Jersey

1890 Apr. 30 Bridge Co. for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a permanent bridge across the North River between N. Y. City and New Jersey. The bridge is to be commenced on or before Jan. 1, 1892, and to be completed on or before Jan. 1, 1897. Its terminus in New York City is to be somewhere between 10th and 181st Sts.—Laws of N. Y. (1890), chap. 233. On March 3, 1896, the time for completing the bridge was extended to Jan. 1, 1907.—Ibid. (1896), chap. 67.

" Ground is broken for the permanent Washington Memorial Arch.—N. Y. Herald, My 1, 1890. See My 30.

May — The Astor Place Opera House, which has been used by the Mercantile Library Association since April 19, 1854 (q.v.), is demolished and a new library building begun on the same site (see Jl 16). This was completed Nov. 9, 1891 (q.v.).—71st Ann. Rep., Merc. Library Ass'n (1892); L. M. R. K., III: 956; Harper's Weekly, XXXIV: 347, 348. See also Sun, N 2, 1920, and N. Y. Times, N 7, 1920.

6 A third act is passed by the legislature (for earlier ones, see My 18, 1888, and Mr 27, 1889) looking to the construction of a municipal building. The commissioners of the sinking fund, together with the surrogate, the clerk, and the register, are to be a board of commissioners, which board shall choose a site, "but not in the city hall park" (see S 18, 1889), advertise for plans, and award contracts. The contracts are to be carried out "under the direction and supervision of the commissioner of public works."—Laws of N. Y. (1890), chap. 299.

8 An act is passed to create a commission to inquire into the expediency of consolidating the various municipalities in the state of New York occupying the several islands in the harbour of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1890), chap. 311; Foord, Life and Public Services of A. H. Green, 186. The commissioners of inquiry appointed under this act were John Bogart of New York City, state engineer; John H. Brinckerhoff, of Queens County; George R. Cathcart, Frederic W. Devoe, Andrew H. Green, John L. Hamilton, and Calvert Vaux, of New York City; George Wm. Curtis, of Richmond County; Edward F. Linton, J. S. T. Stranahan, and Wm. D. Veeder, of Brooklyn; and Charles P. McClelland, of Westchester. The commission organised with Andrew H. Green as president.—Ibid., 186–87. See Ja 25, 1893.

13 The dept. of pub. works issues proposals to contractors "for furnishing materials and performing work in the repairing the north front of the City Hall with artificial stone, and painting the same." The contract was let on June 4, and called for completion of the work in 60 days. The specifications called for the repair of cornice, balustrade, urns, carved caps, windows, doors, etc., and painting the entire north front. The total cost is about $5,000.—From the original contract in auditor's office, dept. of pub. works. See S 20, 1830 and Ap 1, 1833.

" The corner-stone of Carnegie Hall is laid by Mrs. Carnegie.—N. Y. Herald, My 14, 1890. On May 5, 1891 (q.v.), the hall was opened. See also L. M. R. K., III: 983.

18 Announcement is made that "Helen Keller, aged ten, a deaf, dumb, and blind girl from Tuscumbia, Ala., whose remarkable mental development in the face of the tremendous handicap imposed on her by nature, has been the theme of much delighted comment, has within the last six weeks been taught to speak intelligibly." Her education is described.—N. Y. Times, My 25, 1890.

19 Richard Mansfield appears at the Madison Square Theatre in the title-role of "Beau Brummell." The impersonation proved a distinct achievement in New York's dramatic annals.—Brown, II: 432.

27 Wm. Waldorf Astor intends to erect a monster hotel at 33d St. and Fifth Ave., on the site of the old Astor residence. It will be under the management of George C. Boldt.—N. Y. Times, My 28 and 29, 1890. The hotel became the Waldorf.—Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 192. For an account of 12 new hotels which are about to be built in the city and of the chief ones now existing, see N. Y. Times, O 19, 1890.

30 The corner-stone of the permanent "Washington Memorial Arch" (see Ap 30) is laid at the lower end of Fifth Ave.—N. Y. Herald, My 31, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 965. The arch was dedicated on May 4, 1895 (q.v.).

June 16 The new Madison Square Garden designed by McKim, Mead & White, one of the largest halls of public entertainment in the world, is opened with a concert by Strauss's orchestra at which at least 10,000 people are present. The building extends from 26th to 27th St. and from Madison to Fourth Ave.—N. Y. Times, Je 8 and 17, 1890; Harper's Weekly, XXXIV: 281, 282. The original building on this property, erected in 1863 as a passenger station for the N. Y., N. H., & H. R. R., was leased to P. T. Barnum and others in 1873 as an amusement place, and was successively used as a museum, religious meeting place, circus, and concert hall. In 1879 (q.v., My 22 and 29), it was named the Madison Square Garden, and in 1889 (q.v., Ag 7) it was demolished prior to the erection of the new Garden.—Brown, Hist. of the N. Y. Stage, III: 88–89; L. M. R. K., III: 984–85. See also descrip. of Pl. 168, III: 851. June 16

The People's Municipal League is organised.—N. Y. Times, Je 25, 1890. 24

The corner-stone of the Judson Memorial Baptist Church is laid at Washington Square and Thompson St., in honour of Adoniram Judson, the first American missionary to foreign lands.—N. Y. Times, Jl 1, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 928. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXIV: 905, 906. The church was completed in 1892.—King's Handbook (1893), 379. 30

Alterations were made at this time in Fraunces Tavern. The "whole first story was ripped out, some of the original first-floor timbers which had survived the fire of 1852 being sold for souvenirs. Hitherto the first floor had been a few steps above the street level. It was now brought down to the level of the sidewalk, and in place of the original first story walls on Broad and Pearl streets, iron columns and plate glass windows were inserted."—12th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1907), 72; descrip. of Pl. 167-b, III: 850; L. M. R. K., III: 978. See Je 5, 1904, and Ag, 1906. July —

The Sherman Anti-Trust Act becomes a law.—Macdonald, Select Statutes, etc., 395–97. 2

The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land on the east side of Fourth Ave. between 33d and 34th Sts. Here the armory of the 71st Regiment was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 139. 3

The new aqueduct from Croton Lake, "begun in 1883" (error for 1885), is opened, though not quite completed, and the water is let into the big double reservoir in Central Park, starting from the gate-house at 135th St. This reservoir holds 1,000,000,000 gallons. The aqueduct has a capacity of 318,000,000 gallons a day to Jerome Park, where a receiving reservoir is built for supplying the annexed district. Below Jerome Park, the capacity is 250,000,000 gallons a day to 135th St., the southerly terminus. From this point eight 48-inch pipes carry the water. Four of the pipes go to Central Park; the other four branch off to direct connections with the city's distributing mains, one at 125th St., a second at Manhattan Ave., a third at 110th St., and the fourth at 100th St.—N. Y. World, Jl 15 and 16, 1890. For a detailed description of the work of construction, see Wegmann, op. cit., 115–87; Century Mag., XXXIX: 205. The new aqueduct was finally completed on June 24, 1891 (q.v.). 15

The corner-stone of a new Clinton Hall (the third) is laid for the Mercantile Library Association on the old site at Astor Pl. and 8th St. (see My).—N. Y. Times, Jl 17, 1890. The association moved into the new building on Nov. 9, 1891.—Ibid., N 10, 1891; 71st Ann. Rep., Merc. Library Ass'n (1892). 16

The Western Union Telegraph building, at the n. w. cor. of Broadway and Dey St., is almost destroyed by fire, and telegraphic communication with the city is cut off.—N. Y. Times, Jl 19, 1890. See also ibid., Jl 20–26, 1890. 18

The 155th St. viaduct is commenced. It was completed Oct. 2, 1893, having been erected under plans approved by the board of estimate and apportionment, pursuant to chap. 576 of Laws of 1887.—N. Y. Times, Ag 15, 30, and 31, 1890; also tablet at east end of viaduct. See also maps filed in bureau of topography, borough president's office, as maps No. 3535 and 4176. Aug. 14

The Democratic Club of the City of New York is incorporated. Its club-house was at 617 Fifth Ave.—Club Book (1891). This was demolished in 1925 to make way for part of the Saks & Co. building. 18

The new Garden Theatre at Madison Ave. and 27th St., one of the departments of the Madison Square Garden enterprise, is opened with a performance of "Dr. Bill." Wilton Lackaye plays the title role.—N. Y. Times, S 14 and 28, 1890. Sept. 27

A tablet is placed by the Holland Society on the wall of No. 4 Bowling Green to mark the site of Fort Amsterdam and of the 29

1890 Sept. 29 government house. Other tablets are to be placed at No. 45 Broadway, "the place where the first habitations of white men on Manhattan Island were situated;" at the north-east corner of Pearl St. and Coenties Alley, the site of "the first Dutch house of entertainment in New York, afterward the old Stadt Huys, or City Hall;" at Third Ave. and 13th St., where Stuyvesant's pear tree formerly stood; at the north-east corner of Broad St. and Exchange Place, to mark the site of the first New York exchange, established in March, 1670; at the north-east corner of Nassau and Cedar Sts., the site of the old Middle Dutch Church, later used as the post-office; at the south-east corner of Broad and Pearl Sts., where the old Fraunces Tavern, erected by Etienne De Lancey, stood; and at about No. 115 Broadway, the site of the historic De Lancey house, afterward the City Hotel.—N. Y. Times, S 30, 1890. See also L. M. R. K.

" The new Plaza Hotel at 59th St. and Fifth Ave. is opened.—N. Y. Times, S 30, 1890; King's Handbook, 222. See S 18, 1888.

" The corner-stone of St. Michael's P. E. Church, at the n. w. cor. of Amsterdam Ave. and 99th St., is laid by Bishop Potter.—N. Y. Times, S 30, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 934.

Oct. 3 Louis Philippe Albert, Comte de Paris, and his eldest son, Louis Philippe Robert, Duc d'Orléans, arrive at New York and are welcomed by a committee of veteran Union generals in commemoration of the count's services to the Union during the Civil War. The party is escorted to the Windsor Hotel.—N. Y. Times, O 4, 1890. See also ibid., O 5 and 6, 1890. After visiting Trenton, Philadelphia, Gettysburg, and other points in the South, they returned to New York, and on Oct. 20 the survivors of the army of the Potomac held a banquet in the count's honour at the Plaza Hotel. They sailed for home on Nov. 1.—Ibid., O 7, 17, 19, and 31, 1890. See also N. Y. Times Mag., Ag 24, 1919.

5 The most costly buildings in the city, excluding federal and municipal buildings, are the Navarro flats erected by the Central Park Apartment Co., the Equitable Building, St. Patrick's Cathedral, the Mills Building, the Dakota Apartment House, and the Plaza Hotel, the costs of which ranged from $4,200,000 to $2,000,000.—N. Y. Times, O 5, 1890.

11 The Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution is organized at Washington, D. C.—Constitution and By-laws (1893).

25 The corner-stone is laid for the new criminal court building (see My 18, 1887), bounded by Franklin, Centre, Elm (later, Lafayette), and White Sts.—N. Y. Times, O 26, 1890; Message of Mayor Grant, Ja 5, 1891, p. 18. It was erected under the direction of the commissioners of the sinking fund and the department of public works (see tablets in entrance corridor), and was completed in 1893, at a cost of $1,500,000 (without its furnishings).—Message of Mayor Gilroy, Ja 9, 1894. The N. Y. State arsenal formerly occupied this site.—L. M. R. K., III: 974.

28 The name of Ave. B, from 79th St. to 89th St. is changed to East End Ave.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, LVIII: 177.

Nov. — "The embarrassment of the Barings in London had a very disturbing effect upon the stock market in New York. . . . The decline in prices caused eighteen Stock Exchange failures."—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 66; N. Y. Times, N 16 et seq, 1890.

4 Hugh J. Grant (see N 6, 1888) is re-elected mayor.—N. Y. Times, N 5 and 6, 1890; Ann. Cyclop. (1890), 622.

30 The South Reformed Dutch Church takes possession of the edifice at 38th St. and Madison Ave., formerly Zion P. E. Church. It moved here from Fifth Ave. and 21st St.—N. Y. Times, D 1, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 934, 936; records of the church (by courtesy of Rev. Thos. R. Bridges). Christian Science services were conducted here prior to the demolition of the building in 1917.

Dec. 7 A tablet is unveiled in St. Paul's Chapel in memory of the centennial celebration of the inauguration of Pres. Washington.—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1890.

10 The new Pulitzer Building (see O 10, 1899) is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, D 11, 1890; descrip. of Pl. 163, III: 846. It is the tallest office building in the city.—N. Y. World, D 10, 1890.

17 Old Christ Church, erected (as a Baptist Church) in 1858 at the south-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 35th St., is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, D 18 and 19, 1890; L. M. R. K., III: 932.

— In this year was published an atlas of 13 maps, by J. R. Bien and C. C. Vermeule, New York, entitled Atlas of the Metropolitan district and adjacent country comprising the counties of New York Kings, Richmond, Westchester and part of Queens in the state of New York, the county of Hudson and parts of the counties of Bergen, Passaic, Essex and Union in the state of New Jersey; showing in a series of maps the relative geographical position, the topography, hydrography and economic features of this area. 1891 —

— In this year, there were 37,358 tenement-houses in New York, with a total population of 1,225,421.—Gould, Housing of the Working People (1895), 72.

— In this year, cable traction was established on the surface roads in Broadway and Third Ave., and a new pavement was laid, at the same time in Broadway from Bowling Green to 32d St.—Message of Mayor Grant, Ja 4, 1892, pp. 12–13. See also Street Railway Jour., XVII: 681. In 1901 (q.v.), the cable system was changed to electric.

— In this year, the Century Association erected its present building on the north side of 43d St. near Fifth Ave. (No. 7 W. 43d St.). McKim, Mead & White were the architects.—Liber Deeds, MMXI: 458. See also summary under D, 1846. The statement in L. M. R. K., III: 937, that the building occupies the site of the Latting observatory, is clearly erroneous, as the observatory stood on the north side of 42d St. opposite the Crystal Palace (see Mr 25 and Je 30, 1853).

— In this year, largely through the efforts of Mr. A. C. Bernheim, the University Settlement Society was organized "to bring men and women of education into closer relations with the laboring classes of this city for their mutual benefit." The N. Y. Neighborhood Guild (see 1887) was merged in the society, and the Guild House at No. 147 Forsyth St. became the first "settlement." In 1893, the society moved to 26 Delancey St.—Univ. Settlement Soc. Bulletin (Jan., 1892), 3–6, 15–18; Ann. Rep., Univ. Settlement Soc. (1894), 11. King, writing of the society in 1893, said: "It aims to establish 'Settlements' in the tenement-house districts, where college men interested in the work may live, and mingle with their poor neighbors, on terms of perfect equality, somewhat after the plan of the famous Toynbee Hall, in London. It maintains the Neighborhood Guild, at 26 Delancey Street, which includes kindergartens, gymnasium, boys' and girls' clubs, a reading-room and circulating library, penny-provident bank, concerts, and lectures, besides dancing, cooking, sewing, singing and other classes. It has organized the Tenth-Ward Social Reform Club, to establish public baths, laundries, kitchens, lavatories, parks, co-operative stores, sick benefit societies, etc."—King's Handbook (1893), 421. See 1898.

— During this year, the improvement of Riverside Park from 72d St. to 79th St. was completed.—Ann. Cyclop. (1891), 586.

Jan. 1 The board of taxes and assessments publishes The land map of the city of New York, bearing this date. It is an oblong folio atlas of 43 sheets.

2 A fire in the Fifth Avenue Theatre in W. 28th St. entirely destroys the playhouse and badly damages Herrmann's Theatre and the shops and offices in Broadway between 28th and 29th St. The upper storeys of the Sturtevant House on the east side of Broadway are also injured.—Eve. Post, Ja 3, 1891; L. M. R. K., III: 984. See My 28, 1892.

5 Mayor Grant communicates his third annual message to the common council. He says that during the past year the city debt has decreased nearly $600,000, and that though the most important subject under consideration during his first term was rapid transit, it is no nearer solution than it was two years ago. The proper cleaning of streets is also a subject of great importance with which little progress has been made, as well as the construction of a municipal building, a site for which has not yet been selected. Since May 1, 1889, about 320,000 sq. yds. of asphalt pavement have been laid, and New York now has more of this pavement than either London or Paris. In addition, the mayor says:

"The efficient administration and consequent excellent condition of the Fire Department have reduced the average loss per fire from $1,709.29 in 1888 and $1,451.03 in 1889 to $1,172.64 in 1890. . . .

"The system adopted by the Dock department of increasing the wharfage facilities of New York is to be commended. Twenty-two new piers are now being extended and the wharfage facilities of New York will shortly be so increased that all the large Atlantic steamers can have ample accommodation. . . .

"The work of removing the poles and overhead wires has been continued during the past year. . . . There have been removed 1891 during the year, 1,361 poles and 18,949,645 feet of overhead wire. . . .

Jan. 5 "The hospitals, asylums and other charitable institutions of the city are in a crowded condition. Instead of trying to extend them where they are now located and where the area for extension is limited, it would be as well gradually to remove them beyond the city limits. In this event several of the islands on which these institutions are situated could be turned into public parks. In case arrangements can be made to induce the Federal authorities to abandon Governor's Island as a military post, such action should be taken by the City and State authorities as will insure the use of that accessible place for a public park. . . .

"It would be a neglect of my duty were I to fail to again protest against the treatment of New York by the Federal authorities and the State Legislature. New York is the greatest city on this continent. It will in time be the greatest in the world. As the first city in the United States it was entitled to the World's Fair. As a matter of right it is entitled to a truthful enumeration of its population and to proportionate representation in Congress and the Electoral College. That representation has thus far been denied. . . . The reports of the various departments and the enumeration made by the Police force show that New York has 200,000 more people than the Federal authorities have given us credit for. I have no power to do more than has been done to redress this grievous wrong. A population less than the omitted people is now represented by six Senators of the United States and three members of the Federal House of Representatives."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCI: 6–15.

10 Castle Garden (see Ap 18, 1890) is formally turned over to the park department.—Eve. Post, Ja 10, 1891.

31 A second "Rapid Transit Act" (for the first, see Je 18, 1875) is passed by the legislature providing for a board of five "rapid transit railroad commissioners," to be appointed by the mayor, all of whom shall be residents of the city. It is particularly stated that surface roads are not under the commissioners' jurisdiction, and they are expressly forbidden to construct an elevated road on Broadway south of 33d St., Madison Ave., Second Ave. below 23d St., Nassau St., "Printing House square, so called, south of Frankfort St.," Park Row, south of Tryon Row, Broad St., or Wall St.—Laws of N. Y. (1891), chap. 4. See also The Rapid Transit Act, pub. by Bd. of Rapid Transit R. R. Comrs., 1906, and N. Y. Times, Jl 11 and 26, 1891. The commissioners named under this act presented a report on Oct. 20 (q.v.).

Feb. 11 The second part of the sale of paintings belonging to Geo. I. Seney (see Mr 31, 1885), took place in the assembly-room of Madison Sq. Garden on Feb. 11, 12, and 13. The sale yielded $665,550.—A Plan and Interesting Information concerning the Am. Art Ass'n. On Feb. 7 to 9, 1894, a sale of the paintings, etchings and engravings, for the estate of Geo. I. Seney, deceased, realized $213,703.—Ibid.

18 The park board changes the name of the Mt. St. Vincent Restaurant in Central Park (see Ja 2, 1881) to "McGown's Pass Tavern."—Eve. Post, F 18, 1891.

19 The remains of Gen. Wm. Tecumseh Sherman, who died Feb. 14, are escorted to the Desbrosses Ferry from 71st St., to be conveyed, via Penn. R. R., to St. Louis. The same bier is used which carried the bodies of Grant, Hancock, and Sheridan. A funeral procession of regulars, Grand Army men, militia, and veteran organizations accompanies it.—N. Y. Herald, F 20, 1891. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 154.

20 The Metropolitan Club is organized.—Club Book (1894); King's Handbook (1893), 545. See also N. Y. Times, F 28, Mr 8, 10, 11, and 15, 1891, and L. M. R. K., III: 938. See My 19.

23 A New York chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution is organized at Sherry's.—N. Y. Times, F 24, 1891. See also ibid., Mr 24, 1891.

24 The New York Historical Society decides to purchase, for $286,500, the property on Central Park West between 76th St. and 77th St. as the site for a new building.—Eve. Post, F 25, 1891. The building was begun here in 1903 (q.v., N 17).

Mar. 3 By unanimous vote the board of aldermen resolves that the junction of Amsterdam Ave., the Boulevard, and 70th St. (see N 14, 1887) shall hereafter be known as Sherman Square in honour of the late Wm. Tecumseh Sherman.—Eve. Post, Mr 3, 1891.

" The International Copyright Act is approved by Pres. Harrison.—Harper's Encyclop. of U. S. Hist., Vol. IX.

"The Judiciary Commission of 1890" (q.v., Ap 26) renders its report to the state senate (Senate Docs., 1891, VI, no. 51). "This report . . . manifestly came too late to enable the legislature to give the subjects embraced in it the consideration which their importance demanded, and the senate took no action except to refer the report to the judiciary committee," but "many of its most important suggestions were adopted, three years later, by the Convention of 1894" (q.v., My 8), and were incorporated in the new constitution.—Lincoln, Const. Hist. of N. Y., II: 719–21. Mar. 4

From March 5 to 14, the Brayton Ives' collection of rare Oriental porcelains and jades, Japanese lacquers, books, and manuscripts was sold at the Am. Art Galleries for $275,310.75.—A Plan and Interesting Information concerning the Am. Art Ass'n. The Japanese swords, catalogued to be sold with this collection, were purchased as a lot prior to this sale, and presented to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.—Address of Mr. Thos. E. Kirby . . . Nov. 10, 1922. 5

The federal government buys, for $505,022, the site bounded by Washington, Christopher, Barrow, and Greenwich Sts., to be used for the erection of the "Appraiser's Warehouse." Preliminary plans for the building were prepared during 1891–92, and it was in the course of erection by Sept. 30, 1892.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1892), 105–7, 211. The warehouse was entirely enclosed and under cover by 1894, but in 1895 plans for its enlargement to ten storeys were adopted. It was not occupied until April, 1898 (q.v.).—Ibid. (1893), 49; ibid. (1894), 43; ibid. (1895), 44 (with view); ibid. (1897), 42. 9

The legislature authorises the union of the College of Physicians and Surgeons with Columbia College.—Laws of N. Y. (1891), chap. 101. In November, the former college transferred its property to the trustees of the latter and became an integral part of Columbia.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 323–24. The union of the colleges was ratified by the legislature on March 6, 1894.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 97. 24

The statutory revision commission is directed by the legislature to republish verbatim, preserving the original spelling and punctuation, the statutes of the colony of New York, from the foundation thereof to the adoption of the first constitution.—Laws of N. Y. (1891), chap. 125. They were printed in 1894 under the editorship of Robert C. Cumming, with the title Colonial Laws of New York. Apr. 2

A bill providing for the creation of "Greater New York" is introduced in the senate and in the assembly. This bill made no progress and was virtually pigeon-holed at the end of the session.—Foord, The Life and Pub. Services of A. H. Green, 187. 7

In the presence of more than 10,000 G. A. R. veterans and private citizens, ground is broken for the permanent Grant monument on Riverside Drive by Gen. C. H. Freeman on the 69th anniversary of Grant's birth. Gen. Horace Porter delivers the principal address.—N. Y. Times, Ap 28, 1891. See also ibid., Jl 18, 1891; Harper's Weekly, XXXIV: 741, 743; and L. M. R. K., III: 965. The tomb is shown on Pls. 172 and 173, Vol. III. 27

The establishment of the Cathedral Parkway by widening 110th St. between Seventh Ave. and Riverside Park is authorised, to connect Central, Morningside, and Riverside Parks.—Laws of N. Y. (1891), chap. 275. The land was acquired in 1892 (q.v., D 30). 28

The legislature provides for the establishment of a botanical garden in Bronx Park, and incorporates the "New York Botanical Garden" for carrying on the same. The incorporators include Seth Low, Chas. P. Daly, Chas. A. Dana, Parke Godwin, Hugh J. Grant, Edward Cooper, Cornelius Vanderbilt, J. Pierpont Morgan, Andrew Carnegie, Thos. F. Gilroy, D. O. Mills, Wm. E. Dodge, and Percy R. Pyne.—Laws of N. Y. (1891), chap. 285; ibid. (1896), chap. 717. "

The corner-stone of the Church of Zion and St. Timothy (see Ap 27, 1890) is laid in 57th St. between Eighth and Ninth Aves.—N. Y. Times, Ap 30, 1891; L. M. R. K., III: 934. It was opened on April 17, 1892 (q.v.). 29

Carnegie Hall (see My 13, 1890) is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, My 3 and 6, 1891; L. M. R. K., III: 983. See also Harper's Weekly, III: 347. May 5

The corner-stone of a new Middle Reformed Dutch (Collegiate) Church (see F 27, 1887) is laid on Second Ave. near 7th St.—N. Y. Times, My 16, 18, 1891; L. M. R. K., III: 935. See Je 26, 1892. 17

Ground is broken at Fifth Ave. and 60th St. for the club-house 19

29 On this date, and on Aug. 6, 1891, and March 30, 1892, the city acquired title to the land at 129 W. 14th St. (north side, west of Sixth Ave.). Here the armory of the Ninth Coast Artillery was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Libers of Conveyances. It was formerly the site of the Palace Garden.—See L. M. R. K., III: 924, 985. See also 1858.

June 24 The new Croton aqueduct, authorised in 1883 (q. v., Je 1), is completed and is formally turned over to the department of public works.—Aqueduct Commission. Report of the President. 1887–1895, in N. Y. P. L.

27 The old 71st Regiment armory, at 44th St. and Broadway, is partially destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Times, Je 28, 1891.

30 The board of aldermen, by a vote of 16 to 8, decides against the Manhattan Elevated Railroad's occupancy of part of Battery Park (see Je 9, 1880).—N. Y. Times, Jl 1 and 2, 1891. A large mass meeting was held in Battery Park on July 10, at which resolutions were adopted approving the aldermen's action and asking the park commissioners to revoke the permit granted in 1876 (q. v., F 10) to the railroad.—Ibid., Jl 10, 11 and 12, 1891. See also ibid., Ag 2 and 4, 1891. No action, however, was taken by the park commissioners, and the elevated tracks were not removed.

July 8 Chas. B. J. Snyder is elected superintendent of school buildings by the board of education. He served as such until his retirement on Jan. 1, 1923, and during those 30 years he did more than any other man to develop a type of school planning and architecture which is a credit to the city and has been copied all over the United States. Conspicuous examples of his work are: George Washington High School, Washington Irving High School, Manhattan Trade School, and New Utrecht High School.—Letter to the author from Eugene A. Nifenecker, director of reference, research and statistics, Board of Education, My 27, 1926.

Mr. Edison, writing to the editor of the Times in June, 1921, said: "The writer of Screen News in your issue of June 5 does me an injustice in citing a lot of claims tending to deprive me of the honor of being the inventor of the modern motion picture. The injustice arises through a misunderstanding.

"The basic invention was the Kinetograph, which was an instrument for recording ('taking') motion pictures, as now used. It was not the apparatus for the reproduction of the pictures, enlarged, on a screen. It is on the projecting machine only that the claims of others can be based, as this is the same as the recording instrument with several attachments to adapt it for screen purposes.

"At first I put out several hundred reproducing machines which reproduced the pictures with but little enlargement, and I was starting to make the addition to the recording instrument to adapt it to greater enlargement for projection on the screen as we now see it, when Mr. Armat presented to my agents a better device for projection than I had at the time. Soon afterward Lumiere, of France, used my recording instrument, adding another and different kind of device to adapt it for screen enlargement. These reversed recording machines were introduced commercially as Projecting Machines, but the additions and changes were merely detail improvements on my prior and basic invention, namely, the Kinetograph, or Recording Machine, under which I claim to be the inventor of the modern motion picture."—N. Y. Times, Je 9, 1921. See Ap 14, 1896.

Aug. 9 The Merchants' Hotel, erected in 1820 at Nos. 39 and 41 Cortlandt St., is being demolished to make room for a ten-storey office building.—N. Y. Times, Ag 9, 1891.

O— In this month, the "Second Church of Christ, Scientist, Borough of Manhattan, City of New York," was organized.—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. Heitman, Christian Science Com. on Publication of the State of N. Y. Cf. F 3, 1888; and see, further, November. For the Second Church's building, see Ap 2, 1899.

Oct. — "Cavalleria Rusticana" is heard for the first time in New York at two rival performances, a matinée at the Casino Theatre and an evening performance at the Lenox Lyceum.—Brown, III: 494–95; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 809.

1 St. Agnes's Chapel, erected by Trinity on W. 92d St. near the Boulevard, is opened.—N. Y. Times, O 19, 1891. See also King's Handbook (1893), 347–48 and L. M. R. K., III: 933.

18 The board of rapid transit railroad commissioners, provided for in the legislative act of Jan. 31 (q. v.), renders a report to the common council, including special reports by Wm. Barclay Parsons, and other engineers employed by the board. In this report are to be found interesting discussions that are embryonic of the present (1926) subway arrangements; e. g., the loops at City Hall Park and Battery Park, the four parallel tracks on a level, as now seen in the Seventh Ave. subway line, and the "double deck tunnel with two tracks upon each deck," to be observed in the present Lexington Ave. line.—Report of the Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners (1891). The plans of the board, virtually as presented, were adopted by the common council on Oct. 28 (q. v.).

26 The Leake and Watts Orphan Asylum, whose property had been sold to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine (see N 5, 1887), moves from Morningside Heights to Yonkers.—Hist., Charter, Act of Incorporation, etc., Leake & Watts Orphan House (N. Y., 1893?). See also L. M. R. K., III: 954. The corner-stone of the cathedral was laid on Dec. 27, 1892 (q. v.), but the old asylum building is still standing (1926).

27 At a special meeting of the board of aldermen the report of the board of rapid transit railroad commissioners is presented for consideration. A resolution is adopted accepting the plans virtually as presented.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1891), CCIV: 171–74; Report of Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners (1901), 111–16.

28 Nov. — ". . . New York's development is in a perennial state of transition, and already a great change has come over much of her finest streets. The trades that cater to the needs or tastes of the wealthy have forced their way into the very closest proximity to their patrons. Business has obtained more than a foothold upon Fifth Avenue. It has taken possession of entire blocks. Upon mansion after mansion has been displayed the sign 'To Let for Business Purposes,' and the desecration continues. Dealers in bric-a-brac, pictures, silverware, and the like, are flocking to the street. Publishing houses, both great and small, are among its tenants. Piano salesrooms are hardly to be found elsewhere. Show cases are to be seen upon its sidewalks, which here and there are piled with the wares of the furniture seller, and even with the still more commonplace goods of the retail grocer.

"But while such is the condition of a part of Fifth Avenue, still more considerable portions of it have retained their former character, and contain the most costly and splendid residences in the country, some of which are of quite recent erection. It is still the headquarters of the wealth and fashion of New York, and consequently of America. It is still the avenue on which dwell the leaders of the social and financial world, and to which, above all others, come those who have gained great fortunes elsewhere. Upon the list of its residents are the names of Vanderbilt, Astor, Belmont, Rhinelander, Cooper, Goelet, Mills, Whitney, Marshall, Roberts, Morgan, Rockefeller, Flagler, Huntington, Gould, Sage and others hardly less notable as the representatives of famous Knickerbocker families or the accumulators of newer millions. . . .

"Cut off from the residential district to the northward by the river of traffic which flows along Fourteenth Street, the lower end of Fifth Avenue forms a picturesque oasis, where the aristocratic air of old Knickerbocker stateliness lingers amid a commonplace environment. The six blocks between Washington Square and Thirteenth Street are a unique corner of New York. Their architecture is that of a generation that has now passed away. It represents the days before that brown stone front era which gave us the monotonous rows of somber respectability that line street after street of a wide district further up town. It may be seen in its best and most characteristic phase at the corners of Washington

1891 Nov. — Square. Here ex-Mayor Cooper's residence, on the east side of the avenue, and the Rhinelander house opposite, are excellent specimens of a style of which few examples survive. Roomy and well-proportioned structures of red brick, they have a simple dignity that is far more impressive and pleasing than the showiness of many more ambitious and elaborate products of the modern builder. The trees that line the street, and the greenery of Washington Square, help to make this one of the most picturesque points of Fifth Avenue, and its attractiveness will be greatly enhanced by the approaching completion of the Washington Memorial Arch [see My 30, 1890]. After more than a year's work, this really magnificent work needs only its final courses of masonry to stand forth a monument not unworthy of comparison with the Arc de Triomphe in Paris [!], the Arco della Pace at Milan, . . .

". . . On the northeast corner of Eighteenth, directly opposite Chickering Hall, is the old Belmont house—a square, solid, and stately mansion of red brick, with a long, low extension in the rear occupied by a notable gallery of pictures. On the other side of Eighteenth Street is the residence of Mrs. Marshall [O.] Roberts, a brown stone structure decorated in a rather rococo style. Two doors below is a house—recently destroyed by fire—which was occupied by a younger branch of the Belmont family."

On the other side of the avenue from the Union Club (which is at the north-west corner of 21st St.) is "the less pretentious edifice of the Lotos, once a semi-Bohemian coterie of artists and litterateurs, but now, like other once distinctive organizations, assimilated to the monotonous level of unexceptionable respectability. . . .

". . . Crossing the tracks of three street car lines and the temporary chaos of Broadway cable construction we reach the southeast corner of the park [Madison Square] and are confronted by the bronze effigy of William H. Seward, an inartistic and awkwardly posed statue of the great New Yorker. The Farragut memorial, at the upper end of the square, is of a very different character. Its proportions are not large, but it ranks as the most artistic monument in New York, and one of the best works of the designer, Augustus St. Gaudens.

"Across the avenue, at the southwest corner of Twenty Sixth Street, is the famous Delmonico restaurant. On the next few blocks retail stores predominate, and large hotels are multiplying. Besides the Brunswick, which extends from Madison Square to Twenty Seventh Street, and the tall Victoria opposite, the white ten story Holland House has just been built on the south-west corner of Thirtieth, and the new Waldorf is rising on the Astor property at Thirty Third. On the upper corner of this block—between Thirty Third and Thirty Fourth streets on the west side—is the square, red brick house of Mr. William B. Astor, a decidedly unpretentious residence for a man whose name is synonymous with millions. On the other side of Thirty Fourth Street stands the splendid Italian marble palace built by the late A. T. Stewart, and occupied by the Manhattan Club since the death of his widow. . . .

". . . Opposite [the burned Christ Church, which is on the s. e. cor. of 35th St.] is the handsome new house of the New York Club, built of red brick with brownstone trimmings—a favorite style of architecture in this particular district."

At the s. e. cor. of 40th St., "is the oldest of the Vanderbilt houses, a massive brown-stone structure that strongly recalls the Union Club building. It is now the home of Mr. Frederick W. Vanderbilt. . . .

"The tall, white stone Hotel Bristol marks the [north-west] corner of Forty Second Street."

At the n. w. corner of 45th St., "is the Universalist Church of the Divine Paternity, with its two unmatched Towers," and opposite is "the curiously ornamented Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest."

At the n. e. cor. of 47th St. is Jay Gould's town house, and at the s. e. cor. of 48th St. is the residence of Robert Goelet. "A very pretty residence at the southwest corner of Forty Ninth is Mr. Ogden Goelet's. Mr. D. O. Mills lives in a double brown stone house between Fiftieth and Fifty First, opposite the Roman Catholic Cathedral."

Of the two Vanderbilt houses filling the block from 51st to 52d St., the lower is tenanted by Mrs. Wm. H. Vanderbilt, and the upper (a double house) by her daughters, Mrs. Shepard and Mrs. Sloane.

Nov. — At the n. w. cor. of 52d St. is the richly decorated white stone house of Wm. K. Vanderbilt. Between St. Thomas's Church and 54th St. are the residences of the other two sisters,—Mrs. Webb and Mrs. Twombly. Cornelius Vanderbilt's house is at the n. w. cor. of 57th St., and across the street, on the s. w. cor., is Wm. C. Whitney's "red brick and brown stone house." At the s. e. cor. of 57th St., C. P. Huntington's "castellated mansion of white stone has just been built upon a part of the block which Mr. Robert Bonner so long held unimproved. Three blocks below, the houses of two Standard Oil magnates, Mr. William Rockefeller and Mr. H. M. Flagler, confront each other at the corners of Fifty Fourth Street."

"On the block above the Cathedral is the Roman Catholic boys' orphan asylum." St. Luke's Hospital is on the n. w. cor. of 54th St., "standing back amid trees."

The houses on the eastern side of Central Park overlook its delightful landscape. "A double row of trees shades its western sidewalk, over which occasionally a bushy-tailed squirrel may be seen to scamper. The park view is at its best for some distance above Seventy Second Street, where the ground descends to a small lily-pond near the eastern boundary, and then to the Conservatory Water, rising beyond into wooded slopes, over which peer the lofty tops of the Dakota and San Remo apartment houses, west of the park.

"Vacant lots are still numerous on this upper part of Fifth Avenue, but they are rapidly becoming less so. There are many fine buildings, mostly residential. . . . They exemplify the free use made by the architects of today of a wide range of materials and technical styles. Structures worthy of especial note are those of the Progress Club, the most prominent Hebrew social organization, at Sixty Third Street; the Lenox Library, which stretches from Seventieth to Seventy First; and the newly finished synagogue at Seventy Sixth, a magnificent Romanesque temple whose dome, with its gilded veins, is a towering and conspicuous landmark.

"Beyond Eightieth Street . . . , Fifth Avenue takes on for a space the undeveloped character of a semisuburban thoroughfare. At One Hundred and Twentieth Street, its continuity is interrupted by the steep slope of Mount Morris Park. Beyond this it passes through the more thickly built up district of Harlem to end prosaically in the mud of the Harlem River."—From "Picturesque Points on Fifth Ave.," by Richard H. Titherington, in Munsey's Mag., VI: 123 et seq. See also King's Handbook (1893), 148–53, and Century Mag., Nov., 1893.

— In this month, the third Church of Christ, Scientist, was organized, called at first the "Metropolitan Third Church of Christ, Scientist." For the earlier ones, from the beginning of this religious movement in New York, see Ag, 1886; N 27, 1887; F 3, 1888; O, 1891. The corner-stone of the permanent edifice of the Third Church was laid Dec. 25, 1922, at the corner of Park Ave. and 63d St.—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. Heitman, Christian Science Com. on Publication of the State of N. Y. See, further, Ap 2, 1899.

2 The tower of Madison Square Garden (see Je 16, 1890) is opened to the public, St. Gaudens's statue of Diana on its summit having been unveiled on Nov. 1. In the evening the tower was illuminated with red fire, coloured lights, and rockets.—Eve. Post, O 13 and N 2, 1891. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 819. While this is being written (June, 1925), the Madison Square Garden is being demolished to make room for a new office building for the N. Y. Life Ins. Co. Alas!

30 During the progress of the excavations through the Harlem River Marsh, for the Harlem River Ship Canal, at the Broadway crossing, the remains of a mastodon tusk were found imbedded in peat at a depth of 16 feet below mean low-water. It was secured by the engineers in charge of the work, and presented by Lieut. Col. G. L. Gillispie, U. S. A., to the Am. Museum of Natural History. This is the only occasion known of the finding of such remains on Manhattan Island. This tusk may possibly have been that of a mammoth, as the tusks of the two animals are much alike; but the probabilities are greatly in favour of its being that of a mastodon. There have been many finds of the mastodon—skeletons, jaws, teeth, or bones—in New York State, especially in area around Newburgh; whereas there are only two examples on record in the state (one at Elmira and the other at Attica) of 1891 N 30 — the finding of teeth of a mammoth.—Information obtained from W. D. Matthew, Ph.D., curator, Am. Museum of Nat. Hist.

Dec. 5 — The Holland House, at Fifth Ave. and 30th St., is opened to invited guests. It is to open for business on Dec. 7.—N. Y. Times, D 6, 1891.

14 — Edouard and Jean de Reszke make their New York débuts, at the Metropolitan Opera House, in "Romeo and Juliet."—Brown, III: 449.

— In this year, Gladstone became prime minister for the fourth time; his administration lasted until 1894.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 507.

— "Selden was the first man in the United States to invent a gasoline automobile. He applied for a patent in 1879, but kept it pending for sixteen years, so that when the patent was issued in 1895 the public for the first time became aware of his work. Duryea completed his first gasoline car in 1892, and, despite the prior invention of Selden, may be considered the real father of the American automobile. In the Chicago Times-Herald race in 1895 Duryea won easily, as he did also in New York in the following year. In the race in England, from London to Brighton, in 1896, the Duryea machine won over all competitors, covering the distance in an hour less than any other. Haynes ran his first car in 1894 and Winton in 1895; Olds finished his first internal combustion car in 1896; and Ford his first four-wheeled vehicle in 1892, although he did not enter actively in the business until 1899. The improvements in automobiles since that day have been so numerous that the mere mention of them would require more space than can be allowed to this article."—From "The Evolution of the Automobile," in Commercial America (F, 1917), XIII: 13. See also "The Rise of the Automobile," in Scientific American, Je 5, 1915, and "Surviving Pioneers of Automobile Building," by John C. Wetmore, in Eve. Mail, Supp., Ja 3, 1914. See also 1890.

In this year, Henry Ford produced "a vehicle scarcely larger than a tricycle with a very crude steering apparatus, and driven by a small one-cylinder engine with a pulley clutch." In 1898 he organized the Detroit Automobile Co., which financed his experiments. His aim was to produce a low-priced car within the reach of people of moderate means. The company was reorganized into the Henry Ford Co.; and, in June, 1903, the Ford Motor Co. was capitalized at $100,000. This was the beginning of what became the largest automobile manufacturing business in the world. In 1909, 10,600 cars were sold, and the company bought 276 acres on the outskirts of Detroit, and built the present enormous establishment. For fuller particulars, see The Natl. Cyc. of Am. Biography, XV: 58–60. See 1898.

— In this year, the first electric automobile appeared on the streets of Chicago and caused great excitement. It was designed and built by William Morrison of Des Moines, Iowa, during the summer of 1891.—Doolittle, Romance of the Automobile Industry.

— In this year, an automobile was first equipped with pneumatic tires by Panhard & Levassor, French manufacturers.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 479–80.

— In this year, The Discovery of North America, by Henry Harrisse, was published.

— In this year, The Memorial History of the City of New York, by James Grant Wilson, was published.

— In this year, The Children of the Poor, by Jacob A. Riis, was published.

— In this year, the Apthorpe mansion, erected in 1764 south of 91st St., 210 ft. west of Columbus Ave., was demolished, and seven dwelling-houses were erected on the site.—Record & Guide, XLIX: 752, 834; ibid., L: 320; L. M. R. K., III: 948.

— In this year, the 71st Regiment (see 1865) erected its armory at the south-east corner of 34th St. and Park Ave.—Tablet in the present armory; L. M. R. K., III: 923; Harper's Weekly, XXXVIII: 333. It was destroyed by fire on Feb. 22, 1902 (q.v.).

— In this year, the American Fine Arts Society erected its building on the north side of West 57th St. between Broadway and Seventh Ave. The main building with four galleries was completed this year, one of these, the Vanderbilt Gallery, being the gift of George W. Vanderbilt, Dec. 20, 1892. The society was incorporated June 20, 1889 (q.v.), by a combination of the Society of American Artists, the Architectural League of New York, and the Art Students League of New York, for the purpose of erecting a fine arts building; and the land, 75 by 143 ft., was acquired on May 3, 1890. —Cat., Loan Exhibition of the Soc., F, 1893. — Richard Harding Davis, describing Broadway in this year, writes: "Broadway means so many different things to so many different people. . . . There is the business portion of Broadway, and the shopping district, and still farther up town the Broadway where New Yorkers and their country cousins once used to walk to look at the passers-by, and where now only those walk who wish to be looked at. And yet Broadway has, from the Battery to 159th Street, where the cobble-stones break up into a dusty country road, its own dear individuality. . . .

"Broadway proper begins at Bowling Green. This is the open breathing-place where the street rests before it narrows down and meets the fierce turmoil of the business portion just above. It is a very cosmopolitan Broadway at this point, and every house facing it seems to welcome and bid for the arriving immigrants. The offices of the foreign consuls are here, and the immigrants' boarding-houses, with their signs in almost every strange language, and shops where shillings and francs and guelders can be changed into dollars. . . .

"It is only a few steps farther up town from this, and you are in the rush of the business district. . . . This part of Broadway is a valley of great buildings, and from a boat on the North River one can trace the march of the street by these mountains of brick and iron and plate-glass. They rise up above the rest of the city like shot-towers, and you see nothing up town to equal them, save the white points of the Cathedral, and the slim, graceful spire of Grace Church half-way between.

"The rush is greatest about the base of one of the tallest of these—the Equitable Building. . . .

"Just below this, only a block to the south, is one of those strange contrasts which seem as if they could not have been accidental. This is where old Trinity Church, with its graveyard, blocks the way of Wall Street. There is no stronger contrast than this in the whole city of New York. . . .

"Broadway widens in front of the Astor House, and gives the cars from all over the city a little room in which to turn before they start off uptown again. . . .

"The City Hall Park makes a pleasant break in Broadway. It opens it up on one side and lets in a breath of fresh air where it breaks one of the long, high barriers of business houses. . . .

"But it is at night that the Park is at its best. When the windows of the Post-Office are blazing with light, and the mail wagons rattle up over the empty streets with a great to do and unload their freight of trouble and good news where it may be scattered broadcast over the world. On warm nights the marble steps of the City Hall are black with people from the slums, and every bench holds four drowsy figures. . . .

"Newspaper Row bounds the eastern side of the square with the workshops of the great dailies. . . .

"From the City Hall on up Broadway to Tenth Street the complexion of the street is utterly changed, and there is nothing but wholesale business houses, almost all with strange foreign names. This is where Broadway nods a little. There is none of the rush of lower Broadway, and none of its earnestness. . . .

"The shopping district begins about Tenth Street, and is bounded on the north by the latitude of Twenty-third, where the promenade begins, and continues on up . . . to Forty-second Street.

"Union Square makes a second break in Broadway, and is a very different lounging-place indeed from City Hall Park. . . . Horace Greeley and Benjamin Franklin are the appropriate guardians of that busy lower park, while the graceful Lafayette and the stately equestrian figure of Washington are the presiding figures of this gayer and more metropolitan pleasure-ground. Union Square is bounded on the south by that famous strip of pavement known to New Yorkers who read the papers as the Rialto. This is the promenade of actors. . . . The Broadway side of Union Square is its richest and most picturesque. The great jewelry and silver-shops begin here, and private carriages line the curb in quadruple lines, and the pavement is impressively studded with white-breeched grooms. Long-haired violinists and bespectacled young women in loose gowns, with rolls of music in their hands, become conspicuous just above this—the music-shops are responsible for them. And from this on up Broadway from Union Square the richer and more fashionable element . . . predominates . . .

"At Twenty-third Street the more business-like Broadway takes 1892 — on the leisurely air of the avenue, which it crosses, and in which it is merged for a block or two. The rush is greatest here, and hansoms and democratic street-cars and lumbering busses . . . are forced into each other's company as closely as are the carts and drays farther down town. . . . This is the most interesting spot in the city to the stranger within our gates, and it is, after all, the Broadway that we all know and like the best. It is so cosmopolitan, so alive, and so rich in color and movement, and so generous in its array of celebrities. . . ."—The Great Streets of the World, 3–35.

Jan. 1 The immigration bureau on Ellis Island is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, Ja 2, 1892. See Ap 18, 1890.

Jan. 4 In his annual message to the common council, Mayor Grant says in part: "Notwithstanding the fact that bonds to the extent of $7,582,346.85 have been issued for permanent improvements during the year, the net debt of the City shows a decrease at the close of the year 1891 of $514,379.30. . . .

"I deem it my duty to again bring to your attention the question of the government of this city by the Legislature. Few of the annual charges of the City Government are subject to the discretion of the local authorities. These charges are to a great extent fixed by mandatory laws; and all bonds issued by the City for permanent improvements are issued in obedience to similar laws. The City, therefore, in respect to its main expenditures, is governed from Albany by a Legislature composed to a great extent of members who have but little knowledge of its wants or requirements, and a large majority of such legislators are frequently politically hostile to its Government. More than this, the Legislature has the power to order the payment of claims by the City which may have been rejected by the courts or which have been allowed to lapse under the provisions of the Statute of Limitations. . . . The Legislature has also the power of granting valuable franchises to private corporations, such as the laying of pipes, change of motor power of surface railways, and the maintenance of telegraph lines.

"In most instances the private corporations obtaining such franchises pay no revenue to the City, while their property rights receive the protection of all departments of the City Government. The City authorities are constantly hampered in their efforts to promote the interests of the municipality by the interference of the owners of such franchises. . . .

"While I believe that the interest of every city in the State would be advanced by imposing upon each the full responsibility of its own maintenance, the evils which I have brought to your attention could be largely remedied without removing the supervision by the Legislature over the expenditures of the municipalities of the State. A constitutional amendment should be passed, which would provide that hereafter no law should be enacted by the Legislature requiring the execution of any public work or local improvement at the expense of any city, or compelling the payment by it of any claims; but authority to execute such public work and make such local improvements, or pay such claims, should, by act of the Legislature, in each instance, be vested in the municipal authorities, who should be given full discretion to determine whether such improvements should be made or claims paid. . . .

"A further constitutional amendment should provide that franchises should only be granted by the Legislature in any city in this State for the use of its streets, or the sub-surface under the streets, or any of its property rights, on payment of a reasonable revenue to such city, which should be fixed and determined by the proper municipal authorities. . . .

"The injustice inflicted upon this city by the State Board of Equalization continues. While the State Assessors, in accordance with their custom, briefly confer with the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments in regard to the assessed valuations of this city, they pay but little attention to the suggestions made to them. On the occasion of the last conference of the State Assessors information was submitted to them by the Commissioners concerning the valuation of real estate in the rural counties, and it was shown that in all such counties the assessed valuation was very much further below the market value of real estate than in the City of New York. This data, however, received no consideration, for the State Board of Equalization repeated the annual injustice done the taxpayers of this city by increasing the valuation of its real estate $116,524,167. The discrimination against this city is such that it is called upon to pay nearly one-half the entire State tax. . . .

Jan. 4 "The subject of rapid transit for the Annexed District is important in aiding its development. For its surface roads I favored the trolley system as being peculiarly adapted to its needs. The people of the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards are at a disadvantage in their facilities for rapid transit which their geographical position does not justify. The elevated railroads of New York now extend on the west side of the city to One Hundred and fifty-fifth street. A great part of the population of the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards is south of the line of One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street. While the people of the west side are now enabled to proceed from their residences to their places of business in one railway by the payment of one fare, the people of the annexed district are compelled to patronize two different lines and pay two fares. When the proposed line of railway laid out by the Rapid Transit Commissioners is built these difficulties will be remedied.

"Communication between Manhattan Island and the Annexed District will be greatly improved by the work being done on the new McComb's Dam Bridge and the viaduct connecting it with the heights on St. Nicholas avenue and One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street. A kindred subject on which legislation is necessary is the raising of the Harlem river bridges which do not conform to the requirements of the Federal law governing the Harlem Ship Canal, that the spans of bridges shall not be less than 24 feet above high-water mark. . . .

"The establishment of cable traction on the surface roads in Broadway and Third avenue is a matter of interest and importance to the people of this city. The work in Broadway was accompanied with the laying of a new pavement from Bowling Green to thirty-second street, and the magnificent thoroughfare is now fittingly paved. . . . The Broadway Railway, as a condition for being permitted to change its motor power, agreed to pay to the City a revenue of five per cent. on its gross receipts if such sum should amount to more than $150,000 per annum, less than which it was not to be in any event. It is a matter of deep regret that similar terms could not have been made with the Third Avenue Railway Company compelling it to pay a reasonable revenue as a condition for the change of its motor power. . . .

"The question of selecting a site for the new municipal building is still in abeyance. . . .

"Lands acquired for park purposes in the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards, and those lately acquired as an addition to the East River Park should be improved. . . . In the meantime these lands should be utilized for the public benefit, and I recommend that Pelham Bay Park be thrown open for use as an excursion ground. . . . The Park Department could, at a small outlay, provide temporary structures as shelter from the sun and rain, as well as bathing-houses on the inviting sandy beach of the park. . . .

"The decrease in fatal accidents resulting from overhead wires, despite the great increase of electrical business, is an evidence of the wisdom of the efforts made by this administration to place the wires underground. . . . The year's work under the Board of Electrical Control comprises the removal of 5,224 poles and 7,152½ miles of wire and the construction of 114 miles of subways. . . .

"The Department of Docks during the past year has made commendable improvements. Nine new piers have been built on the North river and five on the East river. Ten of the piers on the North river were extended to the new pier-head line. Six hundred feet of masonry sea-wall were built on the North river and 1,400 feet on the East river, and 1,200 feet of crib-bulkhead were constructed in the upper part of the island. A total of new wharfage front was thus provided of more than two and a half miles, equaling over ten per cent. of the entire dock frontage of the City of Liverpool. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCV: 7–19.

Feb. 1 Mrs. Wm. Astor gives her famous ball at her residence at Fifth Ave. and 34th St.—N. Y. Times, F 2, 1892. The term "Four Hundred" as applied to society originated at this time. Mrs. Astor's ball was managed by Ward McAllister, the social dictator of New York, and because of lack of space McAllister limited the number of guests to 400, remarking that after all there were only 400 people who were really in society. As given to the press, his list of those who were indisputably entitled to this distinction included the following names of only 263 individuals, whom, according to the Times report, he called the beau monde. The Times Index, however, designates them the " 'Four Hundred' of New-York City Society."

No one at that period appears to have succeeded in compiling a correct and satisfactory list of exactly 400 names of persons in the most exclusive circle of "New York Society." Pamphlets, now scarce, were produced by publishers attempting it. One of these, now in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., published by the "Melville Publishing Co." is entitled The "400." (Officially Supervised.) (Copyrighted.). It bears no date either of publication or copyright, and no author's name. It contains 554 names, with the explanation that "it is quite impossible to compress the world of fashion so as to bring it within Mr. McAllister's very narrow limits." This continues: "Our catalogue has been prepared with much care, the names having been well sifted and weighed, and only those admitted who are now prominently to the front. . . ." This is followed by a "Notice" in italics: "If by typographical or clerical error, omissions of names have occurred, please address the publishers for rectification in future editions."

In 1895, Mrs. Burton Harrison wrote: ". . . I am an unbeliever in the body corporate which, for want of a better term, has come to be popularly known as the Four Hundred of New York. The lists of visits and invitations made out yearly by people of good position, to include their acquaintances to whom such courtesies are due, number, say, a thousand names. Of these names, who among us is equipped or prepared to say six hundred are outside the pale? . . ."—From "The Myth of the Four Hundred," in The Cosmopolitan, Jl, 1895, p. 331.

14 Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst, president of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, begins a campaign against Tammany by scathingly denouncing its city officials for corruption and accusing them of protecting and promoting vice and crime in the city. As he was unable to substantiate his charges, he was rebuked by the grand jury on Feb. 29. However, he later secured definite evidence by personally visiting many of the worst dens of debauchery in town, and this direct evidence led to a presentment by the grand jury against the police department.—Parkhurst, Our Fight With Tammany (1895), 1–87. The continued revelations of Parkhurst and the society were responsible, in a large measure, for the appointment of the Lexow Committee (see Ja 30, 1894) and for the defeat of Tammany in the election of Nov. 6, 1894 (q. v.). See also My 26, 1892, and S 8, 1894.

18 The trustees of Columbia College have decided to purchase the ground occupied by the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane (see My 30, 1821), bounded by 116th and 120th Sts., Morningside Park and Amsterdam Ave.—N. Y. Times, F 18, 1892; Hist. of Columbia

Feb. 18 The college did not take possession of the ground until Oct. 1, 1894 (q. v.).

20 The land bounded by Centre and Duane Sts., Park Row, and Tryon Row, is selected as the site of the projected municipal building.—N. Y. Times, F 21, 1892. For discussion of the site, see ibid., Jl 21, 22, O 8, 1887, and S 19, 1891.

Mar. 15 A bill providing a plan for the creation of Greater New York is tabled by the assembly.—Foord, Life of A. H. Green, 187.

17 "An act to authorize the construction of a public drive in the Central Park in the City of New York" passes the legislature, and is approved by Gov. Flower.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 142. Public sentiment was immediately aroused against it and it was repealed on April 14. It was to be a driveway, race-track, or speedway, 70 ft. wide, through the park along the western boundary.—See the Times, Tribune, etc., Ap 15, 1892. Regarding this and other attempts to invade, mutilate, or pervert the park, see 16th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1911), 484–88; and N. Y. Times, D 31, 1925.

30 Hebrew performances begin at the Thalia Theatre (see S 11, 1879), under the management of Messrs. Levy and Heine.—Brown, Hist. of N. Y. Stage, I: 172. The performances continued until 1915, when the building was altered and used for Italian vaudeville.—L. M. R. K., III: 982.

Apr. 4 The City Club is incorporated "to secure an honest and efficient administration of city affairs, to sever municipal from national politics, and to secure the election of fit persons to city offices." The incorporators include August Belmont, Frederic Bronson, R. Fulton Cutting, W. Bayard Cutting, Richard Watson Gilder, J. Frederic Kernochan, James B. Ludlow, and Wm. Jay Schieffelin.—N. Y. Times, Ap 5, 1892. See Ap 13.

5 The last block of marble in the "Washington Memorial Arch" is placed in position by Wm. Rhinelander Stewart, who initiated the work, and the arch is completed except for a few inscriptions, and except four trophy panels and four spandrels to be carved in relief. The trophy panels of the south façade were carved during the summer and autumn of 1892, and the panels of the north façade were finished in Feb., 1893.—N. Y. Times, Ap 6, 1892; Hist. of the Washington Arch (1896), 24 et seq. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 912, 929. The arch was considered finished in Feb., 1895 (N. Y. Times, F 12, 1895), and it was dedicated on May 4, 1895 (q. v.). There yet remained to be made, however, the two bas reliefs on the north side of the two pedestals. The figure of Washington on the eastern pedestal, by Hermon A. MacNeil, was placed in position in 1916; and that of Washington on the western pedestal, by Alexander S. Calder, was erected in 1918.—Art Commission's records; Henderson, A Loiterer in New York (1917), 207, with views opp. pp. 202 and 210.

" The commissioner of public works is authorised to construct a bridge over the Harlem ship-canal.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 232. See also N. Y. Times, Ja 27 and F 1, 1893. The bridge was opened on Jan. 1, 1895 (q. v.).

9 A "Department of Buildings," with a "superintendent of buildings" at its head, is created by the legislature. By the same act a new bureau is created within the fire department, called "the bureau of fire alarm telegraph and electrical appliances."—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 275.

13 The newly organized City Club (see Ap 4) holds its first meeting, at Sherry's.—N. Y. Times, Ap 14, 1892. It formed local good government clubs in various sections of the city. It took up the programme of the City Reform Club, but went even further than its predecessor.—Ibid., My 29 and 30, 1892. See Je 17.

17 The P. E. Church of Zion and St. Timothy, on West 57th St. (see Ap 29, 1891), is opened.—N. Y. Times, Ap 11 and 18, 1892; L. M. R. K., III: 934.

19 The legislature directs the construction of the Fourth Ave. viaduct, from 111th St. to the Harlem River, by the N.Y. & Harlem R. R. Co.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 339.

20 The members of the Stock Exchange agree to the establishment of a stock exchange clearing-house.—N. Y. Times, Ap 21, 1892. See also Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 67, 93. The clearing-house was opened on May 17 (q. v.).

25 Wm. Astor dies at Paris.—N. Y. Times, Ap 27, 1892.

Apr. 27 The corner-stone of Grant's Tomb (see Jl 23, 1885, and My 13, 1886), designed by John H. Duncan, is laid by Pres. Harrison.—N. Y. Herald, Ap 28, 1892; L. M. R. K., III: 965. The monument was dedicated on April 27, 1897 (q. v.).

May 2 By act of the legislature, aldermen henceforth shall "hold office for the period of two years" instead of for a single year.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 408.

" In authorising a "further appropriation for the maintenance of the Metropolitan Museum of Art," the legislature inserts the proviso that the collections be made accessible to the public on Sundays.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 419; cf. N. Y. Tribune, My 1, 1892.

17 The stock exchange clearing house (see Ap 20) is opened, on the 100th anniversary of the founding of the exchange.—N. Y. Times, My 17 and 18, 1892. See also Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 67, 93, and Harper's Weekly, XXXVII: 357.

18 The legislature passes an act called "The State Law" (constituting chap. II of the General Laws), in relation to the sovereignty, boundaries, survey, great seal, and arms of the state. The device of the arms of the state, as adopted March 16, 1778, is correctly described; also the great seal of the state and its use are prescribed.—Laws of N. Y. (1892), chap. 678, §§ 40, 43, 44.

Section 40 of this law, describing the arms, was amended April 8, 1896, by an alteration in the description of the figure of Justice, and by the addition of a brief regulation prescribing the design of the state flag, which is "declared to be buff, charged with the arms of the state in the colors as described in the blason of this section."—Ibid. (1896), chap. 229.

The state flag had previously been one of white bunting of various sizes with the arms in the centre.—See General Regulations for the Military Forces of the State of N. Y. (1858), § 717; Regulations for the Military and Naval Forces of the State of N. Y. (1894), § 837. The colour of this flag was changed to blue, with the arms in prescribed colours in the centre, on Feb. 17, 1909 (q. v.).

26 A mass-meeting is held at Cooper Union under the auspices of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, and resolutions are adopted calling upon the district attorney and the police department to enforce the laws for the prevention of vice, and blaming the city officials for the "present condition of protected crime."—Parkhurst, Our Fight With Tammany (1895), 113–27. See F 14.

28 The new Fifth Avenue Theatre at Broadway and 28th St. is opened with a new operetta called "The Robber of the Rhine."—N. Y. Times, Ap 8, My 22 and 29, 1892; L. M. R. K., III: 984. See Ja 2, 1891.

June 5 The Rhinelander sugar-house, erected in 1763 (q. v.) on the south-west corner of Rose and Duane Sts., has just been demolished.—N. Y. Times, Je 5, 1892; Harper's Weekly, XXXVI: 500; Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 301. There is a view of this old landmark in Brown's Book of Old N. Y. (1913), 309. The Rhinelander building was erected on the site in 1893.—Tablet on building; L. M. R. K., III: 963; Kelley, 65, 182. A portion of the wall of the sugar-house was re-erected, with an inscription, beside the old Van Cortlandt house, Van Cortlandt Park.

6 The Hotel Savoy at the south-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 59th St. is opened.—N. Y. Times, Je 7, 1892. See also ibid., My 20, 1890; Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 180, and King's Handbook (1893), 220. It was torn down in March, 1926.

" The Collegiate Reformed Dutch School, the oldest school on Manhattan Island, opens its new building at 241 and 243 West 77th St.—N. Y. Times, Je 7, 1892.

17 The City Club has leased the old Coles residence at 677 Fifth Ave.—N. Y. Times, Je 17, 1892. See also L. M. R. K., III: 937.

26 The new Middle Dutch Church, at Second Ave. and 7th St. (see My 17, 1891), is dedicated.—N. Y. Times, Je 25 and 27, 1892; Corwin's Manual, 999.

July 7 The site for a new custom-house is selected by the secretary of the treasury, bounded by Bowling Green, Whitehall, State, and Bridge Sts. (see F 4, 1893). Damages are fixed, payable to the owners of the land in the aggregate sum of $2,101,000.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1892), 108, 211; ibid., (1894), 44–45. See also N. Y. Jour. of Commerce, Jl 8, 1892. Regarding the development of this property, see 1899, 1902, 1906.

18 Workmen making excavations in the rear of the city hall dig up an oblong bronze plate about two feet long bearing the inscription "R. Varick Esq., Mayor. 1796." There is nothing to explain how this plate came to be there.—N. Y. Times, Jl 19, 1892.

1892 Aug. 26 The aqueduct commissioners award the contract for the construction of the "New Croton Dam" (see O 29).—Aqueduct Commission. Report of the President (1887–1895), 9. Work on the dam "was begun in the fall of 1892; the first stone in the foundation was laid May 26, 1896; the dam was nearly finished and the gates were closed January 28, 1905, beginning the storage of water; the work was completed January 1, 1906; and by November 5, 1907, the reservoir was full to high water mark."—22d Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1917), 538.

27 The Metropolitan Opera House (see O 22, 1883) is almost wholly destroyed by fire.—N. Y. World, Ag 28, 1892. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985.

Sept. 1 As cholera has been brought to quarantine from a foreign port, Mayor Grant calls upon all citizens to aid in preventing its introduction into the city. The board of health is doing its utmost to guard against this and to care for any cases that may appear.—N. Y. Times, S 2, 1892. Several cases did appear in the city, but, due to the precautions of the board of health, the disease failed to secure a firm foothold.—Ibid., S 3, 5, 6, 15, 16–19, and O 2, 1892.

4 The Columbus statue which is to be erected at The Circle reaches New York from Italy. Signor Gaetano Russo, the sculptor, also comes to the city.—N. Y. Times, S 5 and 6, 1892. Regarding the statue, see also ibid., Je 13, Ag 30, 1891. See S 16.

27 St. Agnes' Chapel, a chapel of Trinity Parish, on W. 91st and 92d Sts., west of Columbus Ave., which was commenced in 1888, is completed and consecrated.—Trinity Church Bicentennial Celebration, May 5th, 1897, 38, and view; L. M. R. K., III: 933.

Oct. 3 John Drew makes his début as a "star" in New York, at Palmer's Theatre. The play is "The Masked Ball."—N. Y. Times, O 4, 1892.

9 Between Oct. 9 and 15, the Columbus celebration, commemorating the discovery of America, was held.—Official Program (in N. Y. P. L.). See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVI: 909, 1015. On Oct. 12, the Columbus monument, at Eighth Ave. and 59th St., erected by the Italians resident in America, was unveiled and dedicated.—N. Y. Times, O 13, 1892.

21 The World's Fair formally opens at Chicago. About 100,000 people are present.—N. Y. Times, O 22, 1892.

29 The Sodom reservoir, a new storage basin for the Croton water supply, is completed.—Transactions, Amer. Soc. of C. E. (1893), XXVIII: 195. "The original plans of the Department of Public Works for an increased supply of water from the Croton watershed involved the construction of a large storage reservoir, which was to be formed by building a high masonry dam across the Croton River near the Quaker Bridge [see F 23, 1882]. The storage thus obtained was to be increased subsequently, if required, by the construction of smaller reservoirs on the branches and affluents of the Croton. Owing to the opposition to the building of the Quaker Bridge Dam which was made by some citizens at the public hearings, the construction of the proposed reservoir was not begun simultaneously with the building of the new aqueduct [see Jl 15, 1890], as originally intended. The result was that some delay occurred before any additional storage was obtained.

"While the question of constructing the Quaker Bridge dam remained undecided, the pressing necessity of obtaining additional storage caused the Aqueduct Commissioners and the Department of Public Works to commence the construction of the four smaller reservoirs known as the East Branch [consisting of two basins, the Sodom reservoir, and the Bog Brook reservoir], Titicus, Carmel, and Amawalk reservoirs." The location finally chosen for the "New Croton Dam" (see Ag 26) was about 3¼ mi. above the mouth of the Croton River and 3.1 mi. below the old Croton Dam.—Wegmann, op. cit., 191, 205. The Sodom reservoir was the first of these to be completed; during its construction the current of the Croton River was diverted by an artificial channel constructed from a point "about 80 ft. back of the dam site" and "entering the river again 500 ft. below the dam."—Transactions, Amer. Soc. of C. E. (1893), XXVIII: 188.

27 The corner-stone of the P. E. Cathedral of St. John the Divine (see 1888) is laid. The building is to be situated on Morningside Heights between Morningside Park and Amsterdam Ave. on 110th St., the name of which is changed to Cathedral Parkway. The architects are Heins and La Farge.—N. Y. Times, D 28, 1892; Mag. Am. Hist., XXIX: 172. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 247, 253–56; XXXVI: 41; XXXVII: 7; and L. M. R. K., III: 932. The cathedral is still (1926) unfinished, and one building of the Leake & Watts Orphan Asylum (see 1888 and O 27, 1891) remains standing just south of it, used as a choir school.

30 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land comprised in Cathedral Parkway, 110th St., 7th Ave. to Riverside Drive (see Ap 28, 1891).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 969.

— Early in this year, Gladstone introduced his second Irish Home Rule Bill. After 82 days of discussion, marked by scenes of great disorder, the bill was passed by the house of commons, but a week later it was defeated in the house of lords.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 507–9.

— This year was an eventful one in the stock market. Business of all kinds was paralysed by numerous disasters.—Eames, N. Y. Stock Exchange, 67.

— In this year, King's Handbook of New York City was issued. It was the most comprehensive guide-book to the city published up to this time, containing, besides a history of New York, a detailed account of its topography, administration, buildings, institutions, societies, etc. and over 1,000 illustrations.

— In this year, McClure's Magazine, published by S. S. McClure, was founded.—King's Handbook (1893), 636.

— In this year, seven kindergarten classes were established by the board of education, a special appropriation of $5,000 having been made for that purpose.—Palmer, The N. Y. Pub. School, 193.

— "Cable-Cars, so successfully used in many American cities, are about to be introduced in New York on several of the main lines of tramway, and notably on Broadway and Third Avenue. . . . The trolley system of electric railways will probably get an entrance into New York in time, although it has been unable to overcome a certain singular prejudice felt here against it, in spite of the success of the trolleys in so many other cities."—King's Handbook (1893), 137–38.

— In this year, the Charity Organization Society (see My 10, 1882) moved into its own building ("United Charities Building") on the north-east corner of Fourth Ave. and 22d St., which was given by John S. Kennedy as a centre for various benevolent societies. R. W. Robertson and Rowe & Baker were its architects.—See memorial tablet in 22d St. vestibule. The N. Y. Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor (see 1843), the City Mission and Tract Society (see F 19, 1866), and the Children's Aid Society (see F, 1853) have offices there.—25th Ann. Rep., C. O. S. (1907); 7th Ann. Rep., City Mission & Tract Soc. (1894); 41st Ann. Rep., Children's Aid Soc. (1893). See also view and description in Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 736; XXXVII: 262, 264; L. M. R. K., III: 956. The rooms of the School of Philanthropy are also there, conducted by the Charity Organization Soc., and affiliated with Columbia University. Since it was founded, in 1882, the Charities Organization Society has been instrumental in establishing the Children's Court, the Domestic Relations Court, the N. Y. City Tenement House Dept., the Provident Loan Soc. the Municipal 1893 Lodging House, and the nucleus of the Russell Sage Library.—Rider's N. Y. City Guide (1923), 290,

— The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, organized in 1874, and incorporated in 1875, took possession in this year of its building at the s. e. cor. of 23d St. and Fourth Ave.—19th Ann. Rep., Soc. for Prev. of Cruelty to Children (1894).

— The Collis P. Huntington house at the south-east corner of Fifth Ave. and 57th St. was erected in this year from designs by Geo. B. Post.—King's Handbook (1893), 152, 222; L. M. R. K., III: 950.

— In this year, the 58th St. wing of the Cornelius Vanderbilt residence on Fifth Ave. (see My 21, 1881) was built from designs by Geo. B. Post; the remodelled building occupied the entire block from 57th to 58th St.—King's Handbook (1893), 222; N. Y. Times, Ja 11, 1920; L. M. R. K., III: 952. It was sold and finally closed in Feb.-Mar., 1926.

— In this year, the present First Baptist Church, at 79th St. and the Boulevard, the corner-stone of which was laid in 1891 (N. Y. Times, S 26, 1891), was completed.—L. M. R. K., III: 928.

— In this year, John W. Alexander began to win an international reputation as a portrait painter. As a mural painter, his distinction began at about the same period.—For the development of his career, see Fielding's Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 5.

Jan. 5 Mayor Thos. F. Gilroy sends his first annual message to the common council and calls attention to the fact that the city debt has increased $1,116,399.55 during the past year. In addition, he says in part: "Although the Croton Aqueduct has been completed and we have now the means of conveying to the city over four hundred million gallons of water per day, we have not as yet sufficient storage accommodation to afford our citizens the full benefit of this stupendous work. A storage reservoir on Muscoot river, with a capacity of 7,000,000,000 gallons, is already in process of construction, and at the present rate of progress will be completed in 1895. The Byram river supply will be turned into the Kensico reservoir in the course of a few years. A contract for the construction of the Cornell Dam has been awarded, according to which the structure must be completed in July, 1899, and other reservoirs constructed by the Aqueduct Commission are now nearing completion.

"When these reservoirs shall have been constructed the city will enjoy a daily supply greater in proportion to the population than that enjoyed by any other city in the world, and there will be secure for future use a sufficient quantity of water to supply a population of over four millions. . . .

"The steady growth of our commerce strains every day to an increasing degree the capacity of our thoroughfares. The widening of College place has been undertaken in order to relieve the immense traffic on lower Broadway. It is not probable that this improvement will meet all the requirements of trade in this respect. Yet it must be apparent to every one who has witnessed the congestion of vehicles, which is a daily occurrence on Broadway, between Fulton street and Maiden Lane, that some provision must be made for the steadily increasing traffic of the city. It is suggested that a tunnel be constructed from the North to the East river under John and Dey streets, thus providing an easy and level means of transit for wagons from one river front to the other. If this undertaking is found to be practicable, its value to the commerce of the city could be measured by millions. . . .

"It has long been a reproach to this city that the sick and unfortunate who are the legitimate objects of charity are sent to Blackwell's Island, which is generally associated in the public mind with a penal institution. The growth of the city demands larger accommodation for its charitable institutions. It is, therefore, suggested that Riker's Island be made available for the penal institutions now located on Blackwell's Island. . . .

"In the general condition of the city there is much to encourage our civic pride. Its financial prosperity is proved by the exceedingly low rate at which it can borrow money, and by the eagerness of capitalists to find investments within its limits. During the past year 3,008 new buildings have been erected, valued at $59,010,319, while alterations have been made in old structures valued at $7,432,857, making a total investment of $66,443,176 in improvements in real estate."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCIX: 10–19.

16 Edward F. De Lancey calls upon Mayor Gilroy and reads to him a letter "explaining the position taken by the New-York Historical Society in relation to the old City Hall Building." The letter states in part: "The Historical Society has never proposed, asked for, or wished the removal of the City Hall from the park. On the contrary, I have no doubt but that the voice of the membership would be to keep it where it is. The beauty of its architecture, its age, its historic interest, and the attachment of all old New-Yorkers, native and adopted, to it and to the park alike demand its preservation. And in this feeling I am glad to see that you participate, and to know that only the necessity of having a large municipal building has led to your desire for its removal, so that a new one can be erected on its site. This fact your suggestion that the building should be re-erected up town for a museum or some similar object conclusively proves. Jan. 16

"The necessity for a new City Hall is patent to every New-Yorker, and is urgent. But cannot that necessity be overcome? Cannot a new City Hall be erected in the park without removing the present classic structure? . . .

"The reason, and the only reason, urged for building on the site of the present City Hall is to save the three or four millions that a site outside of the park and down town would cost. It is a good reason, as all will admit, and a most forcible one.

"Your commission, Mr. Mayor can give full effect to it, and at the same time erect a building in the park which would not interfere with the present City Hall. Let the entire space in the park be cleared of every building in it except the City Hall itself. Then plan a building to extend from Centre Street to Broadway on Chambers Street, standing back fifteen feet from each of the three streets and of a proportionate depth. Before tearing down the present ugly and unwholesome Tweed Court House, build, first, the two ends of your new building, so that the courts and other offices can occupy them, and then take down the Court House and build the centre portion of your new building on its site.

"The space so occupied by the two ends of the new building would be 30 per cent. greater than that occupied by the present Court House. . . .

"By this plan no more money for rents would be required than is now paid, for the new Centre Street court building is just finished, and will more than accommodate the tenants of the two brownstone buildings now on Chambers Street, east of the present Court House.

"But if this, or some similar plan, does not meet with the favor of your commission, and you do decide to take down the old City Hall, then comes action on your suggestion for its removal to another location up town.

"You suggested giving it to the Historical Society, and the idea is well worthy of that society's consideration. The first question would be, Can the City Hall be taken down and re-erected on the society's land in Central Park west and Manhattan Square so as to make it a fire-proof building. The society has raised $285,000 and paid for that land, under the obligation to its contributors that the building there to be erected should be fire-proof. If this can be done at a reasonable cost, which only architectural experts can decide, then a removal would be possible.

"The next question is how the cost is to be provided for.

"The society is now engaged in raising funds for a new building, with fair prospects of success. It is entirely out of debt, possesses some $80,000 or $85,000 of invested funds, the income of which is required for its present use and maintenance under the trusts on which they were given, and cannot be used for building purposes. Its present fire-proof building at Second Avenue and Eleventh Street is worth about $100,000, but cannot be sold till a new building is completed on its new site. Its library and collections, worth in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, could not be risked in any temporary location.

"Hence the society cannot of itself undertake the removal and re-erection of the City Hall. You, Mr. Mayor, roughly estimated the cost of removal and re-erection at $150,000. From what I can learn, to make it fire-proof and adapted to the purposes of the society, would cost nearer $250,000. The interior of the building would have to be altered almost entirely to fit it for the objects of the society, but the exterior would be precisely as it now stands in the park.

"The above estimated amount would erect the edifice, but the cost of its furnishing and its library and picture gallery fixtures and other arrangements to accommodate its collections would have to 1893 Jan. 16 be met by the society itself, which it probably could do by an appeal to its friends and members."—N. Y. Times, Ja 17, 1893. See also Ja 24.

24 Mayor Gilroy, as chairman of the new municipal building commission, receives the following letter from the Tilden Trust, signed by John Bigelow, president: "It is now rumored that legislation is in contemplation for the removal of the reservoir from Bryant Park, and also for the removal of the old City Hall, to make place for more spacious and adequate accommodations for the municipal offices. Much as we regret the necessity of disturbing a structure consecrated to us like our City Hall by so many precious historical and forensic associations, should such a necessity be found to exist, we respectfully submit that that admirable structure be transferred to the site now occupied by the reservoir in Bryant Park and appropriated to the uses of the Tilden Trust."—N. Y. Times, Ja 25, 1893. See also ibid., Ja 29, F 19, and 26, 1893.

25 A bill referring to the voters of the several districts involved the question of consolidating the suburbs of New York with the city (see My 8, 1890) is introduced in the legislature. It failed to become law.—Foord, Life and Pub. Services of A. H. Green, 187–88. It passed in 1894 (q.v., F 28).

27 The legislature makes provision for the election of 175 delegates to a constitutional convention at the next general election (see N 7).—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 8.

Feb. 4 The state gives its consent to the purchase, by the U. S., of the land bounded by Bowling Green, Whitehall, Bridge, and State Sts., as a site for a new custom-house (see Jl 7, 1892).—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 22. See Mr 2, 1899.

21 The famous old New York Hotel, erected in 1846 at Broadway and Waverly Place, is finally closed. The property has been sold for about $1,500,000, and the hotel will be replaced by a business block.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 5 and 22, 1893. See also L. M. R. K., III: 980.

22 The Inman Line steamers "New York" and "Paris" are transferred from British to American registry, and the stars and stripes are raised on the former by Pres. Harrison. This inaugurates the American Line of trans-Atlantic steamships.—King's Handbook (1893), 76–79; Mrs. Burton Harrison, Hist. of City of N. Y., 826.

8 Early this morning, New York is very slightly shaken by an earthquake.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Mr 9, 1893

" The legislature directs the department of parks to lay out, within one month, the Harlem River Driveway (or Speedway). It is to extend from 155th St. and St. Nicholas Place north-easterly to the west shore of the Harlem River and north along the river to Dyckman St. and is to be not more than 150 ft. wide.—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 102. See N 2, 1896, and Jl 3, 1898.

9 The department of parks is authorised to remove from City Hall Park "the building now occupied by the register of the city and county of New York, the building now occupied by the court of general sessions of the said city and county and by the district attorney of said city and county, and the building now occupied in part as an engine-house and in part by the district court of the city of New York for the first judicial district, whenever suitable accommodations elsewhere shall have been provided according to law for the officers and courts so occupying the same."—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 103.

14 The Hotel Waldorf, at the n. w. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 33d St., is formally opened. The hotel was built as an investment by William Waldorf Astor and cost more than $3,000,000. It was designed by H. J. Hardenbergh.—N. Y. Times, F 13, 26, Mr 12 and 15, 1893; L. M. R. K., III: 981. See also Maurice, Fifth Avenue, 205.

19 The gold medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects has for the first time been conferred upon an American, Richard M. Hunt. "It is a distinction of great national as well as personal value, since it is a notification to Europe that American architecture has ceased to be a negligible quantity, and that its practitioners have done something of which the profession in Europe is bound to take notice."—N. Y. Times, Mr 19, 1893.

21 By act of the legislature an additional bureau, the "bureau of street openings," is created within the law department. It is to have charge of "such legal proceedings to open or close streets, roads and avenues, and to acquire title to real estate therefor, and of all such other proceedings involving awards for damages or assessments for benefit to lands, tenements and hereditaments, as may be assigned to it by the counsel of the corporation."—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 158.

Mar. 21 The so-called "Water-shed Act" is passed by the legislature, giving large powers to the commissioner of public works in providing "for the sanitary protection of the sources of the water supply of the city of New York." He may "enter in and upon at any time within three years after the passage of this act any or all lands near, on, adjacent or contiguous to any of the said sources of water supply," and "abate and remove the cause" of any "pollution or defilement."—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 189. "In pursuance of the authority thus conferred, your engineers have abated about one-thousand serious causes of pollution, beside numerous minor nuisances, and the Aqueduct Commission has taken the necessary steps to acquire a sufficient protective zone of land around each of the reservoirs constructed or projected" (see O 29, 1892).—Aqueduct Commission. Report of the President (1887–1895), 11–12.

23 The dock board adopts plans to build new piers and bulkheads along the North River front between 11th and 23d Sts., at a cost of nearly $11,000,000.—N. Y. Times, Mr 24, 1893. This was the so-called "Chelsea improvement," plans for which were passed upon by the art commission.—See 1897, and Ja 4, 1909.

" The legislature authorises the board of estimate and apportionment to issue bonds, from time to time, up to $150,000, to enable the department of parks "to fully complete, furnish, equip and stock the building known as Castle Garden in the Battery park . . . for the purposes of an aquarium, and to complete the improvement of the grounds adjoining thereto, and repairs to the sea-wall for the use of the public." The aquarium is to be open every day in the week.—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 254.

Apr. 3 The 100th anniversary of the founding of Christ P. E. Church is celebrated in the present edifice on the north-west corner of Broadway and 71st St.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 4, 1893; L. M. R. K., III: 932.

" The board of estimate and apportionment is authorised to appropriate a sum not exceeding $50,000, to be employed by the city "in participating in such naval and other reviews and parades as may take place in said city or the waters about the same, during the year eighteen hundred and ninety-three, in honor of the quadricentennial anniversary of the landing of Christopher Columbus, and also in the reception and entertainment of distinguished visitors to the city during said year."—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 280.

4 The 200th anniversary of the introduction of printing into New York by William Bradford is celebrated by the New York Historical Society at the Cotton Exchange, on the site of which Bradford started the first New York newspaper, in 1725. Charlton T. Lewis delivers the anniversary address, and a memorial tablet is erected.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 8 and Ap 9, 1893. The Grolier Club celebrated the anniversary on April 11, and the printing and allied trades held a banquet at Delmonico's on April 12.—N. Y. Times, Ap 9 et seq., 1893, and L. M. R. K., III: 963. See also N. Y. Herald-Tribune, D 13, 1925.

From April 14 to 21, in commemoration of the bicentennial, the Grolier Club held an exhibition of books printed by Bradford and other printers of the Middle Colonies.—See catalogue in N. Y. P. L.

8 The rapid transit commission agrees to allow the Manhattan Railway Co. to make uptown and downtown extensions of its elevated road.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 12, 1893.

12 The Duke of Veragua, a lineal descendant of Columbus, arrives with his family at New York to attend the Columbian Exposition, and is welcomed as the nation's guest by representatives of the federal and municipal governments. After being escorted to his apartments at the Waldorf, he was presented with the freedom of the city and serenaded by the Spanish colony.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 16, 1893. On April 18, the duke was formally received at the city hall by Mayor Gilroy and the board of aldermen. On April 19 a reception in his honour was held at the Waldorf by the Chamber of Commerce, the New York Historical Society, and the American Geographical Society.—Ibid., Ap 19 and 20, 1893. After several private receptions, the party left for Washington on April 22.—Ibid., Ap 23, 1893.

15 Delmonico's restaurant in Broad St., having been sold recently, is finally closed.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 16, 1893. See also N. Y. Times, Mr 9, 28, Ap 15 and 16, 1893. This was at 22 Broad St.—King's Handbook (1893), 240. For Delmonico's several other sites, see L. M. R. K., III: 977–78.

1893 Apr. 25 A fleet of 32 men-of-war, representing the United States, Great Britain, Spain, Russia, France, Holland, Italy, Germany, Argentina, and Brazil, and three Spanish caravels representing Columbus's ships, the "Niña," the "Pinta," and the "Santa Maria," arrive at New York for the Columbian naval review and anchor in the bay.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 26, 1893. On April 26, amid salutes from the harbour forts, they moved up into the North River. The officers were the guests of the Union League Club.—Ibid., Ap 27, 1893. See, further, Ap 27.

26 Pres. Cleveland arrives from Washington for the naval review.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 27, 1893.

27 Amid the roar of many guns and the waving of flags and bunting, Pres. Cleveland reviews the foreign fleet at anchor in the Hudson River (see Ap 25). In the evening, a Grant birthday dinner was held at the Waldorf, and a brilliant Columbian celebration naval ball at Madison Square Garden.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 28, 1893.

28 A parade of 4,000 armed sailors and marines from the foreign warships is held in New York. In the evening a banquet was given at the Hotel Waldorf by the Chamber of Commerce to the city's guests.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 29, 1893.

May 2 The legislature authorises the city to erect a memorial arch in honour of the soldiers and sailors of New York who gave their lives during the Civil War.—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 522. See D 15, 1900.

" "Whenever the board of estimate and apportionment . . . shall determine and declare that the public interests will be promoted" by the removal of the reservoir from Bryant Park, it is provided by act of legislature that the new area shall be "under the control and management of the department of public parks," and that the park "shall not be used for military parades, drills, inspections or reviews of any kind."—Laws of N. Y. (1893), chap. 539. The use of the reservoir space for a public library was not yet contemplated. See, however, My 19, 1896.

6 The corner-stone of the new St. Luke's Hospital, at Morningside Ave. and 113th St., is laid.—N. Y. Herald, My 7, 1893. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVII: 17, 20. The hospital was opened for patients Jan. 24, 1896 (q.v.). Ernest Flagg was the architect.—Tablet at entrance to the hospital. See L. M. R. K., III: 955.

8 On this and succeeding days, Bangs & Co. sold at auction the first part of the library of Americana of the late Geo. H. Moore, for many years librarian of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. The second part was sold on Feb. 5, 1894, and the following days. See cat. in the N. Y. P. L.

17 "The cable road in Broadway is at last completed."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 17, 1893. Regarding the design and construction of this line, which was commenced in 1890, see Harper's Weekly, XXXV: 723. For its franchise, see N 13, 1889.

18 The Infanta Eulalie, her husband, Don Antonio Maria d' Orleans, and their suite arrive outside the bar on board the "Reina Maria Christina" on a visit to the United States.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 19 and 20, 1893. After a visit to Washington, the infanta was officially received at New York on May 25 (q.v.).

25 The Infanta Eulalie, sister-in-law of Queen Maria Christina of Spain, returns to New York from Washington (see My 18) and is escorted from the West 34th St. pier to the Hotel Savoy. At the hotel she was formally welcomed to the city by Mayor Gilroy and presented with the freedom. In the evening she was serenaded by the Saragossa Band and attended the performance at the Garden Theatre.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 26, 1893. On May 26, a brilliant ball was held in her honour at Madison Square Garden, and on May 28 she attended mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral and a reception at the Catholic Club. On May 30, she laid a wreath on Grant's tomb, held a formal reception at the Savoy, and visited the Fifth Avenue Theatre. On June 4, she attended mass at St. Francis Xavier College, and on June 5 she left for Chicago.—Ibid., My 27–Je 6, 1893.

31 Speaking editorially, the Times says: "The killing of a little child by a reckless rider of a bicycle in the Boulevard has served, for the moment, to make these rubber-shod missiles of the highways more careful of their movements. But there is no hope that any real or lasting relief from the danger and annoyance to which wayfarers in the Boulevard are daily subjected will come through any change of heart in the bicycle riders. The pedestrian must be better protected by laws enforced by the police.

"With the cheapening in the cost of bicycle riding in the public streets has come the abuse of that privilege by thousands of ignorant and loaferish individuals. Many of the bicyclists who swarm along the smooth asphalt of the Boulevard, particularly at night and on Sunday, are irresponsible and reckless young men to whom a stable keeper would not entrust a saddle horse, and who are not fit to ride anything but a rail. May 31

"In the interest of public safety and common decency every rider of a bicycle ought to be brought more fully within the police authority than he is at present. Each owner of a bicycle ought to be required to take out a license for his machine, and display it whenever called upon to do so. Every man who keeps bicycles for rent should be required to obtain a licence and a number for each machine, which its rider should be compelled to display, like a public hackman, upon his vehicle. The fee for a license need not be large, but the system would be salutary and effectual both morally and practically. The police would thus have a chance to regulate the riding as they now can control the driving of horses; and the existing ordinances as to speed, proper place in the roadway instead of on the sidewalks or the central 'grass-plots'—so called—in the Boulevard, and the keeping of bicycles in roadworthy condition, with effectual signals by day and lamps at night, could be enforced more readily.

"It is true that a policeman on foot cannot catch a bicyclist in a stern chase. There seems to be a distinct need for a few mounted policemen to break the back of this dangerous nuisance in the Boulevard and the Riverside Drive. In view of the belligerent attitude of many of these impudent law breakers it might be well to arm these mounted policemen with lassos, at first, or with hounds if necessary."—N. Y. Times, My 31, 1893.

" St. Luke's Hospital, on Fifth Ave. between 54th and 55th Sts., is sold for $2,400,000. The old buildings are to be retained until the new hospital on Morningside Heights (see My 6), is completed.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Je 1, 1893. See also N. Y. Times, Je 1, 2, and 4, 1893. See, further, Mr 24, 1895.

June 1 The New Netherlands Hotel, at Fifth Ave. and 59th St., is opened for business. This is "the second of the magnificent creations of this sort which William Waldorf Astor has completed within a year." It is 17 storeys high and "is one of the tallest buildings in New-York." It cost about $3,000,000.—N. Y. Times, My 18, Je 1 and 2, 1893.

7 The Washington Square M. E. Church in 4th St. near Macdougal St. votes to unite with the Asbury M. E. Church at the s. e. cor. of Washington Place and University Place. The united churches will use the former's name and edifice.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Je 8, 1893. The Asbury M. E. Church was originally the church building of the Washington Sq. Ref'd Dutch Church.—L. M. R. K., III: 936. See My 15, 1895.

10 The corner-stone of a new Fourth Presbyterian Church is laid at West End Ave. and 91st St.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Je 11 and 12, 1893; L. M. R. K., III: 931. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVIII: 473.

15 "I Pagliacci" is sung for the first time in America, at the Grand Opera House.—Brown, II: 643; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 892.

17 The "Viking Ship," an attempted counterpart of the vessel in which Lief Ericson is said to have visited America, arrives at New York from Norway on its way to the World's Fair at Chicago. It is enthusiastically welcomed.—N. Y. Times, Je 18 and 19, 1893. On June 19, Capt. Magnus Andersen and his officers and crew were received by Mayor Gilroy at the city hall.—Ibid., Je 20, 1893.

July 7 A bronze tablet commemorative of the reading of the Declaration of Independence to the American army in the presence of Gen. Washington is erected by the Sons of the Revolution on the front wall of the city hall under the middle window of the mayor's office. It is to be unveiled on July 9.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Jl 8, 1893.

10 Grand Duke Alexander, Vice-admiral Kaznakoff, and the other officers of the Russian war fleet stationed in the Hudson River are entertained by Gen. Daniel Butterfield.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Jl 11, 1893. On July 13, they were formally received at the city hall by Mayor Gilroy.—Ibid., Jl 14, 1893. The fleet sailed on Aug. 9.—Ibid., Ag 10, 1893.

17 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by Jackson, Corlears, and Cherry Sts. and the East River (see Je 14, 1884). Here Corlear's Hook Park was laid out.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 49; L. M. R. K., III: 969. See My 8, 1894. The acquisition was authorised in 1884 (q.v., Je 14).

1893 Aug. 19 The Herald moves from Broadway and Ann St. to its new building, designed by McKim, Mead & White, bounded by Broadway, Sixth Ave., 35th and 36th Sts.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 19 and 21, 1893.

30 The Old Guard armory in the building at the north-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 14th St. is destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ag 31, 1893.

Sept. 24 Farewell services are held in the Scotch Presbyterian Church in West 14th St. prior to the congregation's removal to the new church in 95th St. near Central Park West.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, S 25, 1893; L. M. R. K., III: 932. See My 30, 1894.

Oct. 30 The World's Fair or Columbian Exposition, which opened at Chicago on Oct. 21, 1892 (q.v.), finally closes.—N. Y. Times, O 31, 1893.

Nov. 1 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by Seventh Ave. and Macomb's Lane, south of 155th St. Here Harlem Lane Park was laid out.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate; L. M. R. K., III: 970.

7 Delegates are elected to a constitutional convention to assemble in Albany, on May 8, 1894 (q.v.).—Jour. of the Convention, 10–14.

8 Abbey's Theatre at the n. w. cor. of Broadway and 38th St. is opened with Henry Irving and Ellen Terry in Tennyson's tragedy "Becket."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 9, 1893. In 1896, the name of the theatre was changed to the Knickerbocker.—N. Y. Herald, Jl 15, 1896. For view, when under construction, see King's Handbook (1893), 601.

25 The bronze statue of Nathan Hale by Fred. Wm. MacMonnies, given to the city by the Sons of the Revolution, is unveiled at the south-west corner of City Hall Park.—N. Y. World, N 26, 1893.

Dec. 1 The route for the West Side elevated road is formally adopted by the rapid transit commission. It commences in Battery Place at or near West St. and runs along West St. to W. 11th St., thence along W. 11th St. to Seventh Ave., thence along Seventh Ave. to 45th St., along Broadway and the Boulevard to 170th St., along Kingsbridge Road to Tenth Ave. and 216th St., across the Harlem Ship Canal and Spuyten Duyvil Creek east of the line of Broadway, thence to Broadway and Riverdale Ave., and along Broadway to the city limits. The plan also includes a branch commencing in Centre St. near Tryon Row, running along Centre to Canal St., along Canal to Wooster St., along Wooster St. and University Place to 14th St., along 14th St. to Seventh Ave., there connecting with the main line.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 2, 1893.

5 "The number of houses in Fifth-ave. that are being altered for business purposes is rapidly increasing. Below Forty-second-st. there is hardly a house for sale or to lease that does not have a clause in the notice that the property will be altered for business purposes. . . ."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 5, 1893.

31 Among the buildings completed or about to be occupied at the end of this year were the Metropolitan Life Insurance building at the corner of 23d St. and Madison Ave. (the original wing on 23d St.—see 1890—the north wing and towers not being built until 1909, q.v.); the Hotel Waldorf at the corner of 33d St. and Fifth Ave.; the Herald building at the corner of Broadway and 35th St.; and the New Netherlands Hotel at the n. e. cor. of 59th St. and Fifth Ave.—Ann. Cyclop. (1893), 525.

— In this year, Gladstone resigned as prime minister, "thus bringing to a close one of the most remarkable political careers known in English history." Lord Roseberry succeeded him, but remained in office only 16 months (see Je, 1895).—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 510.

— In this year, the U. S. was in the midst of an industrial crisis, and unemployment was so great throughout the country, due to bankruptcies, closing of factories, etc., that Jacob Coxey, a business man of Ohio, inaugurated a march of idle men on Washington, "to demand relief at the hands of the government. His 'army,' as it was called, ended in a fiasco, but it directed the attention of the country to a grave condition of affairs."

This was a year, also, of numerous strikes, including the great Pullman strike in Chicago.—Bard, Contemporary Am. Hist., 107–8.

— In this year, the Society of Iconophiles was founded.—See the society's seal and certificate of membership. It "set for itself the pleasant task of picturing New York as it is in the closing years of the century, while incidentally it hoped to revive an interest in and to encourage the practice of the long neglected art of pure line engraving." For a descriptive and historical account of the first 12 plates issued by this society, see William Loring Andrews's The Journey of the Iconophiles around New York in search of the historical and picturesque (1897), 21–38, in which the date of founding is erroneously given as 1895. The founders of the society were Wm. Loring Andrews, Beverly Chew, Richard H. Lawrence, Marshall C. Lefferts, Edward H. Bierstadt, and Edwin B. Holden. To these were added later Samuel P. Avery, Charles B. Foote, Wm. F. Havemeyer, and J. Harsen Purdy. This completed the active membership, which has been maintained at ten. In addition, there have been since 1905 fifty associate members who have the privilege of subscribing to one copy of each publication made by the society. It publishes yearly one or more views engraved by such artists as Edwin Davis French, C. F. W. Mielatz, Francis S. King, Sidney L. Smith, Joseph Pennell, Walter M. Aikman. Up to 1908, it had published nine series comprising 80 engravings. These included contemporary views of New York, facsimiles of early views, early American printers and engravers, men and events connected with New York, early New York authors, etc.—Cat. of Engravings issued by Soc. of Iconophiles, 1894–1908, compiled by Richard H. Lawrence, with introd. by Wm. L. Andrews (1908). See also N. Y. Times, Jl 13, 1919.

Since 1908, seven more series have appeared, making sixteen numbered consecutively. The books issued by the society are: Washington's Reception by the Ladies of Trenton together with the Chorus sung as he passed under the triumphal Arch raised on the Bridge over the Assumpink (N. Y., 1903).

An Index to the Illustrations in the Manuals of the Corporation of the City of New York 1841–1870 (N. Y., 1906).

Catalogue of the Engravings issued by the Society of Iconophiles . . . MDCCCXCIV-MCMVIII (N. Y., 1908).

The Hudson-Fulton Celebration MCMIX By Gustav Kobbé (N. Y., 1910).—From A List of Engravings issued by the Society of Iconophiles, 1895–1925.

1894 — In this year was published an Abstract of title of Kip's bay farm in the city of New York, with all known maps relating thereto, together with the water grants on the eastern post road, etc., etc., etc. also, the early history of the Kip family and the genealogy as refers to the title, by John J. Post. It contains 33 maps.

— In this year, the Harvard Club (see Je 9, 1887) erected its present building at Nos. 27–29 W. 44th St. from designs by McKim, Mead & White. In 1904–5, the building was enlarged and extended through to 45th St. It was enlarged again in 1915.—Records of the club (courtesy of Langdon P. Marvin, secretary); Club Books (1895 and 1903); L. M. R. K., III: 938. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVII: 1144.

— Teachers College, which was incorporated in 1889 as the New York College for the Training of Teachers, later simplified to Teachers College, removes from 9 University Place (the old building of the Union Theological Seminary) to 120th St., between Broadway and Amsterdam Ave.—Hist. Columbia Univ., 412–13. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVII: 355, 356.

— In this year, the Congregation Shearith Israel sold its synagogue in West 19th St. (see S 12, 1860).—Pubs., Am. Jewish Hist. Soc., VI: 140; L. M. R. K., III: 929. The corner-stone of its new church at 70th St. and Central Pk. W. was laid on May 20, 1896 (q.v.).

— In this year, Jas. Carroll Beckwith became a member of the National Academy.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 24.

Jan. 9 In his annual message to the common council, Mayor Gilroy says that the city debt has increased $2,132,840.19, owing to the many permanent improvements. The city was forced to issue nearly $20,000,000 in revenue bonds to pay for contingent expenses until the receipts from taxation became available, and as the interest on these bonds amounted to almost $300,000, the mayor suggests that taxes be collected in the earlier instead of the later months of the year. The general affairs of the city are in a very satisfactory condition, he says, but in one direction "we fail to note substantial improvement. This is the important matter of rapid transit. . . . It may be that an underground road capable of the highest speed, to be built by private capital or public funds, will furnish the ultimate solution. Thus far no capitalists have shown a sufficient interest in such a plan, nor has public sentiment declared in favor of such an investment by the City. In the mean-

1894 Jan. 9 time, and even though work in that line was begun, more immediate relief is necessary. The Rapid Transit Commissioners were not met in a proper spirit by the Manhattan Elevated Railroad managers in the effort to improve the facilities of that system. A new line of elevated railroads has, therefore, been planned, and the franchise will be shortly offered for sale. Immediate relief, however, can only be afforded through the Manhattan system by the construction of third tracks and additional terminal facilities.

"In regard to the water supply, the department of public works has done much to improve the sanitation of the Croton River and Bronx River water-sheds, and the aqueduct commissioners have completed the East Branch Masonry Dam and the two Bog Brook Dams, having a total storage capacity of 9,000,000,000 gallons.

"The extensive introduction of asphalt pavements in residential districts has been attended with good results. Probably no pavement yet designed so fully meets the requirements of cleanliness, smoothness and noiselessness and the great demand for its extension by our citizens warrants the belief that it meets with popular favor. . . .

"The Department of Docks has carried forward the improvement of the water-front, with the accompanying important advantages of increased commercial facilities and augmented public revenues. Six new piers have been constructed, four piers extended to the bulkhead-line of 1890, and fourteen hundred feet of bulkhead or river wall completed. This makes an aggregate of new wharfage of two and one-half miles linear measurement. . . . The Department has also built four thousand lineal feet of crib-bulkhead at Riker's Island, which will provide a dumping place for 3,000,000 cubic yards of ashes and street refuse. By this means about sixty-four acres will be added to the area of the island. . . .

"The question of the best method of final disposition of ashes and street refuse is a serious one. Towing the material to sea and dumping it there, or using it for filling in purposes at such points as are available, has been continued, because it is at present the cheapest and the only practicable method. There is a very general interest in the subject of cremation of refuse, and many systems have been devised, some of which have been put into more or less successful operation in other cities. The questions as to whether cremation is practicable and desirable for this city, as to whether the expence would be greater or less than the present method, and as to what system, if any, is to be adopted, are being inquired into and will be carefully considered. . . .

"There is due to the City from the United States Government, including interest, $2,292,659.73, on what is known as the 'War Claim.' This claim has been admitted to be just by the War and Treasury Departments, and similar obligations to cities and states all over the country have been discharged by the general government. Yet New York has never been able to collect its money. An ordinance of the Corporation of the City of New York, approved by the Mayor April 23, 1861 [q.v.], created by an issue of bonds a fund of $1,000,000, which was placed under the control of the Union Defense Committee to be used 'in aid of the defense of the National Union.' Of this amount $769,423.31 was spent in organizing and fitting out regiments of volunteers, and $230,350 to aid the families of soldiers enlisted. The first item, at least, of these expenditures has always been recognized as a just and legal claim of the City for reimbursement. The attempt to collect it was begun by the Union Defense Committee in November, 1861, but only $104,429.79 has ever been paid. It is my purpose to make another effort to secure from the National Government the discharge of this just obligation to our city. . . .

"The exhibition of school work at the World's Columbian Exposition afforded an opportunity to compare results achieved in our schools with the work in other cities. New York's exhibit won great commendation from practical educators, as well as official awards of medals and diplomas. . . .

"The new Criminal Court Building, designed for the accommodation of all of the branches of the criminal courts, the Health Department, the Department of Street Cleaning, the Excise Board and the Board of Coroners, is completed, except in some minor details of interior arrangements, decoration and furnishing. This building covers the entire block bounded by Centre, Elm, Franklin and White streets, and its cost complete, without furniture, was $1,500,000. No public building of its character and dimensions has ever been erected in this country at a less cost. . . .

"Under the direction of the Board of Electrical Control 100½ miles of subways for telegraph and telephone wires have been constructed in the city, and 49¾ miles of subways for electric light and power conductors. The total mileage of subways is 874 for telephone and telegraph and 820 for light and power wires. There are in use 6,790 arc lamps, 268,000 incandescent lamps and nearly 10,000 telephones. The Board has also caused the removal of 1,407 poles and 960 miles of overhead wires without cost to the City, and 104 poles and 387 miles of wire at public expense. The absence of fatal accidents and damage to property, as well as the improved appearance of the public thoroughfares, attest the benefit of the work of this Board. . . . Jan. 9

"A condition of unexampled depression in trade exists throughout the country, and the effects are shown in this city by the unprecedentedly large number of people unable to secure employment. Distressing destitution and hardship are imminent in thousands of homes among those worthy and willing to work. No such revival of business activity as would afford employment to all those seeking it can naturally be expected this winter. Any public work, therefore, that can be prosecuted to the public advantage, and which would furnish employment while it is not to be found in other directions, should be promptly commenced. . . ."

In conclusion, the mayor says: "It is the manifest destiny of the vast population and immense business interests of which our port is the centre that they shall be consolidated under one municipal government and form the Metropolis of the World. The Greater New York already exists in popular fancy, and the title is used to describe the Metropolitan District. When it shall exist in fact is a question to be determined by the people. I am in favor of the proposition to submit to the people, for their decision, the question as to whether the time has arrived for such consolidation."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXIII: 16–29.

A senate committee of seven members is appointed, commonly known as the "Lexow Committee," to investigate the police department of New York City.—Senate Jour. (1894), 187. This action was the result of the activities of certain reform movements in the city, and, more especially, of the investigations of the Rev. Dr. Chas. H. Parkhurst, president of the Society for the Prevention of Crime (see F 14, 1892).—Ann. Cyclop. (1894), 537; Parkhurst, Our Fight With Tammany (1895), 232 et seq. As a result of the committee's investigation, 67 men connected with the police department were accused of crime on evidence sufficient, in most cases, to warrant indictments (Ann. Cyclop., 1894, 537–38), but, on Jan. 1, 1896, not one man who was accused before that committee had begun to serve a term of imprisonment (ibid., 1895, 549). Jan. 31

The Tilden Trust having proposed to the commissioners appointed to select a site for the municipal building that if it is found necessary to remove the city hall, it be re-erected in Bryant Park and appropriated to their use, Andrew H. Green protests to the commissioners against such removal and expresses the hope "that no portion of Reservoir Square, or any other Park, Square or open ground on this Island provided for the use of the people, may hereafter be appropriated to buildings." Regarding the city hall, he says: Feb. —

"The City Hall presents an example of fine architectural taste. In design and construction it is as faultless as any structure in the City, whilst its historical and biographical relations involve events of paramount interest and personages of dignity and estimation. . . . It should continue to stand as for nearly a century it has stood, ample, commodious and convenient.

"Its presence tends to keep alive associations that are near to very many of our citizens, a visible landmark, an object lesson to the people, that should not be destroyed.

"Its erection was coeval with the conception of a group of enterprises that distinctly marks an era in the material progress of the City, the State and the Nation; among which the Erie Canal, the laying out of the City by Rutherford, De Witt and Morris, and Jefferson's magnificent scheme of a National Coast Survey are prominent examples. . . .

"It, and the ground upon which it stands, are memorable in the City's annals. Here upon the 'Fields' or 'Commons' as then known, Alexander Hamilton made his maiden speech on the occasion of closing the Port of Boston in retaliation for the destruction of the tea, and here the Sons of Liberty held their meetings to resist the assaults of the British government on the customs and rights of the people. . . .

"Here the Declaration of Independence was read to the American army in the presence of Washington.

1894 Feb. — "Here many events of paramount interest to the Nation, State and City have been celebrated by imposing civic and military ceremonies. Here a grand reception was given to Lafayette, and the freedom of the city, in a golden box, to that Corypheus of Democracy, Andrew Jackson, and here four generations of New Yorkers have been accustomed to witness imposing displays. The building is indissolubly connected with its site and surroundings. Remove it and interest in it vanishes.

"Though with northward growth of the metropolis the City Hall is now near its southerly limit, with the sure coming of the Greater City, its present site is most central and advantageous. A million people to the right, just across the Hudson, another million to its left, just over the East River, all within a radius of five miles, already find it accessible and convenient. . . .

"If the City Hall will not serve all the purposes now required in a municipal building, it does and will admirably accommodate very many purposes, as well as apartments for important city offices, reviews, reception of distinguished visitors, the display of statues and portraits of illustrious American heroes and statesmen, and the celebration of important events. . . .

"Considered solely as a measure of prudent economy, it should be let alone. Its dimensions would occupy more than the whole avenue front of a city block. Let it continue to be used for what it can be made useful, and if the Tilden Trust is to have it at all, let the Tilden Trust have it where it stands, and avoid the wasteful process of its removal. . . .

"Reservoir and other existing Squares are crowded in the warmer season with children and those seeking the freshness of the breezes. Not an inch of their space should be taken for buildings. If the Reservoir is to be removed, the ground upon which it stands should be left open, thus increasing its already too limited space. . . .

"I trust that discretion may be wisely exercised. Let the City Hall stand; occupy no part of the Park with buildings. He who, for a brief space having an authoritative voice in determining these questions, should violate the cherished sentiments of those who look to the best interests of the City and consent to the consequent waste, will have to live longer than is given to most mortals, if he shall cease to hear their execrations."—Green, The Preservation of the Historic City Hall of New York (1894). Regarding the proposals to transfer the city hall to the reservoir site, see also Century Association's Memorial Statue of Wm. Cullen Bryant, Report of memorial committee.

27 The new club-house of the Metropolitan Club, designed by McKim, Mead & White, at No. 1 East 60th St. (see My 19, 1891), is formally opened.—N. Y. Times, F 27 and 28, 1894. It is illustrated and described in ibid., F 25, 1894. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVIII: 226, and L. M. R. K., III: 938.

28 The legislature authorises the city to acquire the land bounded by 145th and 155th Sts., Bradhurst and Edgecomb Aves., and to establish a public park there.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 56. This became Colonial Park.—Ann. Rep., Dept. of Parks (1902), 64. See My 5, 1899.

" The legislature passes a law providing for the submission to the people of New York, Long Island City, Brooklyn, Staten Island, Westchester, Flushing, Newtown, Jamaica, and portions of Eastchester and Pelham, of the question of consolidating the various territories under one municipal government (see Ja 25, 1893).—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 64. By a later act the city of Mt. Vernon was permitted a referendum.—Ibid., chap. 456. See N 6.

Mar. 2 By act of the legislature a person is made guilty of a felony, punishable by imprisonment in a state prison not less than two nor more than four years, if he "knowingly votes or offers to vote at any election when not qualified;" if he is instrumental in getting some one to vote who is not qualified; if he "votes or offers to vote" at an election "more than once" or "in an election district or place where he does not reside."—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 77.

21 The legislature authorises the commissioner of public works to erect a stone, iron, or steel bridge across the Harlem River from 125th St. and First Ave., Manhattan, to 134th St. and Willis Ave., Bronx.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 147; ibid. (1897), chap. 664; ibid. (1901), chap. 607. This became the Willis Ave. Bridge and was opened on Aug. 22, 1901 (q. v.).

30 The legislature authorises the board of estimate and apportionment to appropriate $50,000 for the erection of monuments in the city parks or squares in honour of "distinguished American citizens."—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 190.

Apr. 4 The Hungarian societies of New York hold a memorial parade in honour of Louis Kossuth, who died recently. In the evening there was a large meeting at Cooper Institute at which tributes were paid to Kossuth by Chauncey M. Depew, Frederick R. Coudert, and others.—N. Y. Times, Mr 26, 28, 29, Ap 1 and 5, 1894.

18 Founders' Day of New York University is observed at University Heights above East 179th St. in The Bronx, the class of '94 carrying a stone from the old university building on Washington Square and laying it as the corner-stone of the new gymnasium.—N. Y. Times, Ap 19, 1894. The Washington Square building was soon afterward demolished (see My 21). The college work was transferred to University Heights in the fall of 1894, but the buildings there were not dedicated until Oct. 19, 1895 (q. v.).—N. Y. Times, O 1, 1894; N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911.

May 1 The triangle of land bounded by 32d and 34th Sts., Broadway and Sixth Ave. has been officially named Greeley Square.—N. Y. Times, My 1, 1894. See also L. M. R. K., III: 970.

4 A law is passed by the legislature authorising the governor to appoint a commission having broad powers to examine the tenements of New York with regard to their construction, healthfulness, safety, rentals, and the effect of tenement-house life on the health, education, savings, and morals of persons living in these habitations.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 479. The commission appointed consisted of Richard Watson Gilder, chairman, W. D'N. Washington, Cyrus Edson, Roger Foster, Solomon Moses, George B. Post, and John R. Schuchman. Edward Marshall, the Sunday editor of the Press, through whose efforts the law was passed, was appointed secretary and executive officer.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 105.

8 The constitutional convention, delegates to which were elected on Nov. 7, 1893, begins its sessions at Albany and chooses Joseph H. Choate for president. The convention concluded its work on Sept. 29 (q. v.).—Jour. of the Convention, 1, 15, 848.

" The legislature authorises the expenditure of $200,000 for the regulation of the Corlear's Hook property, which, by supreme court proceedings completed in 1893, as provided for by the law of June 14, 1884 (q. v.), has been made a public park.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 511.

" The board of estimate and apportionment is authorised to appropriate $50,000 for the erection, in Battery Park, of a monument to commemorate the evacuation of New York by the British in 1783.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 523. So far as known, this monument was never erected. The board of estimate and apportionment apparently did not choose to make the appropriation.—Letter to the author (dated Ap 8, 1926) from Henry Rutgers Marshall, secretary of the art commission.

9 The legislature provides for the laying out and establishment of Fort Washington Park.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 581. See also L. M. R. K., III: 969. The land was acquired in 1896 (q. v., Ag 7).

12 New York State passes a compulsory education law.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 671.

" The bronze statue of Columbus, by Suñol, is unveiled on the Mall in Central Park by Vice-Pres. Adlai E. Stevenson.—N. Y. Times, My 10 and 13, 1894. See also ibid., Je 13, 1892.

21 The work of tearing down the old N. Y. U. building in Washington Square is begun.—N. Y. Times, My 22, 1894. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVIII: 172, 174; descrip. of Pl. 139, III: 708; and L. M. R. K., III: 941. A modern 11-storey building was erected on the site, and the first eight floors of the new structure were rented to a book-publishing company and the ninth, tenth, and eleventh floors reserved for the use of the N. Y. U. Law School and the School of Pedagogy.—N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911.

22 The legislature directs the city to acquire the land bounded by 111th and 114th Sts., First Ave. and the Harlem River, and to establish a public park there.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 746. This became Thomas Jefferson Park (see D 10, 1897, and 1902). See also L. M. R. K., III: 971.

On the same day the legislature directed that the land included by Tenth Ave., Fort George Road, Eleventh Ave., Dykeman St., and the Harlem River, be made a public park.—Ibid. (1894), chap. 749. This became part of Fort George Park as developed in 1901–6.—L. M. R. K., III: 969.

" The Chamber of Commerce rapid transit bill becomes a law. This measure was in the nature of an amendment to the Rapid Transit Act of 1891 (q. v., Ja 31), and authorised the municipal construction and ownership of a rapid transit system, if the people should 1894 May 22 so choose. When the question was submitted to them, the vote in favour of a road to be constructed under municipal direction was 132,647 as against 42,916. The law also called for the creation of a new board of rapid transit commissioners. These were Alexander E. Orr, president, Seth Low, John Claflin, John N. Inman, John H. Starin, and William Steinway. This commission selected Wm. Barclay Parsons as consulting engineer and entrusted him with the preparation of plans for an underground road. He visited Europe to study the problem, and finally submitted plans for a road, the cost of which would be $60,000,000.—Laws of N. Y. (1894), chap. 752; Ann. Cyclop. (1894), 540. A rare volume of the Minutes of the meetings of this rapid transit board, for the years 1894–96, is preserved in N. Y. P. L. See My 9, 1895.

30 The corner-stone of the new Scotch Presbyterian Church is laid at 96th St. and Central Park West. The new building will be the fourth occupied by the congregation since its organization in 1756. —N. Y. Times, My 31, 1894. See also L. M. R. K., III: 932.

June 7 Congress authorises the New York and New Jersey Bridge Co. "to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey." The location is to be subject to the approval of the secretary of war and is to be somewhere between 59th and 69th Sts., New York City.—Laws of U. S., 53d cong., 2d sess., chap. 101.

28 Congress passes a law making the first Monday in September, "Labor Day," a legal holiday.—Laws of U. S., 53d cong., 2d sess. chap. 118.

July 4 The Hawaiian Republic is proclaimed, with Sanford B. Dole as president.—N. Y. Times, Jl 19, 22, and 29, 1894. Pres. Cleveland recognized it on Aug. 8.—Ibid., Ag 9 and 10, 1894.

19 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by Park, Bayard, Baxter, and Mulberry Sts. Here Mulberry Bend (now Columbus) Park was developed.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate; L. M. R. K., III: 971.

Aug. — In August and September of this year, the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane removed from the site bounded by Amsterdam Ave. and the Boulevard, 117th and 119th Sts., to its present location at White Plains, where building operations had been begun in 1892. —124th Ann. Rep., Soc. of N. Y. Hospital (1895), 19–20; Times, O 18, 1894. The property on Morningside Heights had been sold to Columbia College (see F 18, 1892), and the college took possession of the ground on Oct. 1, 1894 (q. v.).

Sept. 4 The Bank for Savings (see Jl 3, 1819) moves from Bleecker St. to the s. w. cor. of Fourth Ave. and 22d St.—Unpublished records of the bank.

6 A mass meeting is held at Madison Square Concert Hall "for the purpose of formally launching a citizens' movement in the interest of honest government and to effect the overthrow of Tammany Hall." A committee of seventy is agreed upon, "with full power to confer with other anti-Tammany organizations and to take such action as may be necessary to further the objects of the meeting."—N. Y. Tribune, S 7, 1894; Parkhurst, Our Fight With Tammany (1895), 253 et seq. The committee of seventy included Abram S. Hewitt, George L. Rives, Wm. B. Hornblower, J. Pierpont Morgan, Wm. E. Dodge, Anson Phelps Stokes, Wm. Travers Jerome, and Joseph Larocque.—Stokes Records, III: 50. The candidates placed in nomination by the committee of seventy were elected on Nov. 6 (q. v.).

29 The constitutional convention, which began its sessions on May 8 (q. v.), completes its work of revision. An "Address to the people" was adopted, and provision was made for the submission of the revised constitution to the people at the next general election.—Jour. of the Convention, 831–46.

Oct. — In this month, the famous "Dreyfus case" began in France. It lasted until 1906 (q. v., Jl 12).—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 358–64. See also Ja 13, 1898.

1 The trustees of Columbia College take possession of their new site bounded by 116th, 120th Sts., Amsterdam Ave. and the Boulevard, formerly the property of the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane (see F 18, 1892, and Ag, 1894).—Eve. Post, O 1 and 30, 1894. Most of the asylum buildings were soon after demolished, and the corner-stone of the first Columbia building, the library, designed by McKim, Mead & White, the gift of Pres. Seth Low, was laid on Dec. 7, 1895 (q. v.). The property was dedicated as the university site on May 2, 1896 (q. v.).

Alexander III, czar of Russia, dies and is succeeded by Nicholas II.—Ann. Reg. (1894), 67. Nov. 1

"It was announced to-day that John Jacob Astor is going to build a large hotel on the south-west corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street adjoining the Waldorf, which, it is said, will be larger than any other hotel in the world. It will be 350 feet long, 100 feet wide, and will be several stories higher than the Waldorf. Henry B. Ely, the manager of Mr. Astor's property, said to-day that an effort would be made to excel all other hotels in every way. It will be run in connection with the Waldorf by Mr. Boldt without the attempt at any rivalry. 2

"The plans have not yet been perfected, but the architect will be Henry J. Hardenbergh, who built the Waldorf; only the ground plan has been considered thus far. The style of architecture and the height of the building are matters yet to be decided upon.

"The new hotel will cover the other half of the block now occupied by the Waldorf on Fifth Avenue, and will extend west through Thirty-fourth Street for an additional distance of 100 feet. This site is now covered by the Astor homestead, the stables in the rear, and seven brown-stone-front houses on Thirty-fourth Street from Nos. 2 to 14."—Eve. Post, N 2, 1894. See also N. Y. Herald, Je 2, 1895. The new hotel became the Astoria.—L. M. R. K., III: 981. See N 1, 1897.

At the election on this day a definite attempt is made to oust Tammany Hall from control of the city government. The committee of seventy (see S 6), representing all classes of society, nominated Wm. L. Strong for mayor, and John W. Goff for recorder. The Republicans, the State Democracy, the Independent County Organisation, the Anti-Tammany Democracy, the German-American Reform Union, and the confederated good government clubs, all anti-Tammany organisations, supported the committee of seventy's ticket, which was generally successful. Strong was elected by a plurality of over 45,000, and Goff, by an even larger vote.—N. Y. Times, N 7 and 8, 1894; Ann. Cyclop. (1894), 542. For a history of the movement against Tammany which culminated in the success of this election, see Parkhurst, Our Fight With Tammany (1895). 6

On the question of consolidation the election results are: "New York, for consolidation, 96,938; against, 59,959; Kings, for, 64,744; against, 64,467; Queens, for, 7,712; against, 4,741; Richmond, for, 5,531; against, 1,505; Mount Vernon, for, 873; against, 1,603; Eastchester, for, 374; against, 260; Westchester, for, 620; against, 621; Pelham, for, 261; against, 153."—Ash, Greater N. Y. Charter with Appendixes (1901), second ed., cxxi–cxxii. See also N. Y. Tribune, N 9, 10, and 30, 1894. "

"The Constitution of 1894" (see S 29) is adopted by a vote of 410,697 against 327,402.—Leg. Manual (1895), 977–78. In their "Address to the people" the delegates declared: "We have retained the general framework and substance of the existing Constitution and have sought only to make such modifications as experience has shown to be desirable, without venturing upon undue experiments. "

"Out of more than four hundred amendments proposed and considered, we have adopted thirty-three, besides striking out obsolete matter."

One amendment separates municipal from state and national elections; another prohibits "the issue of passes by railroad, telegraph and telephone companies to public officers;" another prohibits "riders on appropriation bills;" another extends the prohibition against lotteries so as to include "all pool-selling, bookmaking and other forms of gambling;" another requires that a man must be a citizen for 90 days (instead of 10) in order to qualify as a voter; another makes it possible to use a "mechanical device for recording and counting votes;" another fixes the number of senators and assemblymen at 50 and 150 respectively, reapportions the districts, and provides that "no one county shall have more than one-third of all the Senators, and that New York and Kings county together shall not have more than one-half of all the Senators;" another prohibits the "contract system of convict labor." (Ordinary provisions of statute law were thus introduced.)

1894 Nov. 6 — In order to simplify and strengthen the judiciary system, along with other changes, they declare they have "done away with justices of sessions, abolished the Courts of Sessions, and conferred their jurisdiction upon the County Courts, abolished Courts of Oyer and Terminer and Circuit Courts and conferred their jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court, enlarged and defined the jurisdiction of County Courts, prohibited county judges and surrogates in counties over 120,000 inhabitants from practicing law, forbidden the Legislature to further enlarge the jurisdiction of local and inferior courts of its own creation."—Jour. of the Convention, 839.

Dec. 10 — The avenue on the easterly side of Morningside Park, from 114th St. to 123d St., is designated as Morningside Park, East, from and after Dec. 1, 1894.—Proc., App'd by Mayor, LXII: 204.

27 — The Hotel Majestic at the s. w. cor. of 72d St. and Central Park West is formally opened to the public.—Eve. Post, D 28, 1894.

" — The Metropolitan Hotel property at Broadway, Prince, and Crosby Sts., which includes Niblo's Garden, has been sold. The hotel during its early history was the scene of many notable banquets and receptions.—N. Y. Times, D 8, 1894. The building was demolished in 1895.—N. Y. Times, Ja 6 and F 1, 1895; L. M. R. K., III: 979, 985. See Mr 23, 1895.

— In the spring of this year, Theodore Roosevelt was appointed police commissioner by Mayor Strong. He retained the office for two years, and during that time did much to eliminate politics and favouritism from the department.—Theodore Roosevelt. An Autobiography, 185–222.

— In this year was published Our Fight with Tammany, by Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst, D.D.

— In 1895, there were 2,406 new buildings erected; in 1896, 3,308,—an increase of 902.—Message of Mayor Strong, Ja 12, 1897.

— The Jacob H. Schiff fountain in Seward Park, designed by Arnold W. Brunner, was presented to the city in this year.—Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City, 129.

— In this year, Chas. Dana Gibson's drawings in black-and-white began to be popular and during the later Nineties they "achieved an almost universal vogue." Commenting on them, the World said: "Gibson has drawn the true American girl. He is the American Du Maurier. . . . Before Gibson synthetized his ideal woman, the American girl was vague, nondescript, inchoate; there was no type of her to which one could point and say 'That is the typical American girl.' As soon as the world saw Gibson's ideal it bowed down in adoration, saying: 'Lo, at last the typical American girl.' Not only did the susceptible American men acknowledge her their queen, but the girls themselves held her as their own portrait, and strove to live up to the likeness. Thus did nature follow in the footsteps of art, and thus did the Gibson girl become legion, and the world take her to its heart as the type of American womanhood. . . . Gibson also created a type of man, the square-shouldered, firm-jawed, clean-shaven, well-groomed, wholesome youth—for which he and his friend Richard Harding Davis were the models; and the American young man, less self-consciously than the American girl, set himself to imitate the type. It was Gibson's pen which sent mustaches out of fashion and made the tailors pad the shoulders of well-cut coats."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 193–95.

Jan. 1 — The Ship Canal Bridge (see Ap 5, 1892), extending across the Harlem River from Broadway, Manhattan, to Broadway, Bronx, is opened for traffic.—Rep., Com'r of Bridges (1912), 282. This report contains a view of this bridge (Pl. 13) as well as views of all the other important city bridges. See also Ann. Cyclop. (1894), 535. See Je 17.

5 — The 34th St. crosstown horse-cars begin to run.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 6, 1895.

6 — The old Herald building, erected in 1866 (q. v.) at Broadway and Ann St., was sold during the past week to H. O. Havemeyer for $950,000.—N. Y. Times, Ja 6, 1895. The St. Paul building was erected on the site in 1896 (q. v.).

8 — Mayor Strong, in his first message to the common council, informs them that the city debt has increased $3,316,413.30 during the past year. Commenting on the revolt against Tammany at the last election (see N 6, 1894), he says:

"Although it was clearly not the intention of the original framers of our Constitution and laws that public affairs should be conducted through the medium of political parties, it is a matter of history, both in State and Nation, that practically such has been the result. It is neither strange nor unnatural to find that as our citizens in widely separated localities have sentiments in common upon subjects of finance, foreign policy, internal improvements or the tariff, that they should seek to act in unison at the polls and in so doing form themselves into political parties. In the matter of municipal administration, affecting chiefly, if not almost exclusively, the welfare of the citizens of a particular locality, the same conditions do not exist. In municipal affairs, results may be accomplished through different channels, providing every citizen conscientiously keeps alive his interest in such affairs and is prepared to exercise a proper influence, based on knowledge, when he goes to the polls. Integrity in public office can be assured by a continued demand for such conduct by our citizens and by a continued interest in public affairs. In a word, municipal administration can and should be made a matter of practical business, differing chiefly in the magnitude of interests involved. However these propositions may be argued out theoretically, the people at the last election demanded a change from politics to business.

"Your Honorable Board will, I have no doubt, within the limits of your power, seek to obey the mandate of the citizens so clearly expressed at the recent election. For myself, while appreciating the demand for change, both in the character of men chosen to perform public service and in the nature and amount of public expenditures, I shall endeavor to meet both these requirements by naming for office men whose capabilities are their indorsements, and at the same time to make such proper reductions in expenditures as will give the taxpayer the greatest results for the least taxation, being mindful meanwhile that we live in a city so magnificent in location, wealth and standing that it is the part of wisdom as well as civic pride to jealously guard those interests."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXVII: 13–18.

15 — Col. George E. Waring assumes office as street cleaning commissioner of New York City, having been appointed by Mayor Strong.—The Sun, Ja 16, 1895. He completely reorganized the department and introduced the white duck uniforms, from which the cleaners derived the name of "White Wings." Mrs. Burton Harrison said: "A marked feature of the new régime has been the reform in the character of the working force. To bring this about, the men employed were made to feel that their retention depended entirely upon themselves,—that, if they worked and behaved well, they would be kept; if the reverse, no power or 'influence' of politicians or of any one else would enable them to hold their places. This understood, the character of the force was changed as if by magic: such removals and new appointments as were made were in individual cases, and only after careful examination; and the muster of twenty-five hundred men working efficiently to-day, is practically that of two years ago, with only such differences as proper discipline must effect. The matter of costuming the workers in white duck suits and caps, although the subject of satirical comment by the casual critic, is useful for many purposes,—keeps the men more easily under observation, and is even gratifying to many of them, because it identifies them with one of the most popular reforms in recent years; though others are still to be found who resent any uniform as a badge of servitude no American should tolerate."—Harrison, Externals of Modern N. Y. (1896), 796–98. See also Waring, "The Cleaning of a Great City," in McClure's Mag., IX: 911–24.

17 — The tenement-house commission appointed in 1894 (q. v., My 4) presents to the legislature a report showing the results of its investigations. The report discusses the questions of immigration, density of population, overcrowding, different types of tenement-house plans, fireproof construction, death rates, rear tenements, the need of public parks in tenement neighbourhoods, recreation piers, public baths, etc. Among the recommendations made to the legislature by the commission were the following: that the law be perfected so as to give the board of health unquestioned power to condemn and destroy tenement-houses unfit for human habitation; that the percentage of lot allowed to be covered by new tenement-houses be limited to 70% and that no more air shafts shall be roofed over; that certain dangerous trades be prohibited in tenement-houses so as to prevent fire; that the ceilings of all habitable basements be at least two feet above the ground; that all dark hall-ways be lighted by artificial light; that at least 400 cu. ft. of air be provided for every adult and 200 cu. ft. for every child under 1895 Jan. 17 12; that the use of tenement-houses for lodging-houses or stables or for storage of rags be prohibited; that the number of sanitary inspectors be increased by 15 and the number of sanitary police by five; that at least two small parks be laid out within three years in certain districts of the lower East Side; that no school buildings be erected without a proper outdoor playground; that free public baths be established all year round; that the system of lighting the streets by electricity be extended to the tenement-house districts as soon as possible; that the streets in tenement districts be paved with asphalt; that the permanent tenement-house board established under the act of 1887 (q. v., Mr 25) be abolished. This report, accompanied by supplementary articles and discussions, was published in this year in more than 600 pages. It contained, besides, illustrations of various types of tenement-houses, photographs of certain bad tenement-house conditions, and interesting maps and charts.—Report of the Tenement House Committee of 1894 (1895); De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 105–7. Some of these recommendations were enacted into law on May 9 (q. v.).

22 As the "present appearance and condition of the City Hall is an offense to the sight of the community and a menace to the health of those whose business necessitates their presence in the building," the board of aldermen directs the commissioner of public works to take such action "as will result in the cleaning and renovation of the City Hall of the City of New York, and its preservation and continuance in that condition."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXVII: 56–57.

Feb. 7 The shot-tower at No. 82 Beekman St. (see D 18, 1856) is badly damaged by fire.—N. Y. Herald, F 8, 1895. See My 25, 1907.

8 The first operatic performance in New York of "Samson et Delila" takes place, at the Metropolitan Opera House. It had earlier been heard in concert form.—Brown, III: 461; N. Y. P. L. Bulletin (1925), 897.

Mar. 10 One of the oldest houses still standing in this city was a three-storey brick structure at No. 122 William St. It was built several decades before the Revolution and was now used as a restaurant. The battle of Golden Hill was fought directly behind this house. A newly organized patriotic society, called the Military and Naval Order of the United States, contemplates buying the old building and erecting a club-house in the rear, on the spot where the first battle of the Revolution took place.—N. Y. Times, Mr 10, 1895. See also descrip. of Pl. 43, I: 345–46.

" Describing the advantages of the West Side, the Times says: "There is no city in the world, with so large and densely crowded a population, which has as great natural advantages, as perfect artificial appliances for drainage and water supply, as wide streets, pure air, picturesque surroundings and general meritorious architecture of public and private buildings as in that part of New York City from Fifty-ninth to One Hundred and Tenth Street, between Central Park and the Hudson River.

". . . There was an attempt at first to graft upon the West End the same hideous architecture and the same monotonous and gloomy, in the mass, brownstone as the material in which it was to be expressed that prevailed in the older parts of the city. But it was unsuccessful, because it was so manifestly unsuitable for buildings situated in the midst of parks, and in what was practically a park itself. . . . Where the first buildings were put up there may be found the same rows of brownstone houses that are so distinguishing a feature of Fifth, Madison, and Lexington Avenues. . . . Fortunately, holders of property fronting the Park demanded such high prices for lots that few of the old style fronts are to be found on this fine avenue. . . .

"Other materials lighter in colour effect and admitting of more variety in architecture were used, with the result that the West End presents a much more lightsome appearance than the other parts of the city which are inhabited by the same class of people. . . . Brick of all shades, from red to cream, in old and new shapes, the prolific terra cotta and stone of various texture and tracticability were used. The effect was in keeping with the surroundings. . . .

"It is a curious fact that, while the projectors of all the improvements in the West End thought that Central Park West and Grand Boulevard would be the avenues upon which the finest private residences would be erected, this has not proved to be the case. As the territory was settled, the aspect of the north and south streets took on characteristics very different from what was anticipated. The erection of the Dakota on Central Park West so early in the history of the development of the West End seems to have resulted in the devotion of a large part of the frontage to buildings of a public or semi-public character. . . . Great hotels, imposing apartment houses, churches, schools, hospitals, museums, and buildings of like importance already have location here, and others are contracted for or projected. . . . Mar. 10

"The social life of this part of the West End is fashioned by the character of the buildings in which its devotees are housed. So many big family hotels and apartment houses make a neighborhood that is distinctive. None but the wealthy can afford to dwell in the expensive structures erected on the highest-priced land in the residential portion of the city. . . .

"The Boulevard has not yet become the place of residence of the very wealthy. Some time it may. But from the buildings there now it seems likely that it will be second to Central Park West, as the avenue upon which structures of a public character will be erected. . . .

"The building of the elevated railroad on Columbus Avenue determined the character of that street. Its length is taken up by apartment houses, the ground floors of which are occupied by shops. West End Avenue, it was originally supposed, would become the business street of the West End. But it is now the avenue upon which there are more private houses than any north and south street. . . .

"Riverside Drive is, of course, the most beautiful avenue of the West End. . . . There are not yet a great many residences on the drive. But its future is assured. There are few lots now not held by permanent investors and it will not be many years before there will be a line of palatial houses erected on the west side of the drive. . . .

"There is no boulevard in all the world that compares with Riverside Drive in natural beauty. The nearest approaches to it are the Chiara at Naples, and the boulevard in the new part of Glasgow. But both are insignificant in comparison. . . . The Chiara is nearly on a level with the sea, while the height from which one looks down upon the Hudson from Riverside Drive is one of its greatest charms. The view north from Claremont is as fine as can be found in any city in the world. . . .

"Although so much has already been done to make Riverside Drive and Park beautiful, there are still many projected improvements to be made before it will have reached that finished state which is desired by those who are most interested in securing for the people a charming pleasure ground. . . . It is necessary to complete the retaining wall from Ninety-sixth to One Hundred and Nineteenth Street, so that the improvements that have been made will not be washed down into the river by the rains. . . . It is also proposed to build a viaduct across the depression at Ninety-sixth Street, which will cost $150,000. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Mr 10, 1895.

23 Niblo's Garden, famous as a place of amusement for more than 60 years, finally closes its doors. It is to be demolished immediately and a large office building erected on the site.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 24, 1895. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXVI: 614, and L. M. R. K., III: 985. See D 27, 1894.

24 The property of St. Luke's Hospital (see My 31, 1893), consisting of 32 lots on Fifth Ave. between 54th and 55th Sts., is being sold.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 24, 1895. The new University Club building was erected on the corner (see 1899).

26 The legislature incorporates "the trustees of scenic and historic places and objects," whose object is "to acquire by purchase, gift, grant, devise or bequest, historic objects or memorable or picturesque places in the state." The 54 incorporators include Andrew H. Green, Chas. A. Dana, Chauncey M. Depew, Horace Porter, Wm. Allen Butler, Mornay Williams, George G. Haven, Elbridge T. Gerry, Wm. H. Evarts, Frederick W. Devoe, S. Van Rensselaer Cruger, Frederick J. De Peyster, Morgan Dix, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Henry E. Gregory, and other prominent men. The coporation is required to make an annual report to the legislature.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 166.

The society was suggested by Andrew H. Green, who memorialized the legislature in Jan., 1895. Mornay Williams drafted the bill, and Henry E. Gregory personally enlisted the interest of men who consented to become incorporators. In 1898, the name was changed to the "Society for the Preservation of Scenic and Historic Places and Objects," and in 1901 the field of its operations was extended to any state in the Union, and it became the "Amer-

1895 Mr 26 ican Scenic and Historic Preservation Society."—12th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1907), 14–24.

27 An act is passed authorising the trustees of the College of the City of New York to procure new grounds and erect buildings thereon for the use of the college.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 168. See D 23.

Apr. 2 An act to permit the consolidation of library companies in the city of New York is passed.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 209. See My 23.

7 "Morningside Heights and Washington Heights together form the most attractive part of the city to anybody who is seeking a home that is somewhat suburban in its character. The possibilities of the region are greater, perhaps, than of any other part of the city, but its development depends almost entirely upon the solution of the rapid transit question. . . . [Its rocky ridge above 110th St. is considered.]

"The whole territory is rich in Revolutionary reminiscences, and it was the site of many of the most aristocratic Colonial mansions. . . . The country is marvelously beautiful. On one side is the Hudson River, and on the other the Harlem River. To the north is Spuyten Duyvil Creek, where the new canal is being constructed which will unite the Hudson and the Harlem. The views from the ridge of land between these two streams is far reaching. The Palisades of the Hudson stretch away on the other side of the river far to the north. Across the Harlem may be seen the new parks in the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards, and to the south is the wonderful panorama presented by the closely built city.

"The depression at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, called Manhattan Valley, divides Morningside Heights from Washington Heights, but the characteristics of both are similar, and the development of one will follow the development of the other. . . .

"On Morningside Heights are now being built a number of the most educational, religious, and charitable institutions of the metropolis. They will form a group of buildings that will attract visitors to New-York City from all over the country. These are Columbia College, Teachers' College, the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, St. Luke's Hospital, and several others. . . .

"Riverside Drive forms the most beautiful approach to this wonderful elevation, which has been called the Acropolis of America. . . .

"Washington Heights rises from One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street in a series of natural terraces, and is covered with a luxurious growth of forest trees. The southern portion of Washington Heights has been subdivided into lots, but the northern portion still remains in large tracts, and much of it can never be divided into city lots because of the characteristics of the topography. . . . Through the heart of Washington Heights is a broad boulevard which shows to advantage every desirable residence. It has only lately been opened and is one of the most pleasant drives around New-York City. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Ap 7, 1895.

18 The legislature authorises the appropriation of $1,000,000 to the use of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, to build an "East Wing" (on Fifth Ave.).—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 347. The architect of the new extension was Richard M. Hunt, says Miss Howe in Hist. of the Met. Museum of Art (1913), 276. Richard M. Hunt made sketch plans for the Fifth Ave. building, but he died before the working drawings were made. These were prepared by his son, Richard H. Hunt.

26 The legislature incorporates the New York Zoological Society and authorises the commissioners of the sinking fund to set aside for its use any of the lands belonging to the city north of 155th St. The incorporators include Chas. A. Dana, Andrew H. Green, George G. Haven, Cornelius Van Colt, Wm. F. Havemeyer, Albert H. Gallatin, and Frederick S. Church.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 435.

May 1 The new Macomb's Dam Bridge is formally opened to traffic.—N. Y. Times, My 2, 1895; Rep., Com'r of Bridges (1912), 10–13. It required three years to build the bridge, and its cost was $2,000,000. —Ann. Cyclop. (1895), 548.

" The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by West End Ave., Broadway, and W. 106th St. Here Schuyler Square was developed.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 971.

4 The Washington Memorial Arch (see My 30, 1890) is dedicated. It was constructed from designs by Stanford White.—N. Y. Herald, My 5, 1895. It is a granite structure 77 ft. high and 62 ft. wide, having an arch 47 ft. high with a span of 30 ft., and was erected by the people of New York City.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 136. See also L. M. R. K., III: 965.

9 As a result of the efforts of the tenement-house commission of 1894 (q. v., My 4), the legislature passes a new tenement-house law. The recommendations of the commission for the establishment of two small parks for the lower East Side, the clause requiring a suitable playground in all new public schools, and the recommendations for a system of recreation piers along the river were incorporated in the law.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 567. By 1903, the two parks had been created, as well as five of the recreation piers.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 107. See Ap 4, 1900.

" The rapid transit commission decides upon the routes and the general plan of construction of the proposed subway. The road is to run from Battery Place under Broadway and Union Square to 59th St.; thence along the Boulevard by tunnel or viaduct to 169th St.; thence under Eleventh Ave. to 185th St. The plan also provides for a loop under Battery Park, State, and Whitehall Sts.; a loop under Broadway, Mail St., City Hall Park, Park Row, and Chambers St.; a connection from the latter loop at Park Row to the Broadway line at or near Fulton St.; a branch line which is to diverge from the Broadway line near 14th St. and run along Fourth or Park Ave. by tunnel or viaduct to the Harlem River, which it is to cross by a bridge, and then turn to the left to Walton Ave. and 138th St., and run along Walton Ave. to 146th St.

The commission also adopts an address to the common council submitting the routes for consideration and setting the cost at $50,000,000.—Min. of Rapid Transit Bd., I: 237–75; Ann. Cyclop. (1895), 551. The common council approved the routes, but "the property owners refused their consent, making an application to the Supreme Court necessary. The Court refused its approval upon the ground that the city, owing to a provision of the constitution of the State limiting the city's power to incur debt, would be unable to raise the necessary money." It also contended that it would be too expensive to go under Broadway.—Interborough Rapid Transit (The Subway) in N. Y. (pub. by I. R. T. Co., 1904), 18, 24. See Ja, 1897.

10 The "General Removal Act," abolishing the office of police justice (thereby expelling from office the Tammany police justices, who were held largely responsible for the corruption that had prevailed), and creating a bench of nine city magistrates becomes law. —Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 601.

11 The legislature designates Lincoln's birthday as a "public holiday."—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 603.

15 The Asbury M. E. Church (see Je 7, 1893), at the south-east corner of Washington Square and Washington Place (formerly the Washington Square Reformed Dutch Church), is sold to the firm of Boehm & Coon, who intend to demolish the church immediately and to erect a seven-storey warehouse on the site. The purchase price is reported as high as $300,000.—N. Y. Tribune, My 17, 1895. See also L. M. R. K., III: 936, and descrip. of Pl. 139, III: 708.

20 The income tax law passed by congress in 1894 is declared unconstitutional by the supreme court. The World characterized the decision as "the triumph of selfishness over patriotism . . . another victory of greed over need. . . . The people at large will bow to this decision as they habitually do to all the decrees of their highest courts. But they will not accept law as justice." The Tribune said: "Thanks to the court, our government is not to be dragged into communistic warfare against rights of property."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 174–75.

23 After much negotiation, the trustees of the Astor Library, the Lenox Library, and the Tilden Trust, sign an agreement to consolidate their several library corporations under the name "The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations."—Lydenberg, Hist. of N. Y. Pub. Library, 301–48.

27 The legislature directs the construction of a permanent suspension bridge over the East River from the foot of Broadway or thereabouts in Brooklyn to the foot of Grand St. or thereabouts in New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), 789; ibid. (1896), chap. 612; ibid. (1897), 421. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXIX: 52; XL: 968, 982. This was the Williamsburg Bridge. It was opened on Dec. 19, 1903 (q. v.).

29 The election law is amended in an important particular. The 1895 May 29 partisan ballot with its "paster" possibilities is displaced by act of the legislature, and there is now to be provided "one form of ballot for all the candidates for public office and every ballot shall contain the names of all the candidates . . . together with the title of the office, arranged in tickets or lists under the respective party or political or other designation certified." Precedence in the lists is to be given "to the party which polled the highest number of votes for the head of the ticket in the next preceding general election." —Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 810.

31 The bureau in the law department, the chief officer of which is the public administrator, is removed from that department by act of legislature and is continued as an independent bureau. The power to appoint and remove the public administrator is vested in the county surrogate.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 827.

June — In this month, Lord Roseberry resigned, and Lord Salisbury became prime minister for the third time. His administration lasted until 1902.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 511.

5 The department of public charities and correction is abolished, and in its place two separate departments are created, the department of public charities and the department of correction.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 912. The department of charities took over the records of Bellevue Hospital.—An Account of Bellevue Hospital (1893).

6 The legislature passes a law "to annex to the city and county of New York territory lying within the incorporated villages of Wakefield, Eastchester and Williamsbridge, the town of Westchester and portions of the towns of Eastchester and Pelham."—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 934. See also Ann. Cyclop. (1895), 551. In 1897, Robinson & Co., of New York, published certified copies of maps of the annexed districts, filed in the register's office at White Plains, Westchester Co.

11 The commissioners of the department of public parks are authorised to erect a drawbridge over the Harlem River from 145th St. Manhattan to 149th St., Bronx.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 986. The bridge was opened on Aug. 24, 1905 (q. v.).

14 The N. Y. and Brooklyn Tunnel Co. is empowered to construct a single or double tunnel under the East River from some point in Manhattan between 16th and Whitehall Sts. to some point in Brooklyn between 8th St. and Atlantic Ave.—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 1014.

15 The "Temperance Education Bill," so called, becomes a law of the state. It provides that "the nature of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics and their effects on the human system shall be taught in connection with the various divisions of physiology and hygiene as thoroughly as are other branches for not less than four lessons a week for ten or more weeks in each year in all grades below the second year of the high school."—Laws of N. Y. (1895), chap. 1041.

17 The Harlem Ship Canal is opened by a procession of vessels.—N. Y. Herald, Je 18, 1895. Gen. John Newton planned the canal, for which congress ordered the government survey in 1874. In constructing it, 550,000 tons of rock were removed, 162,000 cubic yards of earth excavated, 1,000,000 cubic yards of earth dredged, and 5,000 cubic yards of retaining walls built. The plan called for a channel 400 ft. wide and 15 ft. deep at low tide. It was estimated that $1,750,000 would be required to complete the work.—See also view and account in Harper's Weekly, XXXIX: 603, 605. A map of the canal, without date, is filed as map No. 43 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office. The canal is shown on Pls. 157-b and 180, Vol. III.

Aug. 5 The board of aldermen adopts an "aldermanic flag." It is to be white with the city seal on it in blue surrounded by 30 red stars, one for each aldermanic district.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 15, 1895.

12 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the 17 acres of land at Hudson and Clarkson Sts., comprising Trinity Parish Cemetery.—L. M. R. K., III: 970. Hudson Park was opened here in 1898 (q. v.). See also Ap 17, 1896.

23 A contract is let by the aqueduct commissioners for the construction of the Jerome Park reservoir, a new receiving reservoir for the Croton water supply, to be fed by both the old and new aqueducts.—Wegmann, op. cit., 209.

Oct. 2 The board of aldermen empowers a committee of five citizens appointed by Mayor Strong "to make translations of and print such of the records contained in the City Library, located in room number twelve in the City Hall, as they may desire."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1895), CCXX: 170. On Dec. 31, the board of estimate and apportionment appropriated $7,000 for this purpose, and, under the editorship of Berthold Fernow, the seven volumes were published in 1897 (q. v.), entitled Records of New Amsterdam, to which many references are made in the Chronology during the years 1653–1674.—Rec. N. Am., I, Introd. v–vii. For earlier efforts to translate and publish these records, see Ag 2, 1837; Ja 2, 1848; Ja 23, 1873.

Oct. 2 The new buildings of New York University on University Heights (see Ap 18, 1894) are officially dedicated. McKim, Mead & White were the architects.—N. Y. Herald, O 20, 1895. See also Harper's Weekly, XXXIX: 365, 378. For a brief later history of the university, see N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911.

19 A fire at Broadway and Bleecker St. destroys $1,000,000 worth of property, including the Manhattan Savings Institution and the Empire State Bank buildings. The old Bank for Savings building at 67 Bleecker St. is injured.—N. Y. Herald, N 6, 1895.

Nov. 5 Hammerstein's Olympia Music Hall, occupying the block front on the east side of Broadway between 44th and 45th Sts., is opened.—N. Y. Herald, N 24 and 26, 1895; Harrison, Hist. of the City of N. Y., 854. See D 8. In 1899, the name was changed to the New York Theatre.—N. Y. Times, Ap 25, 1899.

25 The corner-stone of the Columbia University library, the first Columbia building erected on Morningside Heights, is laid by Pres. Low. The library was designed by McKim, Mead & White, who had been appointed the architects of the university.—N. Y. Herald, D 8, 1895; Hist. of Columbia Univ., 162. See also views in Harper's Weekly, XXXVIII: 1032, 1040; and L. M. R. K., III: 940. The library stands on the site of the main building of the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane.—A Psychiatric Milestone; Bloomingdale Asylum Centenary, 1821–1921, 12. See O 1, 1894, and My 2, 1896.

Dec. 7 Yvette Guilbert arrives at New York for her first American engagement.—N. Y. Herald, D 9, 1895. She appeared first on Dec. 16, at Hammerstein's Olympia Music Hall.—Ibid., D 17, 1895.

8 A police "Bicycle Squad" is organized, "for the better protection of pedestrians against careless bicycle riders."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXXV: 280.

12 The Anti-Saloon League, as a nation-wide institution, is organized at Washington, D. C.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 16.

18 The 100th anniversary of the Jay treaty, the "Centennial of Commercial Liberty," is commemorated by distinguished New Yorkers at Delmonico's.—N. Y. Herald, D 20, 1895.

19 The city begins to acquire title to the land on Amsterdam Ave., between 138th and 141st Sts., where the new College of the City of N. Y. is to be built. Down to 1907, there were 12 grants and 6 condemnation proceedings for this purpose. The total cost of the land was about $1,240,000.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 148–49, citing Libers of Conveyances.

23 The "Court of Oyer and Terminer and of Goal Delivery" finally goes out of existence. It is to be succeeded by "Part I, Trial Term, of the Supreme Court, for the Trial of Indictments."—N. Y. Herald, D 31, 1895.

— In this year, Guglielmo Marconi went to England and took out his first patent for wireless telegraphy.—Gibson & Cole, Wireless of To-day, 72–73, 275.

— In this year, rural free delivery was inaugurated.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 401.

— "In American political history, 1896 was a dividing point. It marked the climax and the ending of radicalism arising out of issues associated with currency. For a few years after 1896 there was no political discontent to speak of. It largely evaporated under the warming influence of generous emotions aroused by watching Cuba's struggle for freedom, the still warmer feelings that attended our taking part in that struggle, and the exaltation that accompanied our brief adventure in territorial annexation. It was assuaged by larger supplies of gold from the mines of the world, rising wages and prices, and the accelerated activity of business that came with the war."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 291.

— In this year, John S. Kennedy presented to the N. Y. Pub. Library the Thos. Addis Emmet collection of manuscripts, consisting of about 10,800 items, including one or more autographs of almost every man of distinction in American affairs during the Revolution, as well as a large number of earlier colonial documents, and letters of more recent date. With the exception of 2,500 unbound pieces, they are bound in 94 volumes. In 1900, the library published a calendar of the collection.

1896 — In this year, through the efforts of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the City and Suburban Homes Co. was organized, "with a capital of $1,000,000 for the purpose of building model tenement houses in New York as a business investment." A competition for the best tenement-house plan was held, and an excellent type of building, on a lot 100 x 100, designed by Ernest Flagg, was finally chosen. Under the leadership of Dr. E. R. L. Gould, the tenements were erected at Nos. 217–23 W. 68th St. and Nos. 214–220 W. 69th St. In 1902, a second group of buildings similar to the first were erected on First Ave. at 64th and 65th Sts. —De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 107–9.

— During this year, 223 telegraph-poles were removed from the city's streets with 1,635 miles of wire. The total number of removals since the creation of the board of electrical control in 1887 is 20,377 poles and 29,802 miles of wire. This was accomplished without expense to the city.—Message of Mayor Strong, Ja 12, 1897, p. 48.

— In this year, the St. Paul building was erected, from designs by Geo. B. Post, on the south-east corner of Broadway and Ann St., the site long occupied by Barnum's Museum and later by the Herald building.—Liber Deeds, DCDXL: 608, Sec. 1; XXIX: 90, Sec. 1; L. M. R. K., III: 982. See also descrips. of Pl. 158-a, III: 841, and Pl. 163, III: 846.

— In this year, roof playgrounds for school children were introduced. The first was at Grammar School 75, in Norfolk St.—Palmer, The N. Y. Pub. School, 191–92.

— In this year, a bronze statue of Abraham De Peyster, by George E. Bissell, was presented to the city by John Watts de Peyster and erected in Bowling Green.—Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 106.

— The Peter Goelet mansion, on the north-east corner of Broadway and 19th St., stood, surrounded by trees and flowers, until this year.—Descrip. of Pl. 136, III: 705.

— In this year was published a History of the City of New York: Externals of Modern New York, by Mrs. Burton Harrison. Illustrated. Being Chapter XXI, Volume II, of Mrs. Martha J. Lamb's History of the City of New York (see 1877).

Jan. 1 — The "Court of Common Pleas," in existence for nearly two centuries and a half, is to go out of existence on this day.—N. Y. Herald, D 31, 1895. This court was organized in 1653 as the "Court of Burgomasters and Schepens," later became known as the "Mayor's Court," and finally was called the "Court of Common Pleas." By the state constitution adopted in 1894, it was merged in the "Supreme Court," and when it ceased to exist, it was "the oldest judicial tribunal in the State of New York, the oldest with an unbroken record in the United States."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 330–31.

7 — Mayor Strong sends his second annual message to the common council, saying in part: The city debt has increased $5,806,688.64.

"Persistent criticism of the police, charging corruption and failure to impartially enforce the laws, has been carried on in this city for a number of years, and culminated in the official investigation and the disclosures of the Lexow Committee.

"The evidence thereby adduced disclosed the giving and taking of bribes for preferment in the force itself, the enforcement or non-enforcement of the laws according to the social or political standing of those affected thereby, the oppression of the poor for inability to pay for privileges, and the withholding from others, who could mete out an equivalent in money or influence, rights without such consideration. By whatever course of events such abuses arose, the fact remains that on the 1st of January, 1895, the police were discredited in the eyes of our citizens and sister cities, a belief in their integrity wanting, and public confidence lacking in either their ability or willingness to impartially enforce the law.

"The effort of the Police Commissioners during the past year has been to restore discipline in the force itself, and to assure to every member thereof that preferment could be predicated alone upon proper conduct and then to enforce the laws as they are found upon the statute books. I believe that within the limits of another year the discipline of the force will have been raised to a grade higher than it has been for a quarter of a century, and that law-abiding citizens will respect the enforcement of the law as fully as breakers of the law will fear it. . . .

"Personally I do not believe that the enforcement of our Excise laws will ever fail to breed more or less discontent until the question of the Sunday opening of the saloons is established by a vote of the people themselves. . . . And in the consideration of this subject I am frank to say that it is a question upon which people honestly and intelligently differ. Within the last half century the character of our population has rapidly and radically changed. There is a varied large element among us to whom the use of certain beverages means, not dissipation, but proper indulgence. And there are those again with whom such use would not amount to an abuse, and who certainly have a right to have their desires passed upon at a general election where a concensus of the opinion of our entire community may be taken. . . .

Jan. 7 — "To the introduction of diphtheria anti-toxine, its production by the Board of Health, and its use in this city during the past year, may be attributed the decrease in the mortality from that disease. . . .

"One of the most fruitful results of purely political methods and subserviency of public interest to other considerations was found in the care of the public streets. . . . Within the current year there has been a radical change, not only in the methods of administration, but in the actual results obtained. From the streets have been removed the trucks, to the number of about 60,000, and sufficient room has been discovered for their housing despite the charge maintained during a number of years that this result was impossible of accomplishment. The streets have been made and are kept clean, the public health has been improved, and the decrease in the mortality rate has been greater during the year 1895 than it was in the last ten years by about two per cent. per thousand. . . .

"There are now in the subways 108¼ miles of cables, aggregating 964 miles of conductors; 26¼ miles of underground subsidiary ducts have been constructed. . . . It is important that the work of putting electrical conductors underground should be continued, together with the finishing of the larger part of the uncompleted portion of the city south of One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street. . . ."

Titicus Dam, near Purdy's Station, and the two Carmel Dams have been finished, and the work remaining to be done by the aqueduct commissioners "consists mainly of the new Croton Dam and Reservoir and the Jerome Park Reservoir."

"The school system of New York is at once its pride and safety. More than upon statute, ordinance or police regulation must we rely upon the intelligence of our citizens to promote the public welfare. At this chief point of entry for immigration, with almost every nationality represented among our citizens, with more papers published in foreign language than in any city in the United States, the first and most jealous care should be given to our school system.

"There are under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education three hundred and thirty one schools and departments—two hundred and fifty-four Grammar and Primary, twenty-seven Evening, four Evening High, one Nautical and forty-five Corporate. . . .

"During the present year women have been appointed as Inspectors of Public Schools, and in each of the school districts two of the three Inspectors are now women. There has also been a woman chosen as a Trustee. The results of these innovations have been most flattering, and it is proper to remark that the fidelity and care with which the women so chosen have followed out their official duties are worthy of the highest emulation. . . ."

The city now has a park area of 5,185¼ acres.

"The need of enlargement of the areas of cities for the accommodation of increased population and for improvement in their administration, in connection with the lesser communities that constitute suburban areas, is apparent in the old world as well as in the new. The subject of uniting various municipalities about this Port has already received the approval of a very large majority of the electors of the areas concerned.

"At its last session the Legislature carried out a part of the scheme of the Commission which has long been at work on this subject by the union with this city of one town and portions of two other towns of Westchester County; and it is not improbable that the question of annexation of other areas will come up for action in the present Legislature."—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXXI: 3–24.

"The Greater New-York bill, to be introduced in the Senate by Mr. Lexow immediately on the resumption of the session, is that recommended by the Consolidation Commission a year ago with some slight modifications. As the town of Flatlands has now

1896 Jan. 7 become a part of Brooklyn, and Kings County has been merged in that city, and as the part of Westchester County to be included in the consolidation has already been annexed to the City and County of New York, there is no longer any occasion for mentioning them in the title of the bill. . . .

"One of the principal changes in the bill is that . . . which . . . declares the consolidation to take effect Jan. 1, 1898. This will obviate all question of disturbing existing terms of office. . . .

"The only other change of importance in the bill as offered by the commission in their report last year consists in striking out the words which would add the Mayors of New York and Brooklyn to the commission. This leaves to the commission as it now stands the task of preparing the measures by which consolidation is to be effected. The propriety of this can hardly be questioned, for this commission has been studying the subject for five years, and its knowledge and experience are valuable if not indispensable. Besides, it is an independent body, which will not be suspected of partisan designs, . . ."—N. Y. Times, Ja 7, 1896. See also ibid., Ja 23, F 5, and Mr 29, 1896. See Ap 14.

Feb. 3 The trustees of Columbia pass the following resolution: "Resolved, That in all official publications hereafter issued by or under authority of the trustees, all the departments of instruction and research maintained and managed by this corporation may, for convenience, be designated collectively as 'Columbia University,' and the School of Arts, as the same is now known and described, may hereafter be designated as 'Columbia College' or 'The College'."—*N. 23 The Raines Excise Law is passed by the legislature. It abolishes all boards of excise in the state, and substitutes therefor a state commissioner of excise, who, with the aid of a deputy state commissioner, secretary, clerks, special agents, and attorneys, is to have charge of all matters relating to licenses, collection of liquor taxes, etc. The law also directs the appointment of a special deputy commission in each county which contains a city of the first class (New York, Kings, and Erie Counties), imposes four grades of taxes on liquor business, provides for local option, designates where and to whom liquor may not be sold, and imposes penalties for violations of the law.—Laws of N. Y. (1896), chap. 112. The law was amended on April 20, 1897.—Ibid. (1897), chap. 312. See also Raines Excise Law and the Greater N. Y. Bill (pub. by Bklyn. Daily Eagle, 1896).

25 The trustees of the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox, and Tilden Foundations, present an address to Mayor Strong reviewing the need of a great public library system in New York City, and suggesting the following plan: "If the City of New York will furnish a proper site, and provide the means to erect thereon a suitable building for the purposes of the New York Public Library, excluding for the present the requirements of branch libraries or delivery stations other than those now controlled by the Free Circulating Library, then the New York Public Library can, through the sale of its present sites, obtain such an addition to its funds as will justify it in providing for the circulation of books from its main building. If further funds can be supplied from private benefaction or otherwise, sufficient to establish and maintain an adequate number of branches for circulation, it is certain that the City of New York can and will have a free Public Library on the broadest and most comprehensive plan. . . .

"Should the suggestions of the Trustees be favorably received, no site within the control of the City could accomplish the ends in view as well as that of the Reservoir upon Fifth Avenue, between Fortieth and Forty-second Streets. Mar. 25

"The site is an ideal one for such a building. It is to-day the most central and easily accessible spot on the Island and will be rendered even more so by new means of communication. Within a single block are two lines of surface cars and two elevated railroads, running north and south. The Forty-second Street surface road intersects all the chief thoroughfares that connect the upper with the lower part of the City. Less than three hundred yards away is the common terminus of the three principal railroads running into the city. And not only does this site command these incomparable advantages at the present time, but it is impossible to foresee a time when it cannot retain a like superiority. At no point further north can any similar convergence of public modes of travel ever be anticipated.

"On this site it will be possible to erect a library building, dignified, ample in size, visible from all sides, with uninterrupted light, free from all danger of fire, in no respect encroaching upon the existing Bryant Park, and which will be an ornament to the City. The Park area would indeed be increased by substituting a library building for the Reservoir. The Reservoir measures 455 feet by 420. A library building 350 feet by 300 would offer all the accommodations which the most sanguine would probably think it wise at present to provide; and even this would leave a margin of more than 100 feet on the avenue and more than 50 feet on each side street, to be laid out with grass and shrubbery. The City would then have no quarter more inviting. The library would in effect bring the Park to Fifth Avenue; while reciprocally the Park would add enormously to the attractiveness, security and usefulness of the library."—Lydenberg, Hist. of N. Y. Pub. Library, 352–62. See My 19 and D 26.

"Mayor Strong has vetoed the Greater New-York bill. . . . Apr. 14

"Mayor Strong's veto was contained in a document of about 1,000 words, in which New-York City's Chief Executive labored hard to make it emphatic that he favors consolidation, but not according to the terms of the bill in question. He favors the appointment of a commission to prepare a charter for the greater city, which shall be adopted by the legislature before the various municipalities are declared to be one city."—N. Y. Times, Ap 14, 1896. The bill was passed over the mayor's veto by the legislature on May 11 (q. v.).

"Thomas A. Edison and Albert Bial have perfected arrangements by which Edison's latest invention, the vitascope, will be exhibited for the first time anywhere at Koster & Bial's Music Hall. Edison has been at work on the vitascope for several years. "

"The vitascope projects upon a large area of canvas groups that appear to stand forth from the canvas, and move with great facility and agility, as though actuated by separate impulses. In this way the bare canvas before the audience becomes instantly a stage upon which living beings move about.

"Mr. Bial said yesterday: 'I propose to reproduce in this way at Koster & Bial's scenes from various successful plays and operas of the season, and well-known statesmen and celebrities will be represented, as, for instance, making a speech or performing some important act or series of acts with which their names are identified. No other manager in this city will have the right to exhibit the vitascope.'"—N. Y. Times, Ap 14, 1896. See Ap 23.

Koster & Bial's, where this first public moving-picture show was held in New York, was a concert-hall, vaudeville theatre, and beer-garden, at 115 W. 23d St., on the north side of the street, west of Sixth Ave.—King's Handbook (1893), 605.

The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land at the north-east corner of Madison Ave. and 25th St. On this, the court-house of the appellate division of the N. Y. supreme court was afterwards built (see D 20, 1899).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 131. 16

The action of the board of street opening and improvement in laying out St. John's (or Hudson) Park, on the east side of Hudson St. between Clarkson and Leroy Sts. (see Ag 12, 1895), is ratified by the legislature, and the land is declared a public park.—Laws of N. Y. (1896), chap. 295. It was opened in 1898 (q. v.).—L. M. R. K., III: 970. 17

Edison's vitascope (see Ap 14) is exhibited for the first time, at Koster & Bial's. Commenting on it, a newspaper says: "The ingenious inventor's latest toy is a projection of his kinetoscope 23

1896 Apr. 23 figures, in stereoptican fashion, upon a white screen in a darkened hall. In the centre of the balcony of the big music hall is a curious object, which looks from below like the double turret of a big monitor. In the front of each half of it are two oblong holes. The turret is neatly covered with the blue velvet brocade which is the favorite decorative material in this house. The white screen used on the stage is framed like a picture. The moving figures are about half life size.

"When the hall was darkened last night [April 23] a buzzing and roaring were heard in the turret, and an unusually bright light fell upon the screen. Then came into view two precious blonde young persons of the variety stage, in pink and blue dresses, doing the umbrella dance with commendable celerity. Their motions were all clearly defined. When they vanished, a view of an angry surf breaking on a sandy beach near a stone pier amazed the spectators. The waves tumbled in furiously and the foam of the breakers flew high in the air. A burlesque boxing match between a tall, thin comedian and a short, fat one, a comic allegory called 'The Monroe Doctrine;' an instant of motion in Hoyt's farce, 'A Milk White Flag,' repeated over and over again, and a skirt dance by a tall blonde completed the views, which were all wonderfully real and singularly exhilarating. For the spectator's imagination filled the atmosphere with electricity, as sparks crackled around the swiftly moving, lifelike figures.

"So enthusiastic was the appreciation of the crowd long before this extraordinary exhibition was finished that vociferous cheering was heard. There were loud calls for Mr. Edison, but he made no response."—N. Y. Times, Ap 24, 1896. See also ibid., Ap 26, 1896.

27 The legislature passes "An Act in relation to the common schools and public education in the city of New York." This provides that all public schools in the city shall be under the control of a board of education, consisting of 21 school commissioners appointed by the mayor, and that this board shall have power to appoint a city superintendent of schools, a superintendent of school buildings, assistant superintendents of schools, principals, teachers, clerks, and other officers. The board is also authorised to divide the city into at least 15 inspection districts, in each of which the mayor is to appoint five inspectors. It is to have power to establish and erect new schools, to discontinue or alter and repair old schools, to consolidate schools, to acquire sites for new buildings, etc. One or more high schools may also be maintained. All school trustees are abolished, and a board of superintendents is created, composed of the city superintendent and the assistant superintendents, whose duty it shall be to recommend changes in the course of study, to nominate principals and teachers, to examine candidates for the offices of principals and teachers, and to report on school matters in general.—Laws of N. Y. (1896), chap. 387.

May 2 Columbia formally dedicates its new site on Morningside Heights (see O 1, 1894, and D 7, 1895), and the event marks "the transition of Columbia from a college into a well equipped university." 11 An act consolidating the local governments of territory within the city and county of New York, the counties of Kings and Richmond, Long Island City, and the towns of Newtown, Flushing, and Jamaica, together with a part of the town of Hempstead, usually known as the "Greater New York Bill," is passed by the legislature over the vetoes of the mayors of New York and Brooklyn. This bill provides that the governor shall appoint a commission to report a charter for the enlarged city by Feb. 1, 1897.—Laws of N. Y. (1896), chap. 488; Ash, N. Y. City Charter (1897), cviii–cix. See also N. Y. Sun, My 11, 1920. See Je 9.

19 An act is passed providing that whenever the land on Fifth Ave. between 40th and 42d Sts.. at present occupied by the reservoir, shall be made a public park and the reservoir removed, the department of parks may, if it sees fit, "enter into a contract with the New York public library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden foundations, . . . for the use and occupation of said land . . . by the said corporation and its successors for establishing and maintaining thereon a free public library and reading-room."—*Laws of N. June 9 Gov. Morton, who was authorised by the act of May 11 (q. v.) to appoint a commission to report a charter for Greater New York by Feb. 1, 1897, names the following members: Seth Low, Benjamin F. Tracy, John F. Dillon, and Ashbel P. Fitch, for New York; Stewart L. Woodford, Silas B. Dutcher, and Wm. C. De Witt, for Brooklyn; George M. Pinney, Jr., for Richmond Co.; and Garret J. Garretson, for Queens Co. Fitch resigned, and Thos. F. Gilroy, former mayor, was appointed in his place. By the terms of the act the following gentlemen were also on the commission: Andrew H. Green, president of the former commission; Campbell W. Adams, state engineer; Theodore E. Hancock, attorney-general; Wm. L. Strong, mayor of New York; Frederick W. Wurster, mayor of Brooklyn; and Patrick Jerome Gleason, mayor of Long Island City.—N. Y. Tribune, Je 10, 1896; Ash, N. Y. City Charter (1897), cxi.

The commission organized on June 25 in Mayor Strong's office, appointed Benjamin F. Tracy as president and George M. Pinney, Jr., as secretary, and named Wm. C. De Witt, John F. Dillon, Thos. F. Gilroy, Seth Low, Andrew H. Green, Benjamin F. Tracy, and George M. Pinney, Jr., as a committee to draft the proposed charter.—N. Y. Times, Je 26, 1896; Ash, op. cit., cxi.

Writing in 1897, James W. Pryor thus commented on the drafting of the charter: "Probably never before was an attempt made to formulate within so short a time a piece of legislation so difficult and complicated as this charter. From the time of the passing of the law creating the commission the opinion has been freely expressed by men conversant with legislation relating to municipal government that within the time allowed, no body of men could do the work with thoroughness at all commensurate with the importance of the subject. The commission had about eight months, but its continuous work did not extend over much more than half of that time. The commission was appointed on the ninth of June, 1896, under a law requiring it to make a final report by the first of February, 1897. In the early summer it met a few times, and adopted certain general propositions, but no comprehensive plan or framework was formulated. During the summer one member of the commission [Wm. C. De Witt] prepared with great industry the draft of a charter. This was reported to the commission's committee on draft on the twenty-first of September. After that date the committee met from time to time, and at length, on the ninth of December, reported to the commission a complete draft essentially different from the draft made during the summer.

"The first eight chapters of this draft were made public by the commission on the twenty-fourth of December, with the announcement that public hearings would begin on the second of January, and would continue for two weeks. During these two weeks additional chapters were given out from time to time, as they were completed; but two or three important chapters were not made public until after the hearings, and the supplemental bills were given out only when the final form of the charter was sent to the legislature and published. Toward the end of its term the commission perceived that it could not complete the draft without much assistance. Accordingly, several lawyers were employed to draw some of the chapters, and some of these lawyers were at work while the public hearings were in progress. After the hearings, the commission found that it would be unable to report the final draft by the first of February, and an extension of time until the twentieth of February was secured from the legislature.

"Undoubtedly the commission consulted a number of people, but it may be said that the work was practically carried on in 1896 June 9 secret, the public having no information as to its progress, or as to the process by which the commission was arriving at its conclusions upon the many points of public interest involved. Inspection of the dates given above will show that it was impossible for those who were interested to prepare themselves to discuss the draft intelligently at the hearings. It could only be properly considered as a whole and after careful examination. But insufficient time was given for the examination even of the chapters published on the twenty-fourth of December, and the charter as a whole was not before the public until after the termination of the hearings. It was not the policy of the commission to distribute copies of the draft freely, and only a comparatively small number of copies were printed. The final draft did not become accessible to the public generally until the latter part of February, when it was published by one of the Brooklyn daily papers. . . ."—*Annals of Am. 12 Wm. Jennings Bryan is formally notified of his nomination for the presidency, at a meeting at Madison Square Garden, at which about 10,000 people are present. Commenting on the occasion, a newspaper says: "Instead of a demonstration of enthusiasm which had been counted on by his managers to fire the East for him, the meeting was a frost. The orator who nominated himself for the Presidency by his speech before the Chicago Convention could not hold the crowd and before he had been talking five minutes people began to leave the Garden. When he ended his speech more than one-half of those who had heard his opening sentence had fled, and the boy orator was left reading his speech to empty galleries."—N. Y. Times, Ag 13, 1896.

28 Li Hung Chang, Chinese viceroy, "the greatest foreigner and the most powerful ruler that has ever visited the United States," arrives at New York on board the "St. Louis." He was welcomed down the bay by representatives of the national government, and escorted from the American Line pier to the Waldorf by a detachment of U. S. cavalry.—N. Y. Times, Ag 29, 1896. On Aug. 29, he was received by Pres. Cleveland at the house of ex-Secretary Whitney, 2 W. 57th St.; Mayor Strong and others called upon him at the Waldorf; and the former members of the American diplomatic and consular service in China held a banquet in his honour.—Ibid., Ag 30, 1896. On Aug. 30, the viceroy visited Gen. Grant's tomb and called upon Mrs. Grant, who had come from Lake George to greet him.—Ibid., Ag 31, 1896. 1897

— In this year, the seven volumes entitled Records of New Amsterdam were published by the city. They were an English translation, edited by Berthold Fernow, of the earliest Dutch records that have been preserved relating to New York. The publication was authorised in 1895 (q.v., O 2).

— In this year, New Amsterdam New Orange New York, by Wm. Loring Andrews, was published. It is a chronologically arranged account of engraved views of the city from 1651 to 1800.

— As late as this year, there was still an ordinance in force relating to the disposal of swine found at large in New York.—City Ordinances (1897), 121–22.

— In this year, the name of the United Service Club (see Ja 29, 1889) was changed to the Army and Navy Club. In Jan., 1906, it began to erect a club-house at 107–109 W. 43d St., which was opened March 4, 1908.—N. Y. Eve. Telegram, My 10, 1913.

— In this year, a truant school "for the detention of children habitually absenting themselves from school" was established in East 21st St.—Palmer, The N. Y. Pub. School, 194.

— During this year, five new piers from 700 to 750 feet long with slips 250 feet wide, lying between the foot of Charles St. and of Gansevoort St., were under construction. Plans were adopted for seven new piers between Bloomfield St. and West 23d St., as well as for two other piers flanking the ferry slips opposite West 13th St., and one pier on the northerly side of Bloomfield St.—Ann. Cyclop. (1897), 564. Cf. Mr 23, 1893.

— Between 1897 and 1909, Catherine Market, which was rebuilt with iron front in 1854 (see Proc., App'd by Mayor, XXI: 588;

19 Mayor Strong sends a message to the board of aldermen on the subjects of the board of education, the department of health, and the City Record. Regarding the first, he says: "The past year has been fruitful of more discussion regarding the school system in this city than any previous year in our history. Not only has there been a radical change in the school law, but the question of adequate accommodations for school children and the ability of the city to meet the requirements of an increasing population have been productive of much discussion in the public prints and by the citizens generally. It is a fact that for a number of years there has not been a sufficient and proper school accommodation in this city. It is a fact that there is not now such an accommodation as the standing of New York City and the character of its population demands." There are now nine schools in course of construction or recently completed, contracts have been let for three more schools and two additional are under consideration, plans for seven are nearing completion in the draughting department, ten sites for new buildings and seventeen for additions have been acquired during 1896, 28 sites are being acquired by condemnation proceedings, and 13 have been approved by the board of education and will be acquired in the near future. There are now 295,883 pupils enrolled in the public schools, nearly 70,000 in the Catholic schools, and over 30,000 in private schools.

The work of the health department during the past year has been "unusually important," and the death rate has been brought down to 21.54 per 1,000, the lowest in the history of the city. There are 42,542 tenement-houses, and the semi-annual inspections have affected a "marked improvement in their sanitary condition." Also, "Measures have been inaugurated during the past year for the systematic examination of all milch cows within the city limits, with special reference to animals suffering from tuberculosis.

"I understand it to be a fact that tuberculosis in cattle is the same disease so fatal in mankind, and that the milk from such diseased animals is frequently the cause of this disease in those who consume it. The importance of an early diagnosis of this disease in milch cows and the prompt destruction of diseased animals is obvious. Of the 2,700 milch cows within the city limits, 1,139 have been carefully examined the past few months and the 'tuberculin test' applied. Of this number 186 were found to be diseased and were slaughtered, and the autopsy in each case confirmed the diagnosis. A detailed experimental investigation has been made during the past year in the bacteriological laboratory of the Board of Health into all the methods employed in various parts of the world for the production and preservation of vaccine virus, with satisfactory results. The vaccine virus now produced by the Board of Health is believed to be unexcelled by any in the world in potency, in lasting qualities and in freedom from bacteria."

The methods of conducting the City Record have been so improved that all debts relating to it have been liquidated.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXXV: 109–20.

20 The Bellevue Hospital Medical College, erected in 1865 in East 26th St., is almost wholly destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ja 21, 1897. This led to the consolidation on May 19, 1898, of the Bellevue college with the Medical College of N. Y. U. under the name of the University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College. This college now has four buildings opposite Bellevue Hospital: the "College Building," erected by the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1897 and transferred to the university at the time of the consolidation; the Carnegie laboratory, the gift of Mr. Carnegie in 1885; the new laboratory building, built by the university in 1903; and the Carnegie laboratory extension, another gift of Mr. Carnegie, dedicated in the autumn of 1910.— Jan. 20
N. Y. U. Bull., Je 30, 1911.

"Plans are now being considered looking toward an enlargement and general rearrangement of the interior of the Grand Central Station. The increase in the business of the roads using the station, it was said yesterday, makes the changes imperative. 22

"Now each road has a separate waiting room and ticket office. The offices of the various officials are cramped, and some of them have been forced to move to neighboring buildings.

"The changes under consideration are said to be the addition of two stories and the combining of the ticket offices and waiting rooms."—N. Y. Times, Ja 22, 1897. See Ag 25.

Mayor Strong writes to the board of aldermen regarding the 26 departments of charity and correction and the bureau of licenses, saying in part: "In a city the size of New York the charitable institutions should form a model for the entire country. It is not too much to say that a city can well be judged for its advancement materially and socially according to the degree of care given to its poor and unfortunate. It is not necessary that the city's charitable institutions should furnish luxurious accommodations or entail a profligate expenditure of money. It is desirable that hospitals should be able to take care of the city's indigent sick and furnish medical treatment and accommodations consistent with the most advanced science and the greatest progress in municipal affairs. Much has been done during the past two years to place the institutions referred to on a plane consistent with the standing of this city before the world."

The institutions under the department of corrections include the city prison, the district prisons, the workhouse, and the penitentiary, and they have at present 3,984 inmates. "Appreciating the benefits of fresh air and the advantages afforded by out-door work, experiment has been made in placing under cultivation many acres of heretofore uncultivated land on Blackwell's Island, affording at the same time employment for the prisoners and increasing the supply of fresh vegetables for their dietary. . . . Vegetables to the value of over $3,000 were raised and employment furnished to a number of the prisoners."

In 1896, there were 29,008 licenses issued, and the fees received therefrom amounted to $154,943.25, a large increase over 1895.—Proc., Bd. of Ald., CCXXV: 171–79.

The Times prints a "Round Table" page in which prominent Feb. 6
citizens give expression to their views concerning the proposed bicameral "Municipal Assembly" which the charter commission proposes to write into the Greater New York Charter (see My 4). The expressions are generally adverse.—N. Y. Times, F 6, 1897. During this entire month the editorial columns of the Times are replete with comment on the charter, generally adverse.

A "much-heralded fancy dress ball given by Mr. and Mrs. 10
Bradley Martin" takes place at the Waldorf. About 700 guests are present, including most of the people prominent in New York society, and all are attired in beautiful and elaborate costumes of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries. The grand ball-room of the hotel is "a scene of splendor."—N. Y. Times, F 11, 1897. On Feb. 14, a newspaper said: "It will be many a day before the echoes of the great Martin costume ball die away. . . .

"The guests are not yet weary of rehearsing to each other and their friends the incidents of the night and the beauties of the scene. The effect, in particular, of the room during the time of the dancing of the quadrilles was marvelously beautiful. These quadrilles were in every way unique and were the great feature of the ball. . . . It was in every way the greatest night in the history of New York society."—Ibid., F 14, 1897. See also ibid., F 21, 26, and 27, 1897, and Van Rensselaer, The Social Ladder, 207–9.

The Greater New York charter is unanimously approved by 17
the charter commission at the mayor's office.—N. Y. Times, F 13 and 18, 1897. On Feb. 18, the report to the legislature, giving reasons for the charter prepared, was signed by the commissioners. —Ibid., F 23, 1897. The report is printed in Ash, N. Y. City Charter (1897), cxxvii–cxlviii.

The Citizens Union is formed, and issues its first address to the 22 public with a "Declaration of Principles and Objects." Among these are: The business affairs of municipal corporations should be "managed upon their own merits uncontrolled by national or state politics;" the character and record of every candidate for municipal office should be such as to justify public confidence that 1897 Feb. 22 he will not use his office "for the benefit of any political organization;" civil service requirements should be impartially enforced so as to "afford a fair chance to every citizen without regard to race, religious belief or political affiliations;" public franchises should be granted "for limited periods in order that increases in value shall accrue to the people;" there should be "better rapid transit facilities without unreasonable delay;" adequate school accommodations should be provided and the "efficiency of the public schools be steadily increased by the adoption of the best educational methods;" laws providing for the better sanitation of tenement-houses should be "carried into effect at the earliest practicable date;" the government of the city should be "by its citizens for their own benefit, not by partisans for the benefit of parties." The members include Benjamin Altman, Joseph H. Choate, W. Bayard Cutting, R. Fulton Cutting, John Claflin, Horace E. Deming, E. R. L. Gould, Richard W. Gilder, Abram S. Hewitt, J. Pierpont Morgan, John B. Pine, G. Haven Putnam, Elihu Root, Jacob H. Schiff, Carl Schurz, J. H. Van Amringe, etc. —Report of Committee on Plan and Scope to Citizens Union Executive Committee (1901), 1–5; N. Y. Tribune, F 24, O 26, 1897; N. Y. Times, F 24, 1897.

Mar. 2 The last of the Patriarchs' balls (see 1872) is held. Anson Phelps Stokes, commenting on them, says: "I had been one of the Patriarchs under Mr. Ward McAllister's management, and had continued under Mr. Buchanan Winthrop's leadership. At these balls for many years the principal presentations of young ladies were made. There were numerous criticisms made in the press regarding Mr. McAllister, and he sometimes expressed himself incautiously, but he really served a useful purpose. He issued all the invitations to these balls, other Patriarchs sending him names and giving him absolute veto power. In many cases, when invitations were not received, he took all the blame. It is difficult to know how such a series of balls could have been carried on successfully in New York at that time on any other basis. There were not many private ball-rooms then in New York."—Stokes Records, III: 66–67.

4 Wm. McKinley is inaugurated president.—N. Y. Times, Mr 5, 1897.

11 Under the title, "The Educational System of Greater New York," Nicholas Murray Butler gives great praise to the educational chapter in the proposed charter for Greater New York (see My 4). "It is a genuine contribution," he says, "to the science of municipal administration, and a noteworthy advance beyond conditions that now prevail so generally in the school systems of great cities."—Independent, Mr 11, 1897, 305.

17 The board of estimate and apportionment is directed to select a site near the county court-house, but not in City Hall Park, upon which to erect a building for the accommodation of the register, the clerk of the city and county, the surrogate courts, and the law, finance, and tax departments.—Laws of N. Y. (1897), Vol. II, chaps. 59 and 793.

Apr. 6 Theodore Roosevelt, who for the past two years has been police commissioner of New York City (see 1895), is nominated by Pres. McKinley as assistant secretary of the navy.—N. Y. Times, Ap 4, 6, and 7, 1897. A farewell reception was held in Roosevelt's honour by Good Government Club A on April 15.—Ibid., Ap 16, 1897. He resigned the office of police commissioner on April 17, to take effect April 19, when he became assistant secretary of the navy.—Ibid., Ap 18, 1897.

17 Gen. Grant's body is removed from the temporary mausoleum on Riverside Heights, where it was deposited in 1885 (q. v., Jl 23), to the new marble tomb.—Sun, Ap 18, 1897. The new tomb was dedicated on April 27 (q. v.).

23 The legislature directs that the height of dwelling and apartment-houses, measured from the sidewalk through the centre of the façade, shall not exceed 150 ft. on streets and avenues more than 79 ft. in width, and 100 ft. on streets and avenues less than 79 ft. in width.—Laws of N. Y. (1897), chap. 321.

27 Grant's Tomb (see Ap 27, 1892), at Riverside Drive and 122d St., is dedicated by Pres. McKinley. The occasion is marked by a land parade of 60,000 marchers and a review of the fleet in the Hudson River by McKinley. Mrs. U. S. Grant and her family, ex-Pres. Cleveland, and other distinguished people are present.—Sun, Ap 20–28, 1897. The tomb occupies the site of the former country-house "Strawberry Hill."—N. Y. Herald, Ap 28, 1897. Apr. 27 – May 4

The charter of "Greater New York" (see My 11, and Je 9, 1896) becomes law. It is entitled, "An act to unite into one municipality under the corporate name of the City of New York, the various communities lying in and about New York harbour, including the city and county of New York, the city of Brooklyn and the county of Kings, the county of Richmond, and part of the county of Queens, and to provide for the government thereof." The traditional corporate name was "The mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the City of New York." All the duties and powers of the several municipal and public corporations, thus "united and consolidated," are "hereby devolved upon the municipal assembly of the said city of New York," and "all valid and lawful charges and liabilities" now existing against any of these municipal or public corporations "shall be deemed and taken to be like charges against or liabilities of the said 'The City of New York.'"

The new city is divided into the five boroughs of Manhattan, The Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, and Richmond.

Legislative power is vested in "The Municipal Assembly of the City of New York," comprising a council and a board of aldermen. The former is to have 28 members, elected from "council districts" for a term of four years, plus a president to be "chosen on a general ticket." The latter is to receive $5,000 salary, the other members, $1,500. Every ex-mayor of "The City of New York," so long as he remains a resident, shall be entitled to a seat in the council without a vote.

Aldermen are to be elected biennially from assembly districts, except that the area formerly comprising Long Island City and the town of Newtown shall be entitled to one member, as shall also the area formerly comprising the towns of Jamaica and Flushing and that part of Hempstead taken into the city, and the area comprising "those parts of the first and second assembly districts of Westchester county included in the borough of The Bronx." The salary of an alderman is fixed at $1,000. Heads of administrative departments are entitled to a seat in the board without a vote. The clerk elected by the council is also the "city clerk," and it is in his power to appoint the clerk of the aldermanic board. The latter body chooses a president from its own membership. In imitation of the federal congress, the two bodies shall each "determine the rules of its own proceedings; shall each be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members, subject, however, to review by certiorari of any court of competent jurisdiction; shall each keep a journal of its proceedings; shall each sit with open doors; shall each have authority to compel the attendance of absent members and to punish its members for disorderly behavior; and to expel any member with the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected to such body."

All ordinances or resolutions are subject to the mayor's veto, but may be passed over the veto by a two-thirds vote in each branch, provided that "in case the ordinance or resolution involves the expenditure of money, the creation of a debt, the laying of an assessment, or the grant of a franchise," it shall require a five-sixths vote. Among other powers specifically authorised are the acquisition of additional water-works, restricting the height of buildings to be hereafter erected, granting franchises (limited to 25 years) for street railways, and the maintenance and regulation of ferries.

The chief executive is the mayor, to be elected for a four-year term at the general election in November, 1897; it is to be noted that this is the "off-year," not the year for federal and state elections. He shall not be eligible "for the next term after the termination of his office."

Administrative departments under the mayor include law, police, water supply, highways, street cleaning, sewers, public buildings, lighting and supplies, bridges, parks, buildings, public charities, correction, fire, docks and ferries, taxes and assessments, education, and health. At the head of each is a commissioner or a board; a "board of public improvements" controls the six departments successively named above beginning with water supply. Under plural control (i. e., under control of a board or commission) are also the police, parks, buildings, public charities, docks and ferries, taxes and assessments, education, and health. For most of these commissioners or boards the term is six years or "until their successors have been appointed and have qualified."

For six months after the commencement of his term the mayor may remove any appointive official "except members of the board of education and school boards, and except also judicial officers for whose removal other provision is made by the constitution." Albert Shaw, editor of the Review of Reviews, satirized this power thus: "The mayor will have spent six months in winding up the machine and he will have forty-two months in which to watch it gradually run down."—See "The Municipal Problem and Greater New York," in Atlantic Monthly (1897), LXXIX: 746. Appointments are all made by the mayor without confirmation and include the chamberlain, three or more civil service commissioners to serve without compensation, a "municipal statistical commission" consisting of "not less than three nor more than six members," also serving without compensation under a salaried "chief of the bureau of municipal statistics," two commissioners of accounts, city magistrates, and special sessions justices.

The department of finance is headed by the comptroller, elected at the same time and for the same term as the mayor. The salary of the former is fixed at $10,000, of the latter, at $15,000. Both are removable by the governor on charges, and may be suspended for a period of 30 days, pending the investigation of the charges.

By this charter the board of estimate and apportionment consists of the mayor, comptroller, corporation counsel, president of the council, and the president of the department of taxes and assessments. The board's chief business is the preparation of an annual budget to be submitted to the municipal assembly in joint session; that body is empowered only to decrease amounts that have been fixed, such decreases to be subject to the mayor's veto.

The sinking fund commission is henceforth to consist of the mayor, comptroller, chamberlain, president of the council, and chairman of the finance committee of the board of aldermen, and is empowered to administer the several sinking funds of the component parts of the now Greater New York.

Provision is made for the government of the several boroughs. A borough president is to be elected at the same time and for the same term as the mayor and comptroller; he is removable by the mayor on charges, subject to the approval of the governor. Local boards of improvement are provided for, consisting in each case of the borough president and of those members of the municipal assembly who are residents of the given district.

In the judicial establishment, a notable change is the abolition of all "justices' courts" and "district courts," and the substitution therefor of "The Municipal Court of the City of New York," a local civil court to be presided over by municipal court justices. Twenty-three districts are designated, each of which shall elect a justice for a term of ten years who shall preside over the sessions of the court in his district. All these justices shall constitute "the board of justices of the municipal court" with power to organize and hold meetings, all of which "shall be public." For criminal cases the system of magistrates and special sessions courts, as now prevailing in the city and county of New York, is extended to all parts of the greater city, the office of police justice being abolished wherever existent.

Although the ward ceases to function, former ward designations are maintained, and ward divisions are defined in the boroughs of Queens and Richmond, the municipal assembly being empowered to change boundaries and create other wards "as the public good and convenience may require."

County government as now existent suffers little change by the charter, except that the office of county treasurer is abolished in Richmond, the powers of that officer to devolve upon the city comptroller.

The law was passed over the veto of Mayor Strong of New York. It was approved by the mayors of Brooklyn and Long Island City. —Laws of N. Y. (1897), chap. 378. Mark Ash, of the New York Bar, published in 1918 a fourth edition of his issue of the charter, having the title: The Greater New York Charter as enacted in 1897 and revised in 1901, as further amended by subsequent acts, down to and including the year 1917, with notes and references to judicial decisions relating thereto, together with appendixes. . . . An "Introductory" note contains a history of the legislation leading to the enactment of the charter and its amendments.

The original arrangement or classification of the charter provisions was in some cases illogical, and, as first issued, there was no analytical index. For example, the art commission is placed as "Title 2" under "Department of Parks."

The art commission was given jurisdiction over: (a), all works of art to be acquired by the city of N. Y. by purchase, gift or otherwise; (b), the removal, relocation or alteration in any way of works of art already possessed by the city; all designs of municipal buildings, bridges, approaches, gates, fences, lamps or other structures erected or to be erected upon land belonging to the city; the lines, grades, plotting of public ways and grounds; arches, bridges, structures and approaches, which are the property of any corporation or private individual and which shall extend over or upon any street, park or public place belonging to the city,—provided these designs, etc., are referred to this commission by the mayor or board of aldermen. In 1900, this commission was given power over the selection of art productions costing not over $50,000 in any one year, when such appropriation has been made by the board of estimate and apportionment.—Laws of N. Y. (1900), chap. 327. In 1901, the legislature increased the commission's jurisdiction to cover the structures mentioned above, to be erected or contracted for at an expense of $1,000,000 or more without previous reference of plans by the mayor or aldermen to the commission.—Ibid. (1901), chap. 466. In 1907, the charter was amended so that all public or private structures extending over or upon land belonging to the city should come under the jurisdiction of this commission. The only exception is that, when a structure is to be erected costing $250,000 or less, the commission shall not act if requested not to do so by the mayor or board of aldermen.—Ibid. (1907), chap. 675. See also F 14, 1898.

Chapter 21 of the charter contains important provisions relating to "The Acquisition of Lands and Interests Therein for Public Purposes;" Chapter 22 consists of general statutes regarding streets, amusements, birds, commercial paper during epidemic, pharmacists, board of City Record, coroners, etc.; and Chapter 23, with which the charter closes, contains the provisions relating to the counties embraced in Greater New York, provisions relating to the repeal or survival of old provisions relating to the city.

Commenting on the charter, James W. Pryor says: "The most important local statute passed within recent years is the charter of Greater New York, which will take effect on the first of January, 1898 [q. v.]. It creates a municipality so large as to present a new factor in the political institutions of the country. For the first time, we have to deal with the government of a great metropolitan city with a population of over three millions. This fact gives to the charter an importance far beyond that of the ordinary municipal charter. It is an experiment which is of interest beyond the limits of New York State. Its success or failure will strongly influence the development of institutions in other parts of the country. . . . Viewed in this light, the work of the commission and the passage of the charter by the state legislature constitute a significant episode in the history of legislation. . . ."—Annals of Am. Acad. of Political and Social Science, X: 20.

The Review of Reviews declares that the provision for an assembly of two chambers "flies in the face of all sound experience everywhere" (Rev. of Reviews, Feb., 1897, 143); that it is "the most hampered, restricted, and altogether helpless, useless and meaningless piece of sham machinery ever speciously proposed in any governmental instrument in a country of democratic institutions;" that its only power in connection with the budget is one of "obstruction;" that, in laying taxes and assessments and raising money, its functions are "so perfunctory that they could be performed by a dummy." He calls the charter remarkable in "verbal dimensions" and "complicated in its provisions," based on the "theory of checks and balances," new checks having been invented and old ones rearranged "until the result suggests to my mind nothing so much as the combination of bolts, levers, time-locks, and other mechanical devices which go to make up the burglar-proof system one finds on the great door of a modern bank vault."—Independent (1897), XLIX: 303–4. For the opinion of President Butler of Columbia Univ., see Mr 11.

James Bryce, the English critic of America's municipal institutions, praises the change in the time of elections, declaring "No greater forward step can be taken" than that of "eliminating national party politics from municipal elections."—Contemp. Review, Nov. 1897. See also Harper's Weekly, XLI: 75, 385–91; and descrip. of Pl. 157-b, III: 840. See illustration.

The bi-centennial jubilee of Trinity Church is celebrated. A souvenir book, copyrighted by the rector, Rev. Morgan Dix, S.T.D., contained the form of thanksgiving followed by the congregation, together with the rector's pastoral letter, a history of the parish, and also portraits of its rectors since the year 1697.—

19 As the land on Fifth Ave. between 40th and 42d Sts. has been made a portion of Bryant Park (see D 26, 1896), the department of public parks is directed to remove the reservoir and to erect a fireproof building to be used as a public library and reading-room by the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox, and Tilden Foundations. There is to be a free circulating branch in the library, and the same is to be open during the day time on Sunday and during the evening of every other day until at least 10 o'clock.—Laws of N. Y. (1897), chap. 556. See also N. Y. Times, N 30 and D 20, 1897. The plans for the library were selected in the fall of 1897 (q.v., N 10), but the building was not begun until 1899 (q.v.).

21 The trustees of the New York Public Library adopt the terms of a competition for a design for the new library building to be erected on the reservoir site (see My 19). "Two competitions were called for, first, an open competition in which sketches only would be required, followed by a restricted competition for which finished drawings would be made. The first was open to all architects having offices within the limits of Greater New York. Drawings for it must be submitted on or before July 15. From these drawings the judges, Professor Ware, Colonel Green, and Dr. Billings, would select the best twelve, and the authors of these would be paid $400 each. The Committee would then choose from these twelve competitors not more than six, who with six other architects were to be invited to take part in a second competition. To those then submitting plans would be paid $800 each, and from the plans the jury of selection was to choose not more than three to be submitted to the trustees. From these three the trustees were to send one to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for its approval.

". . . To make certain that the requirements were consistent and reasonable, a sketch plan was included, giving the dimensions of the plot and indicating for each floor in diagrammatic form a suggested arrangement of rooms. The Committee was careful to say they had no prejudice in favor of these particular plans and that competitors were requested to make such alterations and changes as they chose. . . .

"Competitors were to submit floor plans for each floor on the scale of 50 feet to 1 inch, an elevation of the 5th Avenue, 42nd Street, and Bryant Park fronts, two sections showing the principal rooms and the staircases. The elevations and sections were to be on a scale of 25 feet to 1 inch. All drawings were to be of uniform size, 14 inches by 21, with a single line for a border.

"Drawings for the preliminary competition were to be sent to the Secretary on or before July 15, 1897. The Committee would announce their choice, name the other competitors, and issue final instructions for the second competition early in August, and designs for the second competition must be submitted on or before November 1."—Lydenberg, Hist. of N. Y. Pub. Library, 442–45. See, further, Jl 26.

June 4 Mayor Strong appoints a committee to act with him in an advisory capacity for the selection of sites for small parks (see My 13, 1887) in the crowded quarters of the city.—Sun, Je 5, 1897. This "Small Parks Commission," submitted a report in October, stating that the lack of play spaces for children compelled them to play in the streets, which were already occupied by car-tracks and overcrowded with traffic, and that hostility between the children and the police had led to the growth of a criminal class.—*Ann. 26 The judges in the first competition for a design for the New York Public Library (see My 21) report to the executive committee that 88 designs were submitted and that the best 12 were those by J. H. Freedlander, Haydel & Shepard, H. Hornbostel, G. E. Wood and G. C. Palmer, Howard & Cauldwell; Lord, Hewlett & Hull, Clarence S. Luce, Parish & Schroeder, Roos & Weber, W. Wheeler Smith (associated with Walker & Morris), C. W. & A. A. Stoughton, James E. Ware & Son, and Whitney Warren. On July 27, the executive committee decided to invite McKim, Mead & White, George B. Post, Cyrus L. W. Eidlitz, Carrère & Hastings, Peabody & Stearns, and Chas. C. Haight to enter the second competition, and on July 28, the following were selected from the first twelve in the preliminary competition: J. H. Freedlander, Haydel & Shepard, H. Hornbostel, G. E. Wood and G. C. Palmer, Howard & Cauldwell, W. Wheeler Smith (associated with Walker & Morris), and Whitney Warren.

"The Committee then sent to the twelve architects thus chosen the terms for the second competition dated August 2, calling for the delivery of plans on or before November 1. In general, these terms followed those of the first competition, although the size and arrangement of the rooms, and other details, were changed. The predominant feature of the main reading room over the book stacks at the west end of the building was adhered to. A large public entrance on 42nd Street was added and the Central Circulation room placed in the north court directly opposite this entrance. . . .

"The competitors were themselves to choose three practicing architects, who with three members of the Board of Trustees and the Director were to constitute the jury of award. This jury was to submit to the trustees the three designs they deemed best, from which one was to be selected by the trustees for recommendation to the Board of Estimate. . . .

"The designs were to have no device or motto, but were to be accompanied by a sealed letter containing the name and address of the architect submitting it, and to be addressed in typewriting to the Secretary. Drawings and envelopes were to be numbered as received and were to be referred to by number. The envelopes were not to be opened until the jury had made its award.

"The three architects chosen for the jury were Walter Cook, Cass Gilbert, Edgar V. Seeler. The trustees were John L. Cadwalader, Alexander Maitland, George L. Rives. These with Dr. Billings constituted the jury of award."—Lydenberg, Hist. of N. Y. Pub. Library, 446–50. See, further, N 10.

Aug. 25 The work of enlarging the Grand Central Station (see Ja 22), is under way. "Three more stories are to be added, giving the struc-

Oct. 4 Columbia's six new buildings on Morningside Heights, the library (see D 7, 1895), Schermerhorn, University, Fayerweather, and Havemeyer Halls, and the Engineering building, being completed, the work of the schools of the university, excepting the medical school, is transferred from 49th St. to the present site.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 166; L. M. R. K., III: 940. The old property was afterwards sold (see N 12, 1898). The present university is shown on Pl. 170, Vol. III.

Nov. 1 The Astoria Hotel (see N 2, 1894), erected by John Jacob Astor on the south-west corner of Fifth Ave. and 34th St., having been completed, it and the adjoining Waldorf, on Fifth Ave. and 33d St., are opened as the Waldorf-Astoria. This is the largest hotel in the world.—Com. Adv., O 16, 1897; N. Y. Times, N 2, 1897; L. M. R. K., III: 981.

2 Robert A. Van Wyck, supported by Tammany Hall, is elected mayor. Benjamin F. Tracy was the candidate of the Republicans, and Henry George, of the Jeffersonian Democrats. The Citizens Union, which had for its object a non-partisan administration of business-like efficiency, nominated Seth Low, a former mayor of Brooklyn, and at this time president of Columbia University.—N. Y. Times, N 3 and 4, 1897; Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall, 319, 337; Ann. Cyclop. (1897), 567–68.

10 The trustees of the New York Public Library select the design submitted by Carrère & Hastings for the new library building to be erected by the city on the reservoir site at 42d St. and Fifth Ave. The jury of award had reported on Nov. 8 that this design was decidedly superior to the others submitted. The design of Howard & Cauldwell was placed second and that of McKim, Mead & White third.—Lydenberg, Hist. N. Y. Pub. Library, 450; Com. Adv., N 12 and 16, 1897. The design of Carrère & Hastings was approved by the board of estimate on Dec. 1.—Ibid., D 1 and 4, 1897; Lydenberg, op. cit., 450; Harper's Weekly, XLI: 1223, 1224–25. The original wash-drawing of the Fifth Ave. elevation submitted by the winners of the competition is reproduced as A. Pl. 30-a, Vol. III. The corner-stone of the library was laid on Nov. 10, 1902 (q. v.).

15 The new Delmonico's at the n. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 44th St. is opened informally to about 1,000 guests. The building was designed by James Brown Lord. Its opening "marks another epoch in the social history of New York."—N. Y. Times, N 14 and 16, 1897. Cf. L. M. R. K., III: 978.

28 "In making way for the extensive alterations in the City Hall several tons of old records have been collected from long neglected store rooms, closets, and out-of-the-way places, and the question of what shall be done with so much official rubbish has become a serious one for Martin Keyes, the custodian of the building. . . .

"Architect John H. Duncan in planning the remodeling of the City Hall, provided for a large amount of fireproof storage room in the basement. The unused vaults, cells, and coal holes have been overhauled, in some cases rebuilt, and in every instance made lighter and more serviceable. A convenient arrangement has been made for the accommodation of the records and the library of the Municipal Government. There will be a librarian's room on the first floor of the City Hall, and underneath are commodious vaults capable of storing many thousands of volumes in book racks systematically placed. Most of the vaults are of new construction, with solid masonry walls three feet thick."—N. Y. Times, N 28, 1897.

D 8 A lease and agreement for the use and occupation of the library building is executed between the city and the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations. "This granted to the Library the building to be erected on the reservoir site as long as the corporation provided a public library and reading room therein. The City was to maintain the building and keep it in repair. The Library was to occupy it as soon as possible after completion and was to keep it accessible at all reasonable hours for general use, free of charge to the public; one or more reading rooms were to be open on week days, holidays included, from 9.00 a. m. to 9.00 p. m., and on Sundays from 1.00 to 9.00 p. m.; a circulation branch was to be maintained therein by the trustees to be opened for the public during the day time on Sunday and during the evening of other days for such time as may be prescribed by the trustees, the branch to be closed at night not earlier than 10 o'clock. Dec. 8

"The Library retained title to and control of its collections in the building. It agreed to submit to the Mayor a detailed printed report of its operations and transactions and of its receipts and expenditures. The City was to have access to the building, but the Library was to appoint, direct, control and remove all persons employed in the building. The City was to provide funds for maintenance and repair of the building, to furnish a supply of water and adequate police patrol and protection. The Department of Parks was to care for the approaches."—Lydenberg, Hist. of N. Y. Pub. Library, 450–51.

From this date until Dec. 25, an exhibition of plans and views of New York City from 1651 to 1860 was held at the Grolier Club, No. 29 E. 32d St. This, so far as known, was the first comprehensive public exhibition of New York City prints, although some interesting material, especially books, was shown in the old Lenox Library during the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America.—Cat. of Plans and Views of N. Y. City, 1651–1860. 10

At various times between this date and Feb. 16, 1900, the city acquired by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by 111th and 114th Sts., First Ave. and the Harlem River (see My 22, 1894). —Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51. Here Thomas Jefferson Park was developed.—L. M. R. K., III: 971. The park was first opened on July 11, 1902 (q. v.). "

The common council resolves that the old hall of records or register's office (originally the "New Goal"), situated in City Hall Park, which is soon to be vacated by the city, shall be "dedicated, granted, and set aside" for the free exhibition of the collections of the National Historical Museum.—Ordinances, etc., App'd by the Mayor, LXV: 690. Soon after this, the construction of the underground rapid transit tunnel or subway was begun, and the subway commission, desiring to locate a station opposite the Brooklyn Bridge terminus, applied for the removal of the old hall of records. Though there was strenuous opposition on the part of the National Historical Museum, American Scenic & Historic Preservation Society, and others, the resolution granting the building to the museum was finally rescinded on March 11, 1902 (q. v.), and on Oct. 10, 1902 (q. v.), it was ordered demolished. 30

— In this year, "the discovery of gold in the Klondike stirred men's imagination to an extravagance second only to the discovery in California fifty years before."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 273.

— In this year, just as the French attempt to build a Panama Canal was coming to acknowledged failure, the U. S. began taking steps to have a canal of its own construction and ownership.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 455.

— In this year, at the suggestion of Lawrence Veiller and with the support of Josephine Shaw Lowell, the Charity Organization Society appointed a standing committee of its members, known as the "Tenement House Committee of the Charity Organization Society." The committee consisted of Frederick W. Holls, chairman, Felix Adler, Constant A. Andrews, Robert W. de Forest, Edward T. Devine, John Vinton Dahlgren, Ernest Flagg, Richard Watson Gilder, E. R. L. Gould, George B. Post, Jacob A. Riis, and I. N. Phelps Stokes; and Lawrence Veiller who was secretary and executive officer. Its object was to improve tenement-house conditions by securing remedial legislation in regard to new buildings, by preventing bad legislation, by having existing tenement laws enforced, by stimulating the building of model tenements, and by having old tenements altered to suit the needs of new 1898 tenants. In the first six months, the committee devoted itself to the — work of framing 15 new tenement-house ordinances, which they submitted to the municipal building code commission with a statement of the reasons for them and the advantages to be gained by their enactment. These ordinances were published in a small pamphlet in June, 1899, and received widespread favourable comment, but none of them was adopted by the authorities.—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 109–11. See 1900.

— In this year, the New York Training School for Teachers was established. It was opened in September in P. S. 159.—Palmer, The N. Y. Pub. School, 287.

— The National Arts Club is organized and incorporated. Its first club-house, at 39 W. 34th St., was opened in Oct., 1899. Later, 41 W. 34th St. was added. The club removed to its present quarters, formerly the residence of Samuel J. Tilden, at 14–15 Gramercy Park, in Aug., 1906. A studio building was constructed in 1906.—See records of the club. The object of the club was: "To give a helping hand to artists of all kinds by affording them conveniences and club comforts, a place for exhibitions, and rallying to their support the encouragement of amateurs."—Bulletin of Nat. — In this year, August Will made a wash drawing of the sky-line of New York from Jersey City and published it with a drawing made by him showing the sky-line in 1873. The two views are reproduced as Pl. 157-a, Vol. III.

— "The automobile industry, which had its beginnings in the last decade of the nineteenth century [see 1890, 1892], developed at such a rapid rate as to far outstrip that of carriages and wagons, the parent industry. Before 1898 only 1,631 motor cars were manufactured in France, 894 in Germany, 682 in England, and probably 1,200 in the United States. In 1913, only fifteen years later, the number of automobiles in use was estimated at 1,161,911, of which 628,185 were in the United States, 125,728 in the United Kingdom, 89,185 in France, and 70,006 in Germany. Statistics for later years are not available except in the case of the United States, in which it is estimated that there were 3,500,000 in use in 1916, or more than three times as many as in all the world only three years before. . . . Jan. 1 "The City of New York," incorporated under that designation by the charter of May 4, 1897 (q.v.), begins its corporate existence. The first officers, elected according to the provisions of the charter on Nov. 2, 1897 (q.v.), are formally installed, with Robert A. Van Wyck as mayor.—N. Y. Times, Ja 1 and 2, 1898.

3 Mayor Van Wyck sends his first annual message to the common council, saying in part: "The radical changes which the provisions of the new charter make in the several departments and in their modes of procedure present a problem which must be met on the part of the city officials with intelligence, caution and industry, and on the part of the public with patience and hearty co-operation. . . .

"The new Charter makes no change in our mode of government more radical than in the provision under which the legislative power of the city is hereafter vested jointly in the Municipal Council and Board of Aldermen.

"An equally marked feature of the change is the important addition to the powers of the local legislature, amounting to a considerable measure of home rule. . . .

"In determining upon the necessity, character and expense of such public work as may be submitted for your action, you must be governed by a settled purpose based upon the promise given, that the public improvements would be fairly distributed as between the five boroughs, and that the most pressing needs of each of the localities would receive equal consideration and be supplied, as nearly as possible, with equal promptness. In all your proceedings you should take the broad and liberal view, which, appreciating that the residents of the several boroughs now make up but a single constituency, deals with the City's affairs without any regard to any former lines of civil divisions and accepts the benefits conferred upon any particular section and any particular work as an advantage secured to all. . . .

"There has been no popular demand, in the line of public improvements, so vigorous, so persistent and so well justified as that which calls for a safe, speedy and comfortable mode of travel from the homes to the places of business or employment of such of our citizens as reside in the northern portion of the Borough of Manhattan or in the Borough of the Bronx. . . .

"It is not alone unfortunate but also disheartening, that the petitions, protests and demands of the people for better transit facilities have been answered with nothing better than a multiplicity of plans. Certain is it that our citizens will no longer tolerate, much less excuse, delay upon delay at the cost of not alone the comfort and convenience of the people, but also the increased valuations which, in a considerable degree, would add to the public revenues if the rapidly growing districts most directly interested were furnished with greater and improved facilities of travel. . . .

"To my mind there can now be urged no sufficient reason for the continued employment of the locomotives now in use on the elevated roads, and the people should no longer be subjected to the resulting nuisances of noise, smoke, and flying cinders.

"You should demand and insist upon the substitution, in the place of the present motive power, of electricity. . . . And, again, the number of through express trains should be considerably increased, their running time improved and their use continued throughout the day and night. . . .

"The corporations should be compelled to continue the present [elevated] routes to the more sparsely settled and more distant localities, even if for a time some loss is entailed upon them by so doing. . . .

"The surface railroads likewise should be required to adopt the best-approved motive power. . . .

"We should be constant in our endeavor to make the metropolis as attractive and healthful as its financial condition will permit. We must make our city in every way worthy of its proud position in the first place among the municipalities in the western world. With a promptness and expenditure limited alone by prudence we should secure for our citizens good roads, improved pavements, bicycle paths, small parks and every improvement which helps in out-door recreations, and so assist in bettering the physical condition."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1898), I: 17–42.

5 "The Fine Arts Federation, in accordance with a clause in the charter, submitted eighteen names yesterday, from which Mayor Van Wyck will select six, to appoint as members of the Art Commission. The list was to be made up of three painters, three sculptors, three architects, and nine men not a member of any of the professions in the fine arts. One Commissioner is to be taken from each profession and three from the list of laymen, and these six, together with the President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the President of the New York Public Library, the President of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and the Mayor, will make up the commission. . . . The list submitted to the Mayor yesterday is as follows:

"Painters—John La Farge, Frederick Crowninshield, and George W. Maynard.

1898 Jan. 5 "Sculptors—J. Q. A. Ward, Daniel C. French, and Herbert Adams.

"Architects—George B. Post, Walter Cook, and Charles F. McKim.

"Lay Members—George L. Rives, John De Witt Warner, Charles W. Truslow, W. T. Evans, S. P. Avery, Montgomery Schuyler, Henry E. Howland, Charles F. Barney, and Alexander Maitland."—N. Y. Times, Ja 6, 1898. See F 14.

13 Emile Zola publishes his famous letter, "J'accuse," denouncing the judges in the Dreyfus case (see O, 1894) for convicting on secret evidence and for acquitting Major Esterhazy, the real traitor. Zola was arrested and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, but he fled to England.—Hazen, Europe since 1815, 358–64.

14 Mayor Van Wyck appoints as members of the newly created municipal art commission (see Ja 5), Chas. T. Barney, Henry E. Howland, and Samuel P. Avery (laymen), John La Farge (painter), Daniel C. French (sculptor), and Chas. F. McKim (architect). The mayor, the presidents of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, of the N. Y. Public Library, and of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences are, ex officio, members of the commission.

"The commission supersedes all like bodies and the Commissioners serve without compensation. The Board of Estimate and Apportionment must provide suitable offices for them. Under the terms of the charter (Sections 633 to 639) the members appointed must be three laymen, one architect, one artist, and one sculptor. . . .

"The charter gives the commission extensive powers. Without its approval no work of art can become the property of the city by gift or purchase, and none can be placed upon city property. The expression 'work of art' is construed by the charter to include 'oil paintings, mural decorations, stained glass, statues, bas reliefs, or other sculptures, monuments, and arches.'

"At the discretion of the Mayor or the Municipal Assembly the commission may exercise like powers over designs for municipal buildings, bridges, gates, lamps, &c. to be erected on city property."—N. Y. Times, F 15, 1898. For a résumé of the commission's powers, see the analysis of the charter under May 4, 1897.

Commenting on the commission on Feb. 17, the Times said: "The Mayor has chosen a very good Art Commission, according to the requirements of the charter. Indeed, he could scarcely have chosen a bad one from the list furnished to him by the Fine Arts Federation. . . .

"It is a pity that the powers of the commission do not extend further. Of course it is a great gain to have imbedded in the charter an acknowledgement of the aesthetic interests of the city, and of the necessity of providing some means for their protection. But the powers of the commission are limited to passing upon the merits of any work of art which it is proposed that the city shall acquire 'by purchase, gift, or otherwise'. . . . Obviously public buildings and erections which are primarily works of utility should be submitted to the commission as a matter of course, and the charter should be so amended as to require such a submission. Structures of this kind do more to adorn or disfigure a city than the works of art specifically so called. . . .

"Even such an extension of its powers would not, however, secure the fulfillment of the purpose which an art commission should serve. If its labors are confined to mere obstruction, to preventing the erection of works of art which may at least be assumed to have had their origin in patriotism or civic pride or a spirit of pious commemoration, it will fail to enlist any enthusiasm in its behalf. . . . The commission, as named by the Mayor, is abundantly competent to prepare a programme which shall include in a comprehensive scheme of public improvement such details as the designation of suitable sites for public monuments, of which heretofore every one has been treated as a new question and an isolated question, and almost every one has given rise to a squabble. Such a scheme cannot be carried into effect without the co-operation of the City Government, and that co-operation should be the first object of the commission. Without it the usefulness of the commission will be slight and purely negative. With it the commission may render a positive and most important service to the city."—Ibid., F 17, 1898. Regarding the commission, see also Statutes relating to Organization and Powers of the Art Commission (N. Y., 1902). Feb. 14

In the evening of this day, the U. S. battleship "Maine" is blown up in Havana harbour. Two officers and 251 sailors are killed.—N. Y. Times, F 16 et seq., 1898. 15

The board of aldermen adopts the following resolutions: 23

"Whereas, The entire American Nation has heard with profound grief of the deplorable destruction of the United States battleship 'Maine' in the harbor of Havana; and

"Whereas, The demolition of the magnificent war vessel has carried sadness to hundreds of homes throughout the length and breadth of the land, more particularly to those within the area of the Greater City of New York; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Board of Aldermen, sincerely deplore the sudden and terrible deaths which met the officers and members of the crew of the said 'Maine', and we extend to their surviving relatives our sincere sympathy in their bereavement."—Proc. of Mun. Assemb. (1898), I: 90–91; N. Y. Times, F 24, 1898.

The board of aldermen passes the following resolutions: 15

"Whereas, The alterations made in the City Hall, conformably to legislative requirement, are now completed; and

"Whereas, These rooms are intended for specific purposes not yet so officially designated; therefore

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings, Lighting and Supplies of the Board be and it is hereby instructed to confer with the Department of Public Buildings, Lighting and Supplies, and with the City Clerk, with a view of designating the various rooms in the said City Hall for such purposes as are advisable and necessary.

"Resolved, That each room be properly numbered or renumbered, and that such furniture, fittings, etc., as may be necessary be recommended.

"Resolved, further, That, in reporting to this Board, the said Committee on Public Buildings, Lighting and Supplies present its recommendations in detail, together with appropriate provision, by resolution, for the preparation of a complete directory, for which purpose suitable space and marble slabs have been already provided."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1898), I: 779–80.

Theodore Roosevelt is sworn in, at Washington, "as Lieutenant Colonel of United States Volunteers to serve with the regiment of mounted riflemen, to be made up mainly of plainsmen and rough riders. [Dr. Leonard Wood was Colonel of this regiment]. . . . May 6

"Col. Roosevelt's office was crowded to overflowing about noon to-day with an asemblage of cowboys, plainsmen, college students, and ex-policemen of the New York force, who are among those to join the command of which Mr. Roosevelt will be Lieutenant Colonel. Most of the men were mustered in yesterday. . . .

"All these will leave here tomorrow afternoon for San Antonio, Texas, where the regiment is to rendezvous."—N. Y. Times, My 7, 1898. See also ibid., Ap 26, 1898.

The official title of the regiment was the First U. S. Volunteer Cavalry, "but," as Roosevelt explains, "for some reason or other the public promptly christened us the 'Rough Riders.' At first we fought against the use of the term, but to no purpose; and when finally the Generals of Division and Brigade began to write in formal communications about our regiment as the 'Rough Riders,' we adopted the term ourselves."—Roosevelt, The Rough Riders (1899). For interesting notes regarding the organization and enlistment of the regiment, see ibid. See also My 12.

A San Antonio news item reads: "Three hundred and forty cowboys from New Mexico and thirty-nine society leaders from New York are the latest acquisitions to the Roosevelt riders. Among the men from the East are Craig Wadsworth, one of the best polo players in America; Basil Ricketts, a son of the late Gen. Ricketts, who has served a two years' apprenticeship on a Colorado cattle ranch; Hamilton Fish, Jr., another polo player; Horace Devereaux of Colorado Springs and the Princeton football team; William Tiffany of New York, a social favorite and a leader of cotillions, who can boast of a long experience on western ranch and range; Kenneth Robinson of the Knickerbocker Club; Reginald Ronalds, half back on the Yale football team, and Hollister, the Harvard sprinter. 12

"There will be about fifty of these college and club men in all, but their wealth and influence will secure them no special consideration in the regiment. One of them may get a Lieutenant's commission, and two or three are likely to be made non-commissioned officers, but the rest will serve as troopers on a perfect equality with the rest of the men."—*N. 1899

— In this year, The Rough Riders, by Theodore Roosevelt, appeared.—Encyclop. Brit., XXIII: 711. Commenting on it, Mr. Dooley (Finley Peter Dunne) said, with characteristic humour: "If I was him I'd call th' book 'Alone in Cubia.' " He suggested as other titles: "Th' Biography iv a Hero be Wan who Knows;" "Th' Darin' Exploits iv a Brave Man be an Actual Eye-Witness, th' Account iv th' Destruction iv Spanish Power in th' Ant Hills, as it fell fr'm th' lips iv Teddy Rosenfelt an' was took down be his own hands."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 206. 1899 —

In this year, the corruption in New York City became almost as bad as in 1894 (q. v., Ja 31), when the Lexow investigation was held, and the legislature again determined to investigate, and for this purpose sent to the city a committee, which was generally known as the "Mazet Committee." Gustavus Myers thus describes its work and the results: "This body's prestige suffered from the charge that its investigation was unduly partizan. Moreover, it was generally felt by the public that its work was inefficiently carried on. Nevertheless, it produced a considerable array of facts showing the existence of gross maladministration. —

"It was disclosed that every member of the Tammany Society or of the organization's executive committee, held office, or was a favored contractor. Over $700,000 of city orders went to favored contractors without bidding. Various city departments were 'characterized by unparalleled ignorance and unfairness.' The payrolls in some of the most important departments had increased $1,500,000 between July 1, 1898, and September 1, 1899, and the employees had increased over 1,000, excluding policemen, firemen and teachers. The testimony proved the increasing inefficiency and demoralization of the Police and Fire Departments. It further proved the existence of a ramified system of corruption similar to that revealed by the Lexow Committee.

"The disclosures attracting the greatest public attention were those relating to the Ice Trust, the Ramapo project, and Mr. Croker's relations to the city government. On April 14 the Committee exposed a conspiracy between the Ice Trust and the Dock and other departments of the city government, to create and maintain a monopoly of New York's ice supply. Six days after the exposure, Mayor Van Wyck, as he subsequently admitted in his testimony before Judge Gaynor, acquired 5,000 shares, worth $500,000, of the Ice Truck stock, alleging that he paid $57,000 in cash for them; but although urged to substantiate his statement, did not produce proof that he actually paid anything. It was shown conclusively before the committee that the arrangement between the Ice Trust and the city officials was such as to compel the people to pay 60 cents a hundred pounds, and that the trust had stopped the sale of five-cent pieces of ice, practically cutting off the supply of the poor. Many other Tammany officials were equally involved. Proceedings were begun some time after, looking to an official investigation of the Ice Trust's affairs, and charges against Mayor Van Wyck were filed with Gov. Roosevelt. The latter were finally dismissed by the Governor in November, 1900.

"In August, the committee uncovered the Ramapo scheme. The Ramapo Water Company, with assets 'of at least the value of $5,000,' sought to foist upon the city a contract calling for payment from the city treasury of an enormous amount in annual installments of about $5,110,000, in return for at least 200,000,000 gallons of water a day, at $70 per million gallons. This was proved to be an attempt toward a most gigantic swindle. Had not Controller Coler exposed and frustrated the scheme, the Tammany members of the Board of Public Improvement would have rushed the contract to passage.

"Mr. Croker's testimony threw a flood of light upon his political views and standards as well as his powers and emoluments as 'boss.' He acknowledged that he had a powerful influence over the Tammany legislators at Albany, whose actions he advised, and that he exercised the same influence upon local officials. He readily conceded that he was the most powerful man he knew of. . . .

"Mr. Croker also admitted that judicial candidates were assessed in their districts. In fact, some of the Judges themselves named the respective sums to the committee. Judge Pryor testified that he had been asked for $10,000 for his nomination for a vacant half-term in the Supreme Court. Other judicial candidates, it was understood, paid from $10,000 to $25,000 for nominations. Mr. Croker maintained that the organization was entitled to all the judicial, executive, administrative—in brief, all offices—because 'that is what the people voted our ticket for.' Mr. Croker refused to answer many questions tending to show that he profited by a silent partnership in many companies which benefited directly or indirectly by his power. . . . He declined to answer the

— had been given to him without the payment of a dollar; it was his 'private affair.'

"'We are giving the people pure organization government,' he said. He referred to the thoroughness of discipline in the Wigwam, and stated that the only way to succeed was to keep the whip in hand over his henchmen. It took 'a lot of time,' and he 'had to work very hard at it.' Tammany was built up, he said, not only upon the political principles it held, but upon the way its members sustained one another in business. 'We want the whole business if we can get it;' 'to the party belong the spoils;' 'we win, and we expect everyone to stand by us;' 'I am working for my pocket all the time,' were some of Mr. Croker's answers, most of them told in anything but grammatical English.

"The general opinion obtained that the committee's work would have been far more effective and free from charges of partizan bias, if Thomas C. Platt, the Republican 'boss,' had been summoned concerning his alleged political connection with the great corporations and financial interests, as Mr. Croker had been.

"Apparently the disclosures made no deep impression on the city administration, for matters went along pretty much as before."—Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 285–88, citing the stenographic minutes of the investigation.

10 Mayor Van Wyck, in his second annual message to the common council, says: During 1898, "A sharp halt had to be called in the extravagant use of Municipal credit which during the year 1897 had characterized the financial administration of practically all of the public corporations consolidated into the present city. The financial condition of the new City of New York in its first year of Consolidation demanded that a temporary period of recuperation be afforded before new public improvements could be begun. This policy has been carried out to the letter. Since January 1, 1898, not one dollar has been added to the net funded debt of the city on account of public improvements undertaken subsequent to that date, though in some cases it was found necessary to authorize the issue of bonds in the year 1898, to provide funds for the liquidation of liabilities incurred prior to that year, but for which no bonds had been previously authorized. . . .

"The financial scheme of the Charter, so far as it related to making provision for the operating expenses of the city during the year 1898 was peculiar. Each municipal corporation about to become a part of Greater New York was directed to prepare a budget of its expenses for the year 1898 just as though it was to continue its separate and independent existence, unaffected by the decreed consolidation. The sum total of these budgets then became available for apportionment by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the new City of New York to appropriations to be made by that Board for the use of the departments and offices created by the Charter. If the aggregate of these budgets were found to be insufficient to provide for the proper conduct of the city government during the year 1898, the Charter authorized the issue of special revenue bonds redeemable from the tax levy of 1899 to provide for whatever deficiency might thus arise. Jan. 10

"The total of the appropriations made by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for expenditure in 1898 was $77,559,332.37. The aggregate sum of the budgets prepared by the ninety-five municipal corporations which were consolidated fell short of this amount by $7,175,850.88, due principally to the fact (which had apparently been overlooked by the Charter Commissioners) that in many instances the fiscal year of these corporations did not correspond with the calendar year 1898, and that funds had, therefore, been provided by them only for portions of that year. This financial scheme, while it has proved workable, is open to one serious objection. By throwing the deficiencies of the consolidated budgets for 1898 into the tax levy of 1899, the Budget of the current year has been abnormally increased by this sum of $7,175,850.88....

"The financial situation of the city during the year 1898 has been such as to restrict public improvements within very narrow limits. The same restrictions will not, however, exist to so great an extent during the current year, and the many improvements which the public have a right to expect will receive careful consideration."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1899), I: 82–96.

The "work of remodeling the ground plan of the Grand Central Station" is to be commenced immediately. "The alterations to be made will be extensive and costly. The transformation will be carried on with little obstruction to the ordinary business of the station; consequently nearly a year's time will be consumed in the work. The most important change will be the removal of the partition walls between the outgoing and incoming train sheds, mak- 25

"This waiting room will open upon a concourse about fifty feet broad, extending through the station from Vanderbilt to Depew Avenues. In order to make room for this concourse about two car lengths of the tracks in the station will be removed. Passengers, after leaving the waiting room, will cross this concourse to reach departing trains, and passengers from incoming trains will be able to make their way to the streets without passing through the waiting rooms. Covered carriageways will be built on Forty-second Street and on Vanderbilt Avenue, similar to the arrangement on the Thirty-fourth Street side of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria.

"The baggage room will occupy practically the same space that is taken up now by the New York Central waiting room. It will be on a level with the street and not in the basement, as was originally planned. The two tracks nearest to the baggage room will be used exclusively for baggage cars, which will be backed into the station and filled just prior to the departure of each train. There will be a large restaurant under the waiting room. The latter room, it is asserted, will contain 1,000 more square feet than that of the big south terminal station in Boston."—N. Y. Times, Mr 25, 1899. See also ibid., Ap 17, Je 11, and Jl 12, 1899. See O 23.

28 The common council passes a resolution requesting Mayor Van Wyck to appoint a committee to extend a welcome to the commander, officers, and crew of the U. S. steamer "Raleigh," the first cruiser of Dewey's victorious squadron to return to New York.—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1899), I: 816. See Ap 15.

29 The rapid transit commission asks the legislature to pass an act empowering it to contract for the construction and operation of an underground road by means of private capital. The bill passed the legislature, but, after a public hearing on May 3, it was vetoed by the mayor. This veto ended the plan to appeal to private capital in aid of rapid transit. Soon afterward, Mayor Van Wyck, in his public utterances, committed his administration to the building of an underground rapid transit road.—Ann. Cyclop. (1899), 560–61. See N 12.

Apr. The corner-stone of the "Second Church of Christ, Scientist,
2 Borough of Manhattan, City of New York," is laid on this Easter Sunday, at the south-west corner of Central Park West and 68th St. This church was organized in October, 1891 (q. v.), and the building was the first one of this religious denomination erected on Manhattan Island.—Information supplied by Mr. Chas. E. Heitman, Christian Science Com. on Publication of the State of N. Y. See, further, N 30, 1899.

11 The Spanish-American War formally terminates when ratifications of the Treaty of Paris (see D 10, 1898) are exchanged at Washington. Pres. McKinley immediately proclaims the event.—N. Y. Times, Ap 11, 12, 1899.

15 The U. S. cruiser "Raleigh," the vessel of Dewey's fleet to fire the first gun at Manila, arrives at New York. On April 17, she came up to the city and was welcomed by Mayor Van Wyck, who extended to Capt. Coghlan and his men the freedom of the city. This reception was followed by a naval procession in which the "Raleigh" proceeded as far as Grant's tomb, and, after saluting it with 21 guns, returned to her station off the Battery.—Ann. Cyclop. (1899), 564.

Additional documents (see Mr 25, 1898) relating to Colonial 4
New York, preserved by Gerard and Evert Bancker, early surveyors of N. Y. City and State, are sold by Henkels, Phila., auctioneer, for the estate of the late Jas. A. Bancker. These include early manuscript surveys, printed broadsides, early newspapers, books, early American portraits, prints, etc. The catalogue of these items (a copy of which is in the author's collection) comprises Part V of Henkels' Cat. No. 821. The Bancker manuscripts now in the N. Y. Pub. Library were acquired at this sale. For a list of the most interesting of these, see descrip. of Pl. 46A-b, I: 358–60. The catalogue, however, pp. 201–3, lists many others, not acquired by this library. Among them are:

"Plan of Dominick Lynch's Rope Walk, June 3, 1788. Bordered by Mary, Hester and Bayard Streets. Drawn by E. Bancker. Folio."

"Plan of the Ground as laid out to be Railed Round the King's Statue, drawn by Gerard Bancker. [No date.] Folio."

"Survey and Sketch of Bedloe's Island, at the request of a Committee of the Corporation, Jan. 1772. By Gerard Bancker. Folio."

"Plan of St. George's Ferry, made the 19 Aug., 1774, by Gerard Bancker."

"Plan of the Ground in the South Ward of the City of New York, which has lately been taken in as part of the Battery. Surveyed Sept. 8, 1775, by Gerard Bancker. Folio."

15 The rapid transit commissioners adopt the form of a contract for building the rapid transit tunnel or subway and invite contractors to submit bids, on Jan. 15, 1900, for the construction and operation of the road. "The letter of invitation to contractors required that every proposal should be accompanied by a certified check upon a National or State Bank, payable to the order of the Comptroller, for $150,000, and that within ten days after acceptance, or within such further period as might be prescribed by the Board, the contract should be duly executed and delivered. The amount to be paid by the city for the construction was $35,000,000 and an additional sum not to exceed $2,750,000 for terminals, station sites, and other purposes. The construction was to be completed in four years and a half, and a term of the lease from the city to the contractor was fixed at fifty years, with a renewal, at the option of the contractor, for twenty-five years at a rental to be agreed upon by the city, not less than the average rental for the then preceding ten years. The rental for the fifty-year term was fixed at an amount equal to the annual interest upon the bonds issued by the city for construction and 1 per cent. additional, such 1 per cent. during the first ten years to be contingent in part upon the earnings of the road."—*Interborough Rapid Transit (The Subway) in N. — In this year, antitoxin for diphtheria and the X-ray were just coming into use.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 61.

— In this year the U. S. sent Wm. H. Taft and four others as a commission to set up civil government in the Philippines, began the work of fixing the permanent relations between Cuba and the U. S., and devised a form of civil government for Porto Rico.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 52.

— The population of Manhattan Island is 1,850,093.—13th U. S. Census Bulletin (1910).

— Early in this year, the first housing exhibition held in New York City took place, under the auspices of the tenement-house committee of the Charity Organization Society (see 1898). It was held in the old Sherry building on Fifth Ave. and lasted for two weeks, during which time it was visited by many thousands of people. The object was to arouse the community to a knowledge of existing tenement conditions. The exhibit consisted of models, drawings, and photographs, showing the evils of present conditions, model tenements in America and Europe, suburban tenements and working people's cottages, model lodging-houses and working men's hotels, parks, playgrounds, libraries, baths, cooking schools, etc., as well as maps and charts showing density of population, death rates, poverty and disease statistics, etc. One model, made of cardboard, showed all the tenement-houses on the block bounded by Chrystie, Forsyth, Canal, and Bayard Sts.

In connection with the exhibition, the committee held an architectural competition for the best designs of model tenements on lots of 25, 50, 75, and 100 ft., the programme for which was prepared by the present author. Over 140 designs were submitted, and the first prize ($500 and the carrying out of the design) was awarded to R. Thomas Short, of the firm of Hard and Short.

The exhibition resulted in the appointment by Gov. Roosevelt of the "state tenement house commission" of 1900 (see Ap 4) and the passage of the tenement-house law of 1901 (q. v., Ap 12).—De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: 111–16.

Jan. 9 Mayor Van Wyck, in his annual message to the board of aldermen, gives a detailed account of the city's financial condition, the proceedings in reference to the new bridges to be constructed over the East River between Manhattan and Brooklyn and Manhattan and Queens, the bonds to be issued for various public improvements, etc. Regarding rapid transit, he says: "The Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners have during the year past prepared plans for the construction of an underground railroad, commencing at the City Hall Park and extending into the Borough of The Bronx, and, in conformity with the statute, have published notice calling for bids for the building and operation of the road. It is earnestly to be hoped that the result will justify the expectations of those having this work in charge, and that the day is now near at hand when this much-desired public improvement will be available to the City."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1900), I: 12–26.

16 The contract for the construction of the New York City Rapid Transit Tunnel, or "Subway" (see N 15, 1899), is awarded to John B. McDonald, one of the two bidders.—N. Y. World, Ja 16 and 17, 1900. "To secure the performance of the contract by Mr. McDonald the city required him to deposit $1,000,000 in cash as security for construction, to furnish a bond with surety for $5,000,000 as security for construction and equipment, and to furnish another bond of $1,000,000 as continuing security for the performance of the contract. The city in addition to this security had, under the provisions of the Rapid Transit Act, a first lien on the equipment, and it should be mentioned that at the expiration of the lease and renewals (if any) the equipment is to be turned over to the city, pending an agreement or arbitration upon the question of the price to be paid by the city. The contract (which covered about 200 printed pages) was minute in detail as to the work to be done, and sweeping powers of supervision were given the city through the Chief Engineer of the Board, who by the contract was made arbiter of all questions that might arise as to the interpretation of the plans and specifications. The city had been fortunate in securing for the preparation of plans the services of Mr. William Barclay Parsons, one of the foremost engineers of the country. For years as Chief Engineer of the Board he had studied and developed the various plans and it was he who was to superintend on behalf of the city the completion of the work. . . . When the bid was accepted by the city no arrangements had been made for the capital necessary to carry out the contract. After its acceptance, Mr. McDonald not only found little encouragement in his efforts to secure the capital, but discovered that the surety companies were unwilling to furnish the security required of him, except on terms impossible for him to fulfill. . . .

"At this critical point, Mr. McDonald sought the assistance of Mr. August Belmont. It was left to Mr. Belmont to make the final analysis, and avert the failure which impended. . . . Mr. Belmont looking through and beyond the intricacies of the Rapid Transit Act, and the complications of the contract, saw that he who undertook to surmount the difficulties presented by the attitude of the surety companies must solve the whole problem. It was not the ordinary question of financing a railroad contract. He saw that the responsibility for the entire rapid transit undertaking must be centered, and that a compact and effective organization must be planned, which could deal with every phase of the situation.

"Mr. Belmont without delay took the matter up directly with the Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners, and presented a plan for the incorporation of a company to procure the security required for the performance of the contract, to furnish the capital necessary to carry on the work, and to assume supervision over the whole undertaking. Application was to be made to the Supreme Court to modify the requirements with respect to the sureties by striking out a provision requiring the justification of the sureties in double the amount of liabilities assumed by each and reducing the minimum amount to be taken by each surety from $500,000 to $25,000. The new corporation was to execute as surety a bond for $4,000,000, the additional amount of $1,000,000

1900 Jan. 16 to be furnished by other sureties. A beneficial interest in the bonds required from the sub-contractors was to be deposited with the city as further security for the performance of the contract. The plan was approved by the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners, and pursuant to the plan, the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Company was organized. The Supreme Court granted the application to modify the requirements as to the justification of sureties and the contract was executed February 21, 1900. . . .

"The incorporators of the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Company were Charles T. Barney, August Belmont, John B. McDonald, Walter G. Oakman, and William A. Read."—Interborough Rapid Transit (The Subway) in N. Y. (pub. by I. R. T. Co., 1904), 18–20, 21. See also Bd. of Rapid Transit R. R. Com'rs, Contract for Construction and Operation of Rapid Transit R. R. with supplemental agreements to Nov. 24, 1903, 2–182, 225–52.

Wm. J. Gaynor criticized the contract, stating that the sum which the city was to pay the contractor for constructing the subway ($35,000,000) was far too high, and that the profit which the city was to receive for the 50-year lease was "paltry as a return for such a valuable property, the greatest revenue producing municipal railroad in the world." In addition, he said: "The statute under which our rapid transit commissioners act could scarcely be better drafted to work to the disadvantage of the community. The fundamental wrong of it is that, while the city constructs at its own expense, the public work when completed is not at the city's immediate disposal to lease to the highest bidder for a moderate term of years. The statute permits a contract to do the work and take a lease for 50 years, with a renewal of 25 years, to be put up for bids at the outset. That it is impossible for such a method to result otherwise than disadvantageously to the community is manifest. Not to mention other reasons, many would bid for the contract to construct who know nothing of operating railroads and do not want to go into that business, and many would bid for a lease of a completed subway railroad who are not contractors and have no facilities for constructing it. For one who would bid in advance for the combined contract to construct and operate for a term of years, many would bid for the contract to construct only, and many others for the lease only."—Municipal Affairs (1901), 433 et seq. See Mr 24, 1900, and My 6, 1902.

20 The Rider and Driver for Jan. 20 and Feb. 10, 1900, and Jan. 5, 1901, contained three articles with the respective titles: "Reform in Our Street Traffic Most Urgently Needed," "Suggestions for the Management of Carriages at Entertainments," and "Rules of the Road Revised." These, together, were published in a pamphlet, having an introduction by Wm. Phelps Eno, dated Feb. 1, 1902, under the general title: Suggested Rules and Reforms for the Management of Street Traffic, Designed to Minimize Accidents and Prevent Confusion, Delay and Blockades. A copy of this pamphlet is filed in N. Y. P. L. The suggestions contained in these articles form part of the traffic regulations later adopted and still in force.

Feb. 21 Miss Olga Nethersole and her managers are arrested in New York for producing "Sapho." Commenting on it, the Evening Post said: "It is not necessary to soil the columns of this paper with a particular account of the sickly sentimentality of Mr. Daudet's book or the reeking compost of filth and folly that the crude and frivolous Mr. Clyde Fitch has dug out of it, with which to mire the stage. It is enough to say that this heavy and foul rigmarole of lust, sap-headed sentiment, and putrid nonsense tells a vulgar, commonplace, and tiresome story about a harlot and a fool, showing how, in a carnal way, they fascinated each other, how the fool clove to his folly, and how the harlot, having bamboozled the fool, went away with a criminal rogue just out of prison. Into details of the relations between these cattle those commentators may enter who have a taste for muck and who can deliver expert opinions upon it." The Press, however, said: "There is nothing shocking in it, and the rush to see it may stop when this fact is discovered, but it deserves some support for its own sake."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 518.

Grant, 92; John Marshall, 91; Thomas Jefferson, 90."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 518–19.

9 The N. Y. Times publishes a detailed statement that the sum of $3,095,000 is paid annually by the gambling-house keepers of the city to the "gambling-house commission," which is said to be composed of two state senators, a representative of the pool-room proprietors, and the head of one of the city departments. According to the account, this commission receives and passes upon applications, establishes the tariff to be paid by the applicants, and supervises the collections.—N. Y. Times, Mr 9, 1900; Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 288–89. "Later, in the same month, the Grand Jury handed down a presentment arraigning the city officials for the sway enjoyed by the criminal and vicious classes.

"Neither the Grand Jury's presentment nor the Times's detailed statements had the slightest effect on the conduct of the city administration."—Ibid., 289.

As a result of the tenement-house exhibition (see 1900), the legislature authorises the governor to appoint a tenement-house commission "to make a careful examination into the tenement houses in cities of the first class; their condition as to the construction, healthfulness, safety, rentals, and the effect of tenement house life on the health, education, savings and morals of those who live in tenement houses, and all other phases of the so-called tenement house question in these cities that can affect the public welfare." The commissioners are to serve without salary and are required to make a detailed report to the legislature. The sum of $10,000 is appropriated for expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1900), chap. 279. 4

On April 16, Gov. Roosevelt appointed the commission. It organized on April 20, and Robert W. de Forest was elected chairman. On April 26, Lawrence Veiller was appointed secretary, and later Edward W. Whitney was chosen counsel and Winthrop E. Dwight associate counsel.

In the course of its investigations, the commission prepared a history of tenement-house reform in New York from 1834 to 1900, a history of tenement legislation from 1852 to 1900, a summary of laws in the leading American cities, a report on housing conditions in 27 of the largest cities, and a report on conditions in Europe. It consulted important city officials and obtained an expression of their views, inspected tenements in the course of construction in New York, investigated typical blocks of bad tenement-houses in Manhattan, The Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond, and Buffalo, made a special examination of rear tenements, and investigated the records of the fire department to determine the causes of fires in tenement-houses. Early in June, 1,600 circulars containing a list of 47 questions and asking for recommendations were sent out, and the commission thus received suggestions of great value. In October, a hearing was held in Buffalo, and in November and December seven hearings were held in New York, at which many persons testified.

The commission made its report to the legislature on Feb. 18, 1901, submitting the draft of a new tenement-house law for cities

1900 Apr. 4 of the first class and recommending the creation of a separate tenement-house department for the city of New York. The law was passed on April 12, 1901 (q. v.), and the tenement-house department was created under the amended New York charter (see Ap 22, 1901). —1st Ann. Rep., Tenement House Dept. (1902–3); De Forest & Veiller, The Tenement House Problem, I: xiii, 3–68; II: 93–100. The author served as chairman of the committee on new buildings, and as a member of the committee which prepared the new law. Under this law, to Jan. 1, 1925, 35,669 tenement-houses were built in New York City and about 2,106,972 persons housed. During the same period, 6,088 "new law" tenements were erected in Manhattan, housing about 728,884 people.—Letter to the author from Walter C. Martin, tenement-house commissioner, Ap 8, 1926.

13 The house of representatives, by a vote of 240 to 15, adopts a resolution favouring a constitutional amendment for the election of U. S. senators by direct vote of the people, instead of through the legislatures. The senate did not concur until June 12, 1911. Thereupon the amendment was submitted to the states, was ratified by the necessary number, and election of senators by state legislatures ceased on May 31, 1913.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 521.

23 The legislature authorises the board of estimate and apportionment to appropriate $50,000 "to aid in the erection of a monument in the borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, in memory of the martyrs who perished in the prison ships in New York harbor during the war of the revolution, owing to their patriotic fidelity to the cause of freedom, such money to be expended by the Prisonship Martyrs Monument Association of the United States, a corporation created under the laws of the state of New York, under the direction of the governor of this state and the secretary of war of the United States."—Laws of N. Y. (1900), chap. 617. See N 14, 1908.

24 The legislature passes "An Act to authorize the city of New York to pay to soldiers, sailors and marines of the United States army and navy during the late war with Spain, who were in the employ of the city or any of its departments at the time of their enlistment, the salary or per diem compensation to which they would have been entitled if they had remained in the employ of the city." —*Laws of N. It also recommends the appointment of a committee of 100 citizens to welcome the delegates, resolves to confer upon them the freedom of the city, and authorises the appointment of a committee of 30, fifteen from each board, to act in cooperation with the committee of 100.—From original among "Approved Papers, Municipal Assembly, 1900," in city clerk's record-room.

26 The U. S. army commission, appointed to investigate yellow fever, and composed of Drs. Walter Reed, James Carroll, Jesse W. Lazear, and Aristides Agramonte, arrives at Havana. The experiments of Reed and his colleagues proved the truth of the theory propounded by Dr. Carlos Finlay of Havana, that the disease is spread solely by the female Stegomyia mosquito. On Feb. 4, 1901, their epochal report was read before the Pan-American Medical Congress at Havana. Thereupon, Dr. Wm. C. Gorgas, chief sanitary officer in Havana, initiated a campaign to destroy this species of mosquito, and within a few months he had completely exterminated yellow fever there. In 1904, Gorgas was put in charge of the sanitation of the Panama Canal Zone, and after much controversy with officials who disagreed with him concerning the cause of the disease, he was permitted to use the methods he had developed at Havana, as a result of which 1905 saw the last case of yellow fever in Panama.

"Estimates vary as to the relative importance of the contributions of Gorgas, Reed, and Finlay. . . . It will serve if we consider the three coequal. Finlay developed the theory; Reed confirmed it; and Gorgas built his work upon it."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 432–64, 524.

29 "Richard Croker's circular asking for contributions [to aid in the election of Democrats in November] was sent out yesterday to all city officials who owe their places to Tammany Hall. . . .

"While there is no request for specific sums in the circular, the officials of the departments consult generally with their superiors or some person in political power as to the amount which should be sent to Mr. Croker in compliance with the request. The sum agreed upon is usually 5 per cent. of the yearly salary of each official. Some prominent office-holders who have other sources of revenue outside of city positions, as contracts, important commissionerships, or lucrative receiverships, are expected to contribute more in proportion than the clerks and subordinate officials. . . .

"The city officials will receive their salary checks for the month of September to-day, and in less than two days their subscriptions are expected to be in the treasury of Tammany Hall. In large departments the commissioners and deputies have quietly sent word around to all the subordinates that, while there is no compulsion, the organization expects every man to make a contribution of about 5 per cent. of his salary this year.

"The usual system adopted is for some official in each department to agree to hold himself responsible for the collection and delivery of the money to the Tammany treasury. As each official pays his assessment his name is checked off the roll. Those who do not pay are notified that cash is expected, and if this does not prove effectual the Wiskinkie is sent around with the 'blacklist' to make collections. Any man who refuses is booked for severe discipline or the loss of his job. Few Tammany men ever refuse. . . .

"The amount of money which will be paid to Mr. Croker as Chairman of the Finance Committee is variously estimated by the politicians.

"An expert figured for the New York Times reporter last evening that about $10,000,000 of the yearly pay rolls of the city departments were subjected to a 5 per cent. assessment. This would bring in to the Tammany treasury $500,000 from city officials alone. Large contractors are also expected to contribute liberally, and every politician who derives a revenue indirectly from the city must contribute. From these sources it was estimated that at least $500,000 more would be contributed, so that Tammany Hall would have not less than $1,000,000 to spend in the campaign. All candidates for public offices are also expected to contribute liberally."—Some Things Richard Croker Has Said and Done (pub. by City Club of N. Y., July, 1901), 14–16, citing N. Y. Times, S 29, 1900.

26 The common council resolves to appoint a joint committee of 12 "to make all necessary arrangements for the proper celebration of the commencement of the twentieth century." The resolution is passed with the following preamble, "Whereas, On December 31, at midnight, a century of superb accomplishments, in science and the arts of civilization, will come to an end, thus marking the completion of a cycle of time in which the human race has lifted itself to heights of strength and glory, undreamed of in preceding ages; and

"Whereas, At the moment when the Nineteenth Century will have terminated, a new century will be born whose possibilities will be greater than its magnificent inheritance; and

"Whereas, The nations of the earth will then survey with retrospective pride the miracles of science which have beautified the cities of the world, which have drawn the nations of the earth into a closer union, which have leashed the elemental forces of nature, which have weighed the sun and analyzed the constituents of the most distant star, and which have decreased the sum of human suffering; and

"Whereas, The nations of the earth, not forgetful of the fact that the century which will then have passed has seen the advent of the steamship, the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the Roentgen Ray and wireless telegraphy, nevertheless turn their faces toward the dawn of the Twentieth Century with undiminished faith in the continued progress of mankind and with an unfaltering belief that the wonders of the future will transcend in value all the treasures of past knowledge and attainment; and

"Whereas, The people of The City of New York are confident that the Twentieth Century will bring to our beloved country preeminence in the generous arts of peace and triumph in any struggle which may be thrust upon us in defence of our national rights and honor; and

"Whereas, The inventiveness of the human mind, displayed in the construction of death-dealing agencies, will, in the not distant future, make war impossible and hasten the coming of the day when international disputes will be adjusted by arbitration."—From original resolutions among "Approved Papers, Municipal Assembly, 1900," in city clerk's record-room. On Dec. 31, the board of estimate was requested to appropriate $2,500 for the celebration.—Ibid. See also D 31, 1899; and D 31, 1900.

— Between 1901 and 1905, the six volumes of the Ecclesiastical Records of the State of New York were published, under the supervision of Hugh Hastings, state historian. The active work of translation, arrangement, etc., was conducted by the Rev. Edward T. Corwin, who also prepared an index, which appeared in 1916.

— In this year there was published privately General Ordinances of the City of New York under The Greater New York Charter. The volume was compiled and annotated by George Whitfield Brown, Jr., of the New York Bar.

— In this year, A Landmark Hist. of N. Y., by A. Ulmann, was published.

— About this time, "the movement began that was to transform Fifth Avenue from a residential thoroughfare into a shopping street beside which the vaunted glories of London's Bond Street and Paris's Rue de la Paix seem dim."—Maurice, Fifth Ave., 259.

— The cable traction system was changed in 1901 to an electrically equipped system on the Broadway, Columbus Ave. and Lexington Ave. lines of the Metropolitan Street Railway Co. The last cable was taken out May 25.—Street Railway Jour., XVI: 830; XVII: 681.

10 The great Texas oil boom is started by the discovery of a well at Beaumont, which spouted 200 feet into the air. It took nine days to bring it under control. Ex-Mayor Samuel M. Jones, of Toledo, who saw the well at this time, said: "It is the greatest oil-well ever discovered in the United States. Its advent means that liquid fuel is to be the fuel of the twentieth century. Smoke, cinders, ashes, and soot will disappear along with war and other evidences of barbarism. During the next few years you will see locomotives passing through Corsicana using oil for fuel, and ocean steamers will be using it, too."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 556.

15 In his annual message, Mayor Van Wyck informs the common council that the budget of 1900 was $3,769,705.41 more than that of 1899, and that the budget of 1901 is $4,303,767.57 over 1900. Increases are due largely to mandatory legislation in regard to teachers' salaries and other school matters.

In addition, he says: "In February, 1900, the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners awarded a contract for the building of a system of underground rapid transit, extending from the City Hall, in the Borough of Manhattan through that borough and into the Borough of The Bronx. . . . During the year 1900 therefore a system of Rapid Transit which has been long promised to the people of the city and so long looked forward to, has taken definite shape and its completion has been assured by the execution of a contract for the doing of the necessary work and by the assumption on the part of the City of an aggregate indebtedness of $36,500,000, the amount necessary to carry out and complete the proposed system according to the plans and specifications adopted by the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners.

"It is further gratifying to call attention to the fact that work under the proposed contract has been commenced promptly in various parts of the city, and is steadily progressing.

"It still remains for the City to provide such an addition to the system already adopted as will insure an adequate and complete system of underground rapid transit between the boroughs of Manhattan and The Bronx and the Borough of Brooklyn. While the demand for rapid transit may proceed from boroughs or localities in the city, the benefits to be derived from it are shared by the city as a whole. During the year 1900 the Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners have taken up and given consideration to proposed plans for this necessary extension to the Borough of Brooklyn. There is every reason to believe that the formalities required by law as prerequisite to the laying out of a route and the awarding of a contract for doing the work will be complied with during the current year."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1901), I: 62–85.

27 News arrives in the U. S. that Brig.-Gen. Frederick Funston has captured Emilio Aguinaldo, leader of the Filipino rebellion. The news is received with "almost hysterical jubilance."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 540.

28 Emperor William of Germany, dedicating an army barracks, thus enjoins his troops: "You . . . must be ready, day and night . . . to spill your blood, if need be, for your king and his house. . . . If ever . . . this town should rise . . . against its king in disobedience and insubordination, then the Alexander Grenadiers will hasten to the protection of their king, and, with their bayonets, soon teach the insolent a good lesson. . . . May valor, loyalty, and unquestioning obedience be the virtues which distinguish this regiment. Its deeds will then meet with the approval of me, its king and master. . . . Devotion to king and fatherland must be sealed with blood and life. . . . We shall always be the victors. . . . For there is a mighty Ally, that is the eternal God in Heaven. . . ." This speech was widely criticized as tending to incite revolt.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 557.

29 A number of anti-Tammany organizations meet at the Waldorf-Astoria to "formulate a plan of action for the coming Mayorality election." A "Committee of Sixty" is appointed to manage the campaign.—N. Y. Times, F 9 and Mr 30, 1901. 22 The Greater New York charter is amended in several important respects. The bicameral municipal assembly is changed to a single board of aldermen; the terms of mayor, comptroller, and borough presidents are reduced from four years to two, and the mayor is made eligible for re-election; the mayor's power of removal, heretofore limited to six months after entry to office, is now unlimited; the "Board of Public Improvements" is abolished and its powers transferred in most part to the presidents of the boroughs; the last named officials are added to the membership of the board of estimate and apportionment, which now will be composed of elective officers only, the corporation counsel and the president of the department of taxes and assessments no longer being members; the powers of the borough presidents are further increased in that a bureau of buildings in each borough displaces the present centralized department of buildings, also in that the departments of sewers Apr.
and highways are abolished and that work transferred to the 22 boroughs, also in that the powers of the commissioner of public buildings, lighting, and supplies, so far as they relate to public buildings, are transferred to the borough heads; the commissioner of water supply now becomes the commissioner of water supply, gas, and electricity; local improvement boards are given more power, inasmuch as approval by the borough president and by the board of estimate and apportionment is all that is requisite to the beginning of proceedings for local improvements; there is a time limit of six weeks within which action on bond issues and grants of franchises must be taken by the board of aldermen; a tenement-house department is created; single heads instead of commissions are to administer departments in the future.—Laws of N. Y. (1901), chap. 466; Ash, The N. Y. Charter and Appendixes (1901), second ed., iii–v. The Outlook editor deems most of these changes important and desirable. Concerning the amendment first named he says: "It appears quite clear that the reasons for two chambers in State and Nation do not apply in a city where the legislature is rather a business than a political body." The amendment last named is spoken of as meeting with "almost universal favor." The amendment open to most question he declares to be that reducing the length of terms.—Outlook, Ap 13, 1901, 840–41.

The Greater New York Democracy (anti-Tammany Demo- 10 crats) organizes at the Hoffman House and pledges itself to work for the following objects:

"To establish a clean and business-like City Government.

"To secure to all Democrats a voice in the nomination of candidates for public office.

"To destroy the 'one-man' power, under which our great city has been degraded, most of our public officials debased, and all of our taxpayers overburdened by the reckless squandering of the public monies.

"To abolish the practice now in vogue in nearly all public departments of exacting unlawful tribute from citizens transacting business with them, and of utilizing the powers vested in the head of departments in furthering and influencing private and personal interests to the detriment of the public interest.

"To utterly root out, and wipe out, the vile partnership between those in control of our City Government and the criminal classes.

"To discontinue the cruel practice of heads of city departments who, while maintaining and even increasing the compensation of high salaried subordinates, have the audacity to cut the city laborers to half time, thus allowing them only 50 per cent. of their comparatively scanty wages.

"To rescue the Democracy from the dishonor Tammany Hall has brought upon it, by forming a permanent Democratic organization, broad and liberal in its policy, that will truly represent the sentiment of all honest Democrats of this city."—N. Y. Times, My 11, 1901.

June 2 "Having conferred with many of the most eminent pathologists in this country as to the best method of setting on foot an original scientific research into the problems of medicine and hygiene, John D. Rockefeller has added to his already long list of benefactions.

"Mr. Rockfeller has placed at the disposal of a body of prominent medical men $200,000 to be available for immediate expenditure by an association incorporated under the name of 'The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.' The home of this institute, with such laboratories, staff, and equipment as may be found necessary, will be located in this city. . . ."—N. Y. Times, Je 2, 1901. The certificate of incorporation of the institute was filed with the secretary of state on June 13. The directors were: Wm. H. Welch, of Baltimore; T. Mitchell Prudden, C. A. Hertes, L. Emmett Holt, and Herman W. Biggs, of N. Y. City; Simon Flexner, of Philadelphia; and Theobald Smith, of Boston.—Ibid., Je 14, 1901.

"At the end of the first year, Mr. Rockefeller promised the additional sum of one million dollars toward the building of a laboratory and the support of the work for the next nine years. From 1901 to 1904 the funds of the Institute were applied only in the form of grants to support the work of investigators in different parts of the world. In 1904, anticipating the completion of its own laboratory, the Institute leased a small building, formerly a part of the Nursery and Child's Hospital, at No. 127 East Fiftieth Street, and gave it a simple equipment for research in pathology, physiology, and chemistry. Oct. 1 The City Club of New York issues a pamphlet entitled Ten Months of Tammany. "What are you going to do about it?" Where there is so much smoke is there no fire? It gives details of the inefficiency and corruption of the Tammany officials, the alliance between vice and crime and the police, the extravagance under the Tammany régime, etc. It contains the following preface: "This record of ten months of Tammany rule from the 1st of December, 1900, is enough. No sane man can read this record and fail to see that the Tammany administration is extravagant, careless of the welfare of the people, and corrupt. This pamphlet is not presented as legal proof; but the plain facts stated in it, after all allowance has been made for possible errors, can not be made square with any other explanation than that the Tammany administration is all that its enemies say.

"Again and again Police Commissioner Murphy declares that gambling and open violations of law shall be stopped, and nothing happens.

"Again and again he assures us that gambling and pool-selling have been stopped, and hard on the heels of his assurances countless gambling-houses and pool-rooms are found in full operation.

"Again and again he bravely declares that he, and only he, will be the head of the police department, and openly turns over his most important powers to York and Devery.

"And what of Devery. Read about him. He is the last and best representative of Tammany. If you can stomach Devery, your manhood is far gone, and your sense of fair play is dead.

"We have a mayor to run the city, and keep things straight. What has he said about all these scandals, in his administration? Very little, except to say that Devery was the best chief of police that New York ever had. What has he done about them? Nothing. He appointed the men who make the scandals. He is responsible in law and in fact for the conduct of city affairs. And he does nothing.

"The conditions are blacker than under Tweed. He and his gang stole directly from the city. Croker and his gang know a better trick than that. Pay-rolls are increased in length and in amount; policemen pay for appointment, for promotion, and for transfer; corporations, ice-companies, guarantee companies, in which the Tammany leaders are interested get the city business and favors from the city departments; other corporations, using the streets or the wharves, pay for peace and privileges; violators of law, practically helpless in the hands of the police, pay for peace and privileges; merchants, from the peanut-seller to the largest wholesaler, pay for peace and privileges. We all pay for peace and privileges, because we want to be let alone in the only pursuit that is worth while,—the making of money. And so we become slaves to those who rob us.

"You don't even dare to speak sharply to a policeman when he deserves it. Much less would you risk the loss of money by standing on your rights as an American citizen with the building department or the health department. Perhaps your fathers fought in the Revolution, but you have not the courage of the few brave Irishmen in the police force and the street cleaning department, who, risking the loss of place, and perhaps danger to life and limb, have dared to speak out.

Oct. 1 "The instances given in the following pages are only a few of those arising in the time covered. They rest on no man's opinion. They are facts. Are they not enough to convince the patriotism and the manhood of this town that Tammany must go?"—From copy of pamphlet in N. Y. P. L.

Nov. 5 Seth Low, supported by the Republicans, the Citizens' Union, and the Greater New York Democracy (see My 10), is elected mayor over the Democratic candidate, Edward M. Shepard. The entire "fusion" ticket is successful in the boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and Richmond, although in Queens and The Bronx, the Democrats elect their candidates to the office of borough president.—N. Y. Times, N 6 7, 1901; Ann. Cyclop. (1901), 395.

"The scandals of Mayor Van Wyck's administration were conspicuous issues of the campaign of 1901. But there were two particularly noteworthy features pressed by the reformers in their indictment of Tammany. One of these issues, which made so deep an impression upon the public mind, especially in the densely populous East Side of New York City, was the flagrant immorality under which young girls of the tenderest age were often decoyed into lives of shame. The question thus presented was neither that of the 'suppression of vice' nor that of how people could be made virtuous by mandate of law. The question, as put to voters, was whether a system under which a corrupt, money-making combination of vicious lawbreakers with police and other officials should be allowed to continue an abhorrent traffic. . . .

"Nominated for District Attorney of New York County by the anti-Tammany forces, Mr. [William Travers] Jerome's speeches on these existing conditions made a keen impression and excited the deepest feeling, especially among the people of the East Side. Intricate questions of taxation and arrays of figures proving an exorbitant budget and the waste of public funds could not make the same appeal to their indignation as the portrayal of conditions menacing their home life and polluting their environment. The facts thus spread forth caused the most intense resentment against Tammany. . . .

"Another important issue of the municipal campaign of 1901 was the scandal growing out of the charges that William C. Whitney, Thomas F. Ryan, W. L. Elkins, P. A. B. Widener, Thomas Dolan and associates had looted the stockholders of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company of New York City of tens of millions of dollars. Whitney and Ryan were credited with being among the chief financial powers long controlling 'Boss' Croker; and by means of his control of Tammany Hall, and in turn New York City, securing franchises, privileges and rights of enormous value. This control was often equally true of the New York State legislature; subsequent developments, in fact, revealed that in years when the Legislature was dominantly Republican and therefore could not be ordered by Mr. Croker, both Republican and Democratic legislators were corrupted by the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, or by agents acting for it. . . .

"Mr. Jerome made profuse public promises that if he were elected District Attorney he would press investigation. . . .

"Mr. Jerome's denunciations and promises aroused great enthusiasm and large expectations; they had much effect in contributing to the result of the campaign, for it was popularly realized that while Tammany leaders accumulated their millions of dollars, yet back of these leaders, and secretly operating through them, were magnates of great financial power with their tens or hundreds of millions of dollars acquired largely by means of financial and industrial power conferred by legislation, permissory or statute, of various kinds. The electorate well knew that comparatively small grafters were numerous, but now it had the promise that the large spoliators, hitherto immune, would be exposed and prosecuted, if possible."—Myers, Hist. of Tammany Hall (1917), 290–95, and authorities there cited.

To the Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church

Gentlemen:

The recent announcement of the Vestry that on February 1st next the work at St. John's Chapel, Varick Street, will be abandoned, and the natural inference which follows, that the church building will be demolished, come as a surprise and shock to the community, saddening the hearts of those who reverence the ancient monuments of our city, and believe in the uplifting power of venerable traditions and accumulated effort, and the refining and ennobling influence of dignified and beautiful architecture.

Since this action was taken, many questions have been publicly raised as to the adequacy of the reasons for a step of such grave importance, affecting, more deeply perhaps than had been realized, the feelings of the community and the civic pride in a building which, by common consent, ranks second only to St. Paul's Chapel, among the very few remaining monuments of our past. These questions will, we doubt not, receive your further thoughtful consideration.

In our country there exists no public tribunal, charged with the care of our national monuments, and upon you, therefore, as sole trustees, devolves, in this case, a double responsibility, a responsibility which we believe you fully appreciate and will wisely discharge.

PETITION TO TRINITY VESTRY ASKING THAT ST. JOHN'S CHAPEL, VARICK ST., BE SPARED.
SEE NOV. 22, 1908 (PP. 2071–72).

1902 Hester, Suffolk, Division, Jefferson, Canal, and Essex Sts. and — East Broadway—see Je 22, 1897) was completed; Hudson Park (at Hudson, Leroy, and Clarkson Sts.—see 1898) was regulated; and 59th St. was widened from Fifth to Eighth Ave. Band concerts in the parks were also begun in this year.—Ann. Rep., Dept. of Parks (1902), 31–51.

— The work of deepening and widening the Ambrose Channel and the channels between Sandy Hook and Staten Island was continued during the year.—Ann. Cyclop. (1902), 427.

— In this year, the "Flatiron" (or Fuller) building at Broadway and 23d St. (see N 26, 1900) was built from designs by D. H. Burnham & Co. It is 20 storeys high.—Engineering Rec., Vol. 45, No. 13, p. 296; Fuller Building, New York (1902). See L. M. R. K., III: 967, and descrip. of Pl. 168, III: 851.

— In this year, the Blair building, designed by Carrère & Hastings, was erected at the n. w. cor. of Broad St. and Exchange Place. —Descrip. of Pl. 159-b, Vol. III.

— In this year, the United States Hotel, at the s. e. cor. of Fulton and Pearl Sts. (formerly Holt's Hotel or "Holt's Folly"—see Ja 3, 1833) was demolished, and a new building was begun on the site. This was completed early in 1903, and became known as No. 38 Fulton St.—L. M. R. K., III: 981; Abstracts of Wills, VI: 206. See also Weitenkampf, The Eno collection (1925), item 144.

Jan. In this month, the Carnegie Institution of Washington was — founded by Andrew Carnegie with an endowment of $10,000,000 in registered bonds, yielding 5% interest annually. In 1907, Mr. Carnegie increased the endowment by a further gift of $2,000,000, and in 1911 he gave an additional $10,000,000. Its object, as stated in the articles of incorporation, was "to encourage in the broadest and most liberal manner investigation, research, and discovery, and the application of knowledge to the improvement of mankind."—Ayres, Seven Great Foundations, 31–37.

6 Mayor Seth Low sends his first message to the board of aldermen, saying: "I welcome you to your honorable duties as the legislative body of The City of New York. The interests with which you are called upon to deal are worthy of the best services of any body of men. I congratulate you that it is your privilege to assume these duties at a time when the eyes of the city and of the whole United States are centered upon you. I beg to assure you of my hearty co-operation in all your efforts to serve the city well. . . .

"At the present time it is not possible for me to discuss the affairs of the City in a way to be of value; but, at your first meeting in February, I shall hope to send you a message dealing with such matters as may then call for decision.

"At this moment I wish, especially, to say a word through you to the people of the city. It is widely believed that during recent years a system has gradually been developed, in connection with the administration of the City, that calls for the illegitimate payment of money at every turn. To the historic phrase 'black-mail,' which originated when robber barons openly demanded money as the price of letting people alone, have been added, as words of similar evil omens the new and expressive terms 'shake-down' and 'rake-off.' Against such an iniquitous system, in all its forms, this administration is at open war, and I bespeak the co-operation of the people of the city to bring it to an end.

"If during the next two years any citizen or any employee of the City pays money illegitimately, either to avoid injury or inconvenience, or to secure his rights, he will do it because he wants to, and not because he must. No one, from the largest corporation to the poorest bootblack, need pay one dime for protection from harm, or to secure just treatment at the hands of the City government. No laborer, or other employee, need part with one cent of his salary to any one, either in or out of the City government. The whole force of the Administration will be exerted, continuously, aggressively, and in every possible way, to prevent and to punish this sort of iniquity. Any one asked to make an improper payment for any purpose has only to report the fact to the Mayor to be sure of protection and redress. Persons having business relations with the City, who meet with unreasonable delay in any department, are asked to report to the Mayor without hesitation. By itself, and without the aid of the people and of the City employees, the Administration can do little more than make this offer. With the co-operation of the citizens and of the City employees, the whole foul system can be broken up.

"It is only those who despair of securing good government in the United States who will believe that the practices I have alluded to can endure. It is only the enemies of democracy who believe that these things are inevitable. I ask for the co-operation of the people and of the employees of the City in destroying this iniquitous system, for the city's and for democracy's sake."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1902), I: 12–13. Announcement is made that Richard Croker has selected Lewis Nixon as his successor as leader of Tammany Hall. "When the educated Mr. Nixon assumed what he styled the leadership of Tammany Hall, not only seasoned politicians of all grades but also the sophisticated smiled skeptically. Tammany district leaders maintained in public an air of profound gravity and obedient acquiescence which caused general amusement. And when Mr. Nixon solemnly discussed his plans for the improvement of Tammany Hall, he was popularly regarded as an innocent. Even when Mr. Croker, as an apparent token of good faith, made Mr. Nixon chairman of the Tammany Finance Committee, few considered his appointment seriously; he was generally dubbed 'the phantom leader'. Having attended to Mr. Nixon's installation, Mr. Croker sailed abroad to his estate at Wantage; to all nominal appearances he had severed himself from Tammany politics. 13

Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of the Kaiser, arrives at New York in the "Kronprinz Wilhelm" on a visit to the United States. He is saluted by the harbour forts and welcomed by Mayor Low, the German ambassador, military and naval officials, and crowds of citizens. After visiting the Navy Yard and Governor's Island, he was entertained by the Deutscher Verein, and then went by train to Washington to call on Pres. Roosevelt.—N. Y. Herald, F 24, 1902. The city's official reception took place on Feb. 25 (q. v.). 23

Mayor Low formally receives Prince Henry of Prussia at the city hall and confers upon him the freedom of the city. In the evening, the prince was entertained at dinner by the mayor at the Metropolitan Club; and later he attended a gala performance at the Metropolitan Opera House.—N. Y. Herald, F 26, 1902. On Feb. 26, he lunched at Sherry's with 100 "Captains of Industry" from all over the country, reviewed a parade of 6,000 German-Americans, and met 1,200 representative American newspapermen at a banquet given in his honour at the Waldorf-Astoria. He then left for Washington to begin his tour through the country.—Ibid., F 27, 1902. 25

Mayor Low sends a message to the board of aldermen in which he gives an account of the financial condition of the city and calls to their attention other matters of importance. He says in part: ". . . in four years the income of the Sinking Funds, in connection with taxation, has offset approximately $60,000,000 of long-term bonds actually issued. Of this sum $35,000,000 represents permanent debt redeemed, and the remainder appears in the increase of the Sinking Funds. As a matter of fact, the Sinking Funds grow at the rate of $15,000,000 a year, and the rate of growth is constantly accelerating. . . . The Sinking Funds, it is true, keep down the net debt, and permit the issue of additional bonds for public improvements, but the burden of taxation for installments of permanent debt and on account of interest grows apace with Mar. 4

1902 Mar. 4 every increase of the gross debt. . . . In scarcely any year up to 1928 does the amount of bonds falling due appreciably exceed even the present annual accumulation of the Sinking Funds, and this rate of accumulation is constantly growing. In other words, in fifty years, the time for which the longest city bonds are made to run, even at the present annual rate of increase, the increase of the Sinking Funds would redeem $750,000,000 of debt, without regard to the capital of the Sinking Funds; whereas, at the present time, the gross funded debt of the city is only $416,000,000, and the net permanent funded debt a little less than $286,000,000.

"It is evident that here is something that calls for the most careful study . . . the taxpayers of the present generation are entitled to some relief from this partially unnecessary burden, which is already so needlessly heavy, and which, unfortunately, grows heavier year by year. . . .

"In the course of my examination into the present financial condition of the city, my mind has naturally reverted to the recent public discussion of the effect upon the city of the constitutional limitation upon its debt. . . . The general impression made upon me by my study of the situation is, that the city's resources are marvellous. On the other hand, it is also clear that the demands upon these resources are fully proportionate to the greatness of the city. . . .

"While not attempting at this time to consider in detail the needs of the city, there are three or four main lines of expenditure which must command the careful consideration of the authorities. First of all, in importance, I place the question of providing adequate school accommodations for the children of the city. . . . It is idle to improve the material conditions of the city, if it is to be done at the expense of leaving many thousands of its children in ignorance during the best years of their school life. . . .

"Next in importance as a problem affecting the future is the question of our water supply. . . . When the Croton Dam is completed provision will have been made for the storage of water on the Croton watershed upon a scale adequate to supply the present needs of Manhattan and The Bronx for an estimated period of four months without regard to rainfall. . . .

"The water supply of Brooklyn, on the other hand, is already inadequate for its needs. . . . The need of an increased water supply for Brooklyn, therefore, is both immediate and urgent. The natural way in which to meet the pressing need is to carry the present Brooklyn system further down Long Island. . . .

"The recent administration has fixed the main lines upon which the improvement of inter-borough communication must proceed for a number of years to come. There are at present three bridges planned for, and in course of construction across the East river. These bridges are now known as 'Bridge No. 2,' 'Bridge No. 3,' and 'Bridge No. 4,' respectively. These numbers relate to the order in which the construction of the bridges has been authorized, and not to their geographical relations to one another. . . . It is evidently the duty of the city authorities to carry forward all of these bridges as rapidly as possible. In particular, no effort will be spared to secure the early completion of Bridge No. 2, for it is clear that adequate relief for the existing Brooklyn Bridge cannot be had so quickly in any other way as by the opening of this second highway across the East river. [See Mr 18.]

"On the other hand, it is impossible to suppose that the present conditions prevailing at the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn Bridge are to remain unmodified during the twenty months which it is estimated must intervene before the completion of Bridge No. 2. The conditions at the Manhattan end of the Brooklyn Bridge involve not only the danger of life and limb, but they amount to a public scandal. . . . the principal difficulty seems to . . . come from the presence upon the same loop used by the surface cars, of the cars of different lines, so that the people who gather during the rush hours are animated by conflicting purposes. Some want to reach the cars of one line and some of another. . . .

"The recent city administration also gave its approval to a plan, proposed by the Rapid Transit Commission, for the construction of a tunnel to be used for furnishing railroad communication between the subway system of Manhattan at the New York end of the Brooklyn Bridge, the Brooklyn Borough Hall, and the Long Island Railroad Depot. This undertaking has proceeded up to the point where all the necessary legal consents have been obtained, and it will shortly come before the city authorities for the appropriation that will make it possible. The city should certainly insist upon a uniform rate of fare over all subway lines constructed with the city's money. . . . Mar. 4

"There remains a subject not less important than any other, the duty of increasing the small breathing spaces throughout the city and of making available for the use of the people those which have been already secured. I am confident that neither the Board of Estimate and Apportionment nor your honorable Body will need any urging to make appropriations for this purpose as generous as the resources of the city will permit. . . .

"The ordinances of the City ought to be revised and codified at as early a day as possible. The same ordinances which existed in the various parts of the City at the moment of consolidation remain in force still, for the most part; and no effort has been made to adapt these ordinances to the changing conditions of the City's life. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1902), I: 1142–84.

The rights granted to the National Historical Museum to use the old hall of records as soon as the records are removed to the new building (see D 30, 1897) are rescinded. 21 Bids for building an extension of the subway under the East River to Brooklyn are called for by the board of rapid transit commissioners. On July 24, the contract for building, equipping, and operating the extension was awarded to the Rapid Transit Subway Construction Co. (see Ja 16, 1900). John B. McDonald, as contractor of the company, "assumed the general supervision of the work of constructing the Brooklyn extension; and the construction work of both the original subway and the extension has been carried on under his direction."—Ann. Cyclop. (1902), 424; Interborough Rapid Transit (The Subway) in N. Y. (pub. by I. R. T. Co., 1904), 21. See N 12.

July 21 The board of estimate and apportionment is requested to authorise the comptroller to issue special revenue bonds to the additional amount of $25,000 "for the purpose of defraying the cost of making necessary repairs to the City Hall, in the Borough of Manhattan."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1902), III: 423. See N 25.

31 The municipal art commission approves the plans of Wm. Martin Aiken for alterations to the interior of the city hall. "These call for an expenditure of more than $25,000. In the basement several small offices under the main entrance will be made into one for a large marriage bureau. That room will be domed, as President Cantor has desired. The walls in the offices of The City Record will be torn down, making much more room. On the main floor the rotunda and corridors will be repaired and the stone work renovated. In the Mayor's office various doors and passages that are of little use will be torn out. The wall between the Mayor's office and the anteroom will be torn down, making an arched way, with much more space for receptions. The gaudy wallpaper and ceiling in the Mayor's office will be removed and a white enamel ceiling and walls will be substituted, bringing back the appearance of the building as near as possible to the original Colonial style. The hangings and furnishings of the rooms will be in harmony with the decorations. Various small walls and partitions in the City Clerk's office will also be removed, making more room.

"On the second floor the walls and decorations in President Cantor's offices will be treated similarly to those of the Mayor's office. White enamel decorations will be used in all cases, and in every way possible the Colonial appearance of the original building will be revived. Partitions will be removed, making a spacious room, which can be used for receptions and hearings, at which the Borough President would preside.

"Little is to be done to the old Council Chamber and the Chamber of the Board of Aldermen at present. President Cantor hopes to obtain an additional appropriation and have these rooms, two of the finest in the building, altered in keeping with the proposed color scheme of the other rooms."—*N. Y. 25 Wm. Martin Aiken, consulting architect for the borough of Manhattan, writes to Mayor Low: "In accordance with the request made to me from your office to report upon the requirements and the cost of furnishings appropriate to the remodeling of the City Hall Building, I beg leave to submit the following:

"Whereas the foundations of the present building were laid on or about the 16th day of May, 1803, and furthermore as The City of New York was the first capital of the Federated Colonies, . . . and further, as the City of New York was the capital of the State of New York prior to the choice of the City of Albany; therefore, it has seemed expedient and desirable to incorporate in this report the recommendation that gradually, between the present time and upon such date in the month of May, 1903 as may be found to coincide most accurately with the laying of the corner stone of the present building the interior fittings of this building be brought into harmony with the characteristics of the original design.

"In order to do this in a consistent, dignified and harmonious manner I recommend the appropriation of from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars . . . for this purpose; since the following variety of items are included in the estimates and are the result of careful bidding by most reliable dealers, a certain margin has been indicated to permit of a choice of design and material, viz.: Electric light fixtures, rugs and carpets, hangings, furniture, clocks, fireplaces, parquet floors, modeling, tablet, picture hanging, decoration of Governor's Room and Council Chamber, refinishing old gas fixtures.

"Inscribed in the top coping of the front wall I find the names of those originally interested in the construction of this building. It is proposed that these tablets now be taken down and reset in the walls of the main corridor in the first story, with an additional tablet descriptive of the present work upon the building. I find furthermore that certain flagstaffs upon the building are of serious and continual detriment to the roof. I therefore recommend that the objectionable flagstaffs be removed, that the most eminent sculptor obtainable be commissioned to design and execute in bronze a monumental socle, appropriately inscribed and supporting a suitable mast, to be erected on the terrace in front of the City Hall, and that it be dedicated on this anniversary."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1902), Vol. IV, Pt. 2, pp. 1670–71. Wm. Martin Aiken (see N 25) reports that the following work is being done, under his supervision, on the city hall: "In the basement additional accommodations are being provided for the City Marshal's office, for the City Record office, and for the Grand Army and the Marriage rooms. In the first story a new lobby is being formed for the Mayor's reception room by throwing in together two parallel corridors; the Mayor's office being transferred from the south front to the northwest corner of the building, with improved accommodations for the Mayor's Secretaries and immediate clerical force. At the east end of the building the business offices of the City Clerk are being so arranged as to give better accommodation for the transaction of business. In the rotunda the iron treads of the main staircase are being removed and new marble treads substituted. The private staircase at west end of the building is being extended that it may be made more available for the use of the President of the Borough and for better connection between the offices of the Mayor, those of the President, and the Council Chamber—in which the various boards have their executive sessions. At the west end of second story corridor an enlarged lobby is being formed, to give a waiting room for those persons having business with the President of the Borough and his clerical force. Rooms for the President, his Secretary and clerical force are also being provided; also enlarged accommodations in the centre of north front for the Municipal Art Commission. . . . 9

"The entire system of heating and ventilating of the building is being overhauled, renovated and brought up to date . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1902), Vol. IV, Pt. 2, pp. 1950–53. Aiken's treatment of the city hall marks him "as among the first of this generation to conceive a restoration in its true sense. His work . . . may therefore be regarded as ushering in the new and brighter era for the City Hall, the initial step in a movement that is still in progress."—*Arch. 5 Mayor Low, in his second annual message to the board of aldermen, says: "I take pleasure in acknowledging the cordial co-operation which the administrative branch of the City government has received from the Board of Aldermen. In one or two instances only, matters have been delayed where prompt action seemed to be desirable; but, for the most part, your action has made possible the orderly and efficient conduct of the City's business, without delay and without embarrassment. I take the more pleasure in making this acknowledgment, because I think that the public does not fully understand how much you have done to facilitate the City's business. . . .

"In my message to your Honorable Board dated March 4, 1902, I called attention to some of the great problems of the City which had already forced themselves upon my mind. . . . It was then already clear that the City was so close to its debt limit as to make it impossible to carry on the enterprises to which it was already committed and at the same time to supply the things essential for its current life. A more puzzling problem never confronted an administration. The City was threatened, on the one hand, with a large and continual increase of taxation, certain to be detrimental to its welfare; and, on the other, with the stoppage, at this very critical period of its development, while it is practically being rebuilt, of the public improvements upon which both its present and future prosperity largely depend. I am happy to be able to say that, by the hearty co-operation of the Comptroller and the Mayor, a way has been found to rescue the City from this dangerous situation and to secure for it at the same time both lower taxes and a larger credit. . . .

"I ask your attention, next, to the progress made during the year, with the transportation problems of the City. Early last spring the President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company called upon me to say that his road would be glad to apply for a franchise to connect the boroughs of Manhattan and Queens by tunnel under the Hudson river and the East river, and under the surface of the Borough of Manhattan with their main line in New Jersey, provided such a franchise could be had, upon satisfactory terms, that would assure the company of permanent control of it. It was so evident that no company could afford to spend the vast sum of money involved in creating such a terminal in New York except upon assurance of permanent control, that I caused a bill to be prepared authorizing the city to grant such a franchise upon the condition that the payment to be made to the City for the enjoyment of it should be periodically readjusted at intervals of twenty-five years. This rule now applies to all such franchises. . . . from this application of the Pennsylvania Railroad the City has obtained two advantages of literally incalculable importance. First of all, by the granting of the franchise, the City is assured of uninterrupted communication by another railroad with the West and South of the United States, with all that that implies. Similar communication by trolley cars with other railroad terminals in New Jersey is also assured by the grant of the franchise to the New York and New Jersey Railroad Company. And, next—which is of hardly less importance—the shaping of the entire underground railroad development of the City has now been lodged in a single department; that is to say, it has been placed under the oversight of the Rapid Transit Commission. As a result, there is now a single body capable of harmonizing this development and of providing plans for it that are in the public interest. . . .

"The Brooklyn Tunnel is another transit matter that has been successfully dealt with during the year. Not only was it contracted for at $3,000,000 when it was expected to cost $8,000,000, but the smaller figure was on the basis of an initial lease of thirty-five years, instead of fifty years, as in the case of the first subway. . . .

"The Chief Engineer of the Rapid Transit Commission is now preparing plans for an East Side route for the municipal subway, with an extension through Jerome avenue, and also for carrying the subway down Broadway, from Forty-second street to the Battery. In addition, the route for a second tunnel for Brooklyn is under consideration. . . .

"It is a striking fact that the surface and elevated roads of The City of New York carry more paying passengers, every year, than all the steam railroads of North and South America combined. . . . It is certainly true that, outside of rush hours, very much greater accommodation can be, and should be, given; but nobody is sanguine enough to believe that, during the rush hours, the situation can be importantly relieved except by the addition of new transit facilities. . . .

"In the meanwhile the unfinished bridges across the East river are being carried to completion as rapidly as possible. . . .

"With the completion of these bridges [Williamsburg, Manhattan, and Blackwell's Island Bridges] and the projected tunnels, say within the next five years, there will be thirty railroad tracks between Manhattan and the boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens, where now there are but four. With the completion of the subway system for Manhattan and The Bronx, upon the lines indicated, the facilities for traveling north and south, already great, will be at least doubled. . . .

"One other subject calls for consideration in this message. The year 1902 has seen the laying of the corner-stone of the New York Public Library and the opening of the new wing of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The first Carnegie branch library has also been opened during the year, and a number of sites have been secured upon which other branch libraries are already in course of construction. During the last session of the Legislature a law was passed providing for the creation of a new corporation in the Borough of Brooklyn, to be known as the Brooklyn Public Library, which was authorized to absorb the present Public Library of Brooklyn and the old Brooklyn Library on Montague street, which is a private corporation. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1903), I: 2–15.

17 Mayor Low sends to the board of aldermen a message discussing the affairs of some of the city departments. He says, in part: "First of all. . . . I ask your attention to the fact that the City grows in population at the rate of 100,000 people every year. This means that, by the 1st of January, a city as large as Baltimore had been added to the population of New York as our population stood on the day when the Greater New York came into being, on January 1, 1898. The addition of this multitude of people . . . has naturally increased the demands upon the City government, in every direction. . . . During this same interval of five years, more than 1903 Feb. 17 $2,500,000 of the City's growth in income—and more than $1,000,000 of it in 1902 alone—has been locked up in the sinking funds, where it was not needed. If this income had been available for current expenses, as it should have been, it is clear that the City's needs could have been more fully met without increasing taxation. . . .

"The police are as brave a force as any city could wish; neither do they lack efficiency in other directions. The police problem, however, is exceedingly difficult. Fundamentally considered, the problem is how to effect a complete change in the morale of a force numbering nearly eight thousand officers and men; how to substitute in this large body of men, for the idea of protecting each other no matter what the other may do, the ideal of protecting the city that pays them against wrongdoing by a policeman even more surely, if need be, than against wrongdoing by one not connected with the force; in a word, the end to be achieved is to make it impossible, by reason of the public opinion of the force itself, for any member of the force, high or low, to use his position for the purpose of private gain. . . .

"It may as well be said frankly that such results cannot be obtained in a single year, or in two; but only by a slow process of education which shall involve such an elevation of standards, both in the force itself and in the community, as has already taken place in the City, for example, as to nursing in the City hospitals and in the matter of street cleaning. . . . It ought to be possible, however, even in a short time, for a Commissioner who is the open foe of corruption in the force to show that conditions that favor corruption cannot continue undisturbed without the police officers who are responsible being brought promptly and sharply to book; it ought to be possible to make the large number of men in the force who desire better things feel that they can afford to be honest and upright; it ought to be possible to make such an effective contrast between an administration of the department that aims to enforce the laws, reasonably and honestly, and one that winks at the sale of law, as to lead the City to wish for the former whenever it is suffering from the latter.

"Something of all this was accomplished by Commissioner Partridge during his year of service, and he has certainly made it much easier for his successor to accomplish the rest. Commissioner Partridge broke up the 'red light district' on the East Side, with its revolting 'cadet system;' he drove out of business a number of the worst resorts in the City; he showed that under this administration promotions and appointments are made for merit, and for no other cause. By reducing details, by various adjustments within the Department, and by new appointments, he succeeded in adding, during the year, four hundred men to the effective patrolling force of the Department; and this with a budget not substantially larger than the year before. . . .

"From every quarter, since the retirement of Commissioner Partridge, I get testimony of the valuable work he has done. Much, however, yet remains to be accomplished, and that I hope General Greene will be able to do. His record since the first of January certainly encourages that hope. Blackmail in the Department must be smitten root and branch, whatever interests may suffer in the meantime. Citizens who pay blackmail, and officers who take it, must be made to feel that such money withers every hand that touches it. I heartily approve the policy of General Greene in holding the officers rather than the men responsible for the low morale and the misdeeds of the force. I must, however, remind the citizens again, as I did a year ago, that if they wish blackmail to be abolished they must themselves show courage in refusing to pay it and must co-operate with the officials who are trying to stamp it out. . . .

"The Department of Street Cleaning. When I asked Dr. Woodbury to accept the position of Commissioner of this Department, I said to him that it seemed to me the real problems of the Department lay in the field of final disposition; that anybody who was accustomed to handling men could collect the City's waste, but that The City of New York, was at least twenty-five years behind the times in the disposition of its waste. . . .

"The City's waste may be considered under three heads: (1) garbage, (2) ashes, (3) house waste, such as old paper, bottles and the like. . . .

"The first result achieved by Commissioner Woodbury by effecting this better separation of garbage from ashes and house waste was the successful stoppage of dumping at sea during the whole of last summer. Thus, for the first time in many years, the sea beaches were clean during the bathing season. Feb. 17

"The second result was no less valuable. The percentage of garbage in the ashes and house waste having been reduced to a negligible quantity, this material could safely be used for filling in low-lying land, or land under water. By permit from the Board of Health, the Commissioner of Street Cleaning was enabled to use large quantities of this material in filling in land under water at Riker's Island. Besides the saving thus effected in towing, during the year 1902, thirty-five acres of good upland were made. I have heard the value of this upland estimated at $10,000 per acre. When the work that has been begun is completed, Riker's Island will have an area larger than Blackwell's Island, and the value of it to The City of New York, measured by its usefulness, will be incalculable. . . . The privilege of picking over the waste at the various City dumps in the Borough of Manhattan was sold, in 1901, for $89,000. Early in 1902, a new contract was made at the rate of $107,000. Commissioner Woodbury immediately conceived the idea that by making suitable arrangements for burning what was valueless in this waste three results would follow: first, a better opportunity for saving what is valuable would be afforded; second, the most bulky part of what has heretofore been taken out to sea would be very much reduced in bulk; and, third, most of the residuum, being clean ash, would have a value either for filling or as a fertilizer. Acting upon authority granted to him early in the year, he erected on the pier at the foot of West Forty-seventh street a furnace which consumes all the house waste in the district lying between Thirty-eighth and Seventy-sixth streets, Sixth avenue and the Hudson River. He sold the privilege of picking over the waste brought to this furnace at eighty cents per load. . . . But this is not all. The residuum is a clean non-mineral ash which is given to the Park Department, where it is used for fertilizing purposes. Again, the heat generated at the furnace is valuable for power and it is expected that this power can be used to make the City's plant more effective, and also to bring in a moderate income to the City. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1903), I: 620–33.

"Workmen engaged in tearing down the Hall of Records [see Ja 5] yesterday began to pry away the bricks of the first floor. Soon after noon . . . the dungeons where Revolutionary patriots had suffered were unsealed, and for the first time in nearly a century and a half the rays of sunshine burst into the gloomy vaults, lighting up the holes in which nothing was ever known except suffering and despair. By to-day the entire tier of six among the gloomiest prison places in existence will be laid open to the free air. The doorways connecting the dungeons in years gone by were closed with heavy doors of oak, which swung from ponderous lintels of the same wood. All of those doors have disappeared, but the lintels still remain, firmly imbedded in the partition walls, and they will be carefully preserved."—N. Y. Times, F 24, 1903. See also N. Y. Tribune, F 16 and 25, 1903. 24

The demolition of the hall of records (formerly the jail), to make way for the projected approach to the Brooklyn Bridge (see O 10 and D 27, 1902), is completed.—Real Estate Record & Guide, Mr 14, 1903. See Mr 1, 1757; also L. M. R. K., III: 972; descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 589; and 8th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1903), 35–36. The site of the old prison, at the eastern border of City Hall Park, is marked by a tablet.—Peterson, Landmarks of N. Y., 34, 39. Mar. —

A farewell meeting is held in the Y. M. C. A. building, at the s. w. cor. of Fourth Ave. and 23d St., prior to its demolition.—50th Ann. Rep. of the Y. M. C. A. (1903); L. M. R. K., III: 956. 27

Wireless telegraphy, invented by Guglielmo Marconi, is established between New York and England, news messages being sent to the London Times by its New York correspondent. Marconi's experiments had begun at his home in Italy in 1895.—*N. Y. The legislature authorises the issuance of bonds to an amount not exceeding $101,000,000 "for the improvement of the Erie canal, the Oswego canal and the Champlain canal," provided the bond issue is approved by the people at the general election in November.—Laws of N. Y. (1903), chap. 147. The issue was ratified by the voters, on Nov. 3.—Am. Dict. of Dates, II: 80. Apr. 7

Andrew Carnegie gives $1,500,000 to erect a temple of peace for the Hague Court of Arbitration.—Sullivan, Our Times, I: 589. 20

1903 Apr. 20 A tablet to mark what remains of the old Jewish cemetery in the New Bowery, near Chatham Square, is dedicated under the auspices of the Am. Scenic and Hist. Preservation Soc. and of the Am. Jewish Hist. Soc.—L. M. R. K., III: 927; 8th Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1903), 18–19, 38–39. The statement in the tablet that the cemetery was consecrated in 1656, and was the first Jewish cemetery in the United States is erroneous, as will be seen by consulting the Chronology under Jl 27, 1655; F 22, 1656; S 29, 1677; 1682; D 17, 1729; and 1677, Addenda, Vol. VI. The actual date of acquisition of this land by the Jews of New York for cemetery purposes was 1682 (q.v.).

21 The "Kaiser Wilhelm II," the longest ship in the world, arrives in New York from Cherbourg on her maiden voyage. She is 706 ft. 6 in. long and has a tonnage of 26,500.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 589.

22 The new Stock Exchange on Broad, Wall, and New Sts. (see My 1, 1901) being finished, the brokers moved into it on this day. George B. Post was the architect. The pediment of the Broad St. façade contains 11 white marble figures, by J. Q. A. Ward, typifying American commerce and industry.—N. Y. Times, Ap 23 and 24, 1903; "The New York Stock Exchange," by John Rodemeyer, in N. Y. Stock Exchange, Vol. I. See also L. M. R. K., III: 925; and descrip. of Pl. 159-b, III: 842.

May — In accordance with a resolution adopted by the city council Dec. 20, 1898, by the board of aldermen Jan. 17, 1899, and approved by Mayor Van Wyck, two tablets are removed from their former position, as portions of the façade over the second-storey windows on the south front wall of the city hall, and are placed on the wall of the west corridor leading to the mayor's office. At this time alterations were being made in the interior of the building (see N 25 and D 9, 1902). A marble tablet recording the event is placed in the wall near them.—4th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Soc. (1899), 10; 9th Ann. Rep. (1904), 55–56. In the summer of 1913, all three were transferred to the east end of the basement corridor. This was during the extensive remodelling paid for by Mrs. Sage and supervised by the art commission. The two tablets from the façade bear the names of the building committee and principal workmen, including sculptor and supervising architect, who were in the city's employ at the time the city hall was finished (see summary under 1814).

1 New Hampshire, after 48 years of complete prohibition, substitutes a system of licenses.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 590.

2 The corner-stone of the new Broadway Tabernacle is laid at the n. e. cor. of Broadway and 56th St. (see D 30, 1901).—N. Y. Times, My 3, 1903; L. M. R. K., III: 928. The church was dedicated on March 5, 1905.—N. Y. Tribune, Mr 6, 1905. Three years later (Feb. 19, 1906), the old church edifice, on the n. e. cor. of Broadway and 34th St., was sold to Rogers, Peet & Co.—Ibid., F 20, 1906.

6 The legislature directs the board of estimate and apportionment "to consider, and, on or before the first day of June . . ., by its resolution to determine whether the building known as the county court house, now erected in the city hall park in the borough of Manhattan in said city, affords accommodations suitable and adequate for the proper transaction therein of the official business of the special and trial terms of the supreme court of the state of New York, appointed to be held in the county of New York, and of the city court of the city of New York, and of the commissioner of jurors." If the question is not decided in the affirmative, the mayor is to appoint a "court house board" composed of five members who shall "proceed with all convenient speed to select and locate a site, south of the southerly line of Franklin street, extended to the Hudson river and the East river, for a new court house, for the use of the special and trial terms of the supreme court in the first judicial district and of the city court of the city of New York and of the commissioner of jurors. The said board, in its discretion, may designate a portion of the city hall park as the site for such court house. Nothing in this act contained shall authorize the erection of a building in said city hall park, however, unless the brown-stone building so-called, and the fire-engine house, so-called, shall be removed therefrom, and the present county court house shall either be removed or shall be remodelled or enlarged and used as a portion of the building to be erected under the provisions of this act; and no building which shall, under the provisions of this act, be erected in the said city hall park shall, in any event, occupy a larger superficial area therein than the aggregate area occupied by the present county court house, the said brown-stone building, the fire-engine house and the building formerly used for the register's office." After the site has been decided upon and the land has been acquired, the board is authorised to proceed with the erection of the building. —Laws of N. Y. (1903), chap. 336. On May 29, the board of estimate and apportionment held a public hearing at which Hon. Francis M. Scott and Hon. P. Henry Dugro, supreme court justices, and Mr. L. L. Delafield appeared, and stated that the county court house was inadequate for the supreme and city courts. A resolution to declare the building adequate was thereupon rejected. —Min., Bd. of Estimate and Apportionment (1903), I: 1143, 1215. May 6

The legislature amends the Greater New York charter by passing an act "providing for a separate statement of the value of land in assessments of real estate and for the publication of the annual record of the assessed valuation of real estate in the city of New York."—Laws of N. Y. (1903), chap. 454. 7

The legislature authorises the governor to appoint a commission of five members "to investigate the alleged contemplated construction of a sewer or sewers in the state of New Jersey and the discharge therefrom of sewage into the waters of New York bay," and appropriates $2,000 for its expenses.—Laws of N. Y. (1903), chap. 539. See My 25, 1906. 11

The city observes the 250th anniversary of the foundation of the civic government of New York. Besides Mayor Low, four former mayors, Smith Ely, Jr., Edward Cooper, Franklin Edson, and Robert A. Van Wyck, take part in the ceremonies.—N. Y. Herald, My 27, 1903. 26

The board of estimate and apportionment unanimously adopts a resolution in favour of purchasing the block bounded by 160th and 162d Sts., Edgecomb Ave., and Jumel Terrace, including the Roger Morris or Jumel mansion (see Mr 6, 1901).—*9th Ann. Subscriptions to the amount of $44,786 having been raised in 1891 (see N. Y. Herald, Mar. 25, of that year), for erecting a statue to the memory of Gen. Wm. Tecumseh Sherman, it is unveiled on this Memorial Day.—N. Y. Times, My 31, 1903. It is an equestrian statue in gilded bronze, by Augustus St. Gaudens, erected by the citizens of New York under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, at the 59th St. and Fifth Ave. entrance of Central Park.—Cat. Works of Art Belonging to the City, 163. See also descrip. of Pl. 161-b, III: 843. 30

The construction of the tunnel extension of the Pennsylvania R. R. (see O 9, 1902) is begun. The two tunnels under the North River and the four tunnels under the East River were built by shields driven from each side of the respective rivers. The last tunnel connected under the North River was joined on Oct. 9, 1906; and the last on the East River, on March 18, 1908. These were the first tunnels for standard railroad trains constructed under these rivers.—"Pennsylvania R. R. Tunnels: Terminal Structures," in Papers and Discussions, Am. Soc. of Civil Engineers, XXXVII: 562–614; inscription on tablet in the wall of the entrance to the Pennsylvania Terminal. June 10

The present "Grand Central Terminal" owes its inception to a grant, on this day, from the city of the sub-surface rights to the space below most of the streets between Lexington and Madison Aves., 42d and 47th Sts. The N. Y. Central purchased all the land that it did not already own from 43d to 50th St., and from the western limits of the old terminal eastward to Lexington Ave., and also all the remaining property between Park and Madison Aves. from 47th to 50th Sts. After much preliminary work on tracks, etc., the "Grand Central Palace" on Lexington Ave. was converted into a temporary station, and the demolition of the old Grand Central Station began in 1910, without interruption to traffic. The new station, designed by Warren and Wetmore, architects, and Reed and Stern, engineers, was opened in 1913.—Laws of N. Y. (1903), chap. 425; Eve. Post (New Terminal Supp.), F 1, 1913; "The Greatest R. R. Terminal in the World," in Munsey's Mag., XLV: 27; descrip. of Pl. 169-b, III: 852. 19

The first report of the "Tenement House Dept. of the City of N. Y." covers the period from Jan., 1902, to this date. Eight volumes carry the sequence to 1914. It is a very important set of volumes, and has had a good deal to do with the spread of tenement-house reform throughout the larger cities of the United States. July —

In this month, "Boston adopted the automobile as an adjunct to the policing of a scattered residence district."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 592. —

1903 July 4 — The first Pacific cable is opened, and Pres. Roosevelt and Gov. Taft in the Philippines exchange messages.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 592.

16 — The city acquires by condemnation proceedings land at First Ave. and E. 35th St. Here St. Gabriel's Park was developed.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate; L. M. R. K., III: 971. See 1905.

20 — Joseph Pulitzer agrees to give the trustees of Columbia University the sum of $1,000,000 for the establishment and maintenance of a school of journalism as one of the professional schools of the university and promises an additional million when the school has been in successful operation for three years.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1754–1904, 258–60.

" — Pope Leo XIII dies, and a newspaper remarks: "It seems almost incredible that he should have looked on Napoleon at the zenith of his power, and should have held a high place in European affairs when Queen Victoria was a girl." The new pope was elected on Aug. 4 and became Pius X.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 592.

Aug. 2 — A new statue of John Ericsson, by Jonathan S. Hartley, is unveiled at the Battery.—N. Y. Times, Ag 3, 1903.

24 — "Lou Dillon" breaks the world's record by trotting a mile in two minutes, at the Reading track, Mass.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 593, 594.

31 — The first automobile to cross the continent, a Packard car later called "Old Pacific," completes its journey from San Francisco to New York in 52 days.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 593, 595.

Sept. 7 — Samuel P. Langley makes an unsuccessful attempt to fly in a heavier-than-air machine.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 594. See D 17.

Oct. — — The Columbia University Club moves from 41 W. 36th St. (see Ag 1901) to 15 Madison Sq. North.—Columbia Alumni News, F 15, 1918; L. M. R. K., III: 937. For next move, see Ap 6, 1905.

11 — "An interesting relic of old Grace Church has just been secured by the Rev. Dr. Huntington and placed within the inner wall of the present church edifice, near the entrance. It is the original corner-stone of the first Grace Church, which was built in 1806 on the corner of Broadway and Rector Street, the site now occupied by the Empire Building. . . ." The stone was secured from the N. Y. Historical Society.—N. Y. Times, O 11, 1903.

16 — "All is nearly ready at Madison Square Garden for the arrival of the Salvation Host of Elijah the Restorer, otherwise John Alexander Dowie, who are moving on this city 4,000 strong from several points of the compass in a great crusade against the unredeemed of New York. By the time early rising residents of the city are getting through their breakfasts this morning eight trainloads of crusaders fresh from Zion will have been deposited at almost as many stations and will crowd the street cars on their way to the Garden rendezvous."—N. Y. Times, O 16, 1903. Dowie and his "army" arrived in the morning and held their first meeting in Madison Square Garden.—Ibid., O 17, 1903. Many people flocked to hear him and his followers, and on Oct. 19, when he proclaimed himself "Elijah the Restorer," there was a storm of hisses and jeers which almost resulted in a riot.—Ibid., O 18–20, 1903. On Oct. 21, his audience of 15,000 was so hostile that the police persuaded him to close the meeting abruptly.—Ibid., O 22, 1903. Thereafter there was little trouble. He ended his campaign at the Garden on Nov. 1, by baptizing 79 persons, and most of his "army" then left for Zion. Dowie and his leaders, however, remained to hold meetings at Carnegie Hall from Nov. 2 to Nov. 8, when they, also, returned to Zion City.—Ibid., N 2–9, 1903.

17 — William H. Seward Park, bounded by Canal, Hester, and Rutgers Sts. and East Broadway, is opened.—N. Y. Times, O 18, 1903; Rep., Dept. of Parks (1904), 16. See L. M. R. K., III: 971.

" — The Alaskan Boundary Tribunal at London votes to sustain all but one of the American claims in the dispute over the Canadian-Alaskan boundaries.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 596.

19 — The Hudson Theatre, at 139 W. 44th St., opens with Ethel Barrymore in "Cousin Kate."—N. Y. Times, O 20, 1903.

20 — The city takes title to the Roger Morris (or Jumel) mansion and park (see My 29), acquiring the property from Mrs. Lillie J. Earle (see 1900).—9th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1904), 37–42; Liber Deeds, XVIII: 127, sec. 8; L. M. R. K., III: 951, 971; descrip. of Pl. 167-a, III: 849. See D 28.

22 — Dan Patch breaks the world's pacing record at Memphis by going a mile in 1:56½.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 596.

" — The City Club, in urging the re-election of Mayor Low, says: "Mr. Low's administration is conceded by all fair-minded persons acquainted with the city's history to have been the best that the city has known. Every department has been bettered and several have been revolutionized. The organized lawlessness that prevailed in the Police Department, and to a less extent in every other department, under Tammany control, has given place to order and efficiency. In the Police Department there are now left but four of the twelve Inspectors and four of the thirty-five Manhattan Captains of the old régime. 'Grafting' has been well-nigh destroyed, and the former alliance between crime and the police has been broken. The Health Department has eliminated small-pox, and reduced the death rate from 20 to a fraction above 18. For schools $14,900,000 were appropriated in one and one-half years, against $8,904,242 in four years under Tammany. The streets have been kept clean, and during one year (1902) nearly as many miles of streets were paved as during the last four years of Tammany administration. Six new parks and seven play-grounds have been opened, against one park only under Tammany. Three public baths in Manhattan and two in Brooklyn are being built, against but one for the whole city under Tammany. In the Charities Department the chronic embezzlement of funds belonging to widows, orphans and the needy has been stopped; while, instead of the stale bread and other unfit food given to the city's dependents, wholesome and nourishing food is now provided, and with saving in cost. The work of the Tenement House Department has been excellent. The Fire Department has reduced the average loss per fire to $804, against $1,046 in 1901. The Water Department has stopped frauds and effected a yearly saving of $803,739. The Dock Department has increased the general wharfage collections 23.17 per cent., without any increase in rates. The Law Department collected in one year arrearages of personal taxes aggregating two and one-half times the entire amount collected by Tammany in the four previous years. Tunnels and bridges are being constructed which will enormously increase the transportation facilities of the greater city, and a municipal ferry will soon be installed for travel between Staten Island and Manhattan. The administration has secured for the city $250,000 a year from new franchises, which is 60 per cent. of the total amount now received from all the local railroad grants. By assessing real estate at its full value, as required by law, tax payments have been reduced in every section of the city, except the Fifth Avenue district, and a borrowing capacity of $100,000,000 is handed over to the next administration."—Statement by the City Club of N. Y. as to Candidates for Municipal Offices, O 22, 1903, in N. Y. P. L.

Oct. 22 — The New Amsterdam Theatre, at 214 W. 42d St., opens with Nat. C. Goodwin in "A Midsummer Night's Dream."—N. Y. Times, O 27, 1903. See also L. M. R. K., III: 985.

Nov. 2 — The Republic of Panama is proclaimed. The United States recognized it on Nov. 6.—World Almanac (1904), 130.

3 — Adelina Patti (Baroness Cederstrom) begins her farewell tour of America with a concert at Carnegie Hall. Her tour lasted about four months, during which time she gave 40 concerts. On March 12, 1904, she sailed from New York on board the "Lucania."—Klein, The Reign of Patti, 359–60; N. Y. Daily Tribune, Mr 13, 1904. For Patti's first appearances in New York, see My 11, 1852, and N 24, 1859.

4 — The corner-stone of the present building of the New York Historical Society, on Central Park West, between 76th and 77th Sts. (see F 24, 1891), is laid. Designs, by York & Sawyer, architects, were selected after a competition.—N. Y. Times, N 18, 1903; Kelby, N. Y. Hist. Soc. (1905); L. M. R. K., III: 957. The building was dedicated on Nov. 20, 1906 (q. v.).

17 — A treaty is signed by the U. S. and Panama giving the U. S. the right to build a Panama canal.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 597.

18 — Enrico Caruso makes his American début, at the Metropolitan Opera House, as the Duke in "Rigoletto."—Krehbiel, Chapters of Opera, 327–30.

23 — A bronze tablet is erected by the Knickerbocker Chapter, D. A. R., on the site of the Robert Murray house on Fourth Ave. near 37th St. It was here that his wife, Mary Lindley Murray, on Sept. 15, 1776 (q. v.), is supposed to have entertained Gen. Howe and his officers until the American troops under Gen. Putnam escaped.—N. Y. Times, N 26, 1903; Cat. of Works of Art Belonging to the City, 160. See also L. M. R. K., III: 951.

1903 D— The discovery of the new element, radium, by M. and Mme. Curie, is announced.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 600.

7 The Colony Club for women is organized.—Club Book (1917). It was incorporated on March 1, 1905 (q.v.).

9 An ordinance is signed by the mayor creating "a City Commission for preparing a comprehensive plan for the beautifying and development of the City." It is to consist of "the present Borough Presidents" and such additional persons as the mayor shall determine.—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1903), VI: 727. This became known as the "N. Y. City Improvement Commission."—See description of Pl. 163, III: 843–44, and Pl. 169-a, III: 851. See, further, Ja 1, 1905.

16 Employment of women ushers by the Majestic Theatre is described as "a brand-new job for the sex."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 598.

17 The first successful aeroplane flights are made by Orville and Wilbur Wright, at Kill Devil Hill, North Carolina.—Early Hist. of Airplane (pub. by Dayton-Wright Airplane Co.), 6, 9–15.

19 The Williamsburg Bridge (see My 27, 1895), extending across the East River from Clinton and Delancey Sts., Manhattan, to Roebling and S. 5th Sts., Williamsburg, is opened for traffic.—Rep., Com'r of Bridges (1912). It is the largest suspension bridge in the world, and cost $12,000,000.—N. Y. Times, D 20, 1903. Mr. Leffert L. Buck, chief engineer of the "New East River Bridge Commission," had charge of the design and construction of the bridge.—Letter to the author (dated D 21, 1925) from Wm. Wirt Mills, commissioner of plant and structures.

24 After much legal and religious controversy, Wagner's "Parsifal" is produced for the first time in America, at the Metropolitan Opera House.—Krehbiel, Chapters of Opera, 330–35.

28 The park department formally assumes possession of the Roger Morris property (see O 20), and opens it as a public park.—N. Y. Tribune, D 29, 1903; 9th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1904), 37–42. See also L. M. R. K., III: 951, and descrip. of Pl. 167-a, III: 849. See My 4, 1904.

30 Nearly 600 lives are lost in the Iroquois Theatre fire at Chicago.—World Almanac (1905), 131. "This disaster led to a new theatre code in practically every American city, calling for fire-walls, more numerous exits, unobstructed alleyways, asbestos curtains, non-inflammable scenery, the covering of all lights, and doors opening outward."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 599–600.

31 During the year 1903, immigration records were broken, 857,046 persons being admitted.—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 600.

— Fifteen companies which started in the early days of the automobile were still in existence in 1925. Over a thousand that started had failed. The fifteen that lasted to 1925 are as follows, with the dates of their first cars:

Haynes	1896	Pierce-Arrow	1901
Olds	1897	Cadillac	1902
Studebaker	1898	Overland	1902
Locomobile	1899	Packard	1902
Franklin	1900	Buick	1903
Peerless	1900	Ford	1903
Stearns	1900	Maxwell	1904
Apperson	1901

—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 484.

— By this year, automobile accidents had increased to such an extent, that "New York State passed a law providing for a maximum rate of ten miles an hour in closely built-up districts; fifteen miles an hour in villages or cities outside the congested zones; and twenty miles an hour as the maximum elsewhere. The example set by New York was shortly thereafter followed by Kansas, Kentucky, and other States."—Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 498–501.

— During 1904 and 1905, Thos. W. Lawson attracted wide attention by his contribution to Everybody's Magazine of a series of articles called "Frenzied Finance," an exposé of the evils of stock speculation. The articles were published in book form in 1905.—Encyclop. Am., XVII: 154–55. See also Sullivan, Our Times (1926), I: 68–69.

— From 1904 to 1909 were published in London, in four volumes a Report of American manuscripts in the Royal Institution of Great Britain, the work of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, of England. These volumes, prepared by B. F. Stevens, of London, are a calendar of 58 bound manuscript volumes and four cases or rolls. The materials pertain mostly to the Am. Revolution, and more than half fall within the year 1782 and 1783.

1904 — In this year, the first volume of A History of the United States and its People, by Elroy McKendree Avery, was published. Six more volumes were issued up to 1910, after which publication ceased. The work was intended to consist of 12 volumes. The illustrations in these volumes are from important contemporary pictures and documents—the most comprehensive collection of such material ever published.

— In this year, a great improvement was made in lighting the city, some 16,000 old gas lamps in Manhattan and The Bronx being changed to mantle lamps; progress was also made in developing the arc lighting along the main avenues and streets.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909.

— During 1904–1909, about 35 miles of new wharfage space were constructed by the city, increasing the area of the piers about 3,000,000 sq. ft., including the construction of 51 piers and 21 new platforms, and the building of extensions to 30 piers.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 70.

— The bell in use at this time in the Reformed Dutch Church at Third Ave. and 121st St. was "the first within the bounds of Harlem of which we have any knowledge" It was the only relic of the old stone church erected in 1686 (q.v., Mr 29), and had the following inscription: "AMSTERDAM, Anno 1734 ———— ME FECIT." (There is no name in this inscription.) A communication published in the Harlem Traveler in January, 1863, stated that it contained $20 worth of gold and $20 worth of silver.—Riker, Revised Hist. of Harlem (1904), 325. — In this year, the St. Nicholas Club (see Je 8, 1875) removed from 386 Fifth Ave. to 7 W. 44th St.—L. M. R. K., III: 939.

— The Madison Square Theatre (see S 15, 1891), adjoining the Fifth Avenue Hotel on West 24th St., is finally closed.—N. Y. Sun, F 28, 1904. For history of this playhouse, see L. M. R. K., III: 983. The Fifth Avenue building now covers the site.

Jan. 4 Mayor George B. McClellan sends his first annual message to the board of aldermen, saying in part: "I intend at this time to do no more than to generalize on certain municipal matters, because I purpose later to submit to you a detailed statement of the condition and the needs of the several departments of the City government. . . .

"For many years the popular interest seems to have been concentrated upon the problems of public health, public education, street cleaning, and the police. Every public-spirited official should be glad that such has been and is the fact.

"But I believe that the public mind has been so absorbed with these evident as well as vital questions as to ignore the equally vital, if not as apparent, problem of municipal finance.

"As the incidence of taxation for the support of the municipal government is shifted to the people as a whole, the questions of the City debt, the cost of government and of the system of taxation under which we live are of great concern and should be of the very first interest to every citizen.

"A wider knowledge of our financial system can bring nothing but good to the City. A greater interest on the part of the taxpayers—and the entire population pays the taxes—in how the revenues are raised and expended, must necessarily result in an increased share of responsibility on the part of the administration, and a more direct feeling of accountability by the public officials to those who have given the trust to them.

"In this rapidly growing municipality, whose debt margin is constitutionally limited, there ought to be some fixed fiscal policy which should, in its general features, govern all administrations regardless of party attachments. Such a policy can be put in operation only after the awakening of popular interest in the importance of the question. . . .

"In initiating public improvements, the needs of the present should be considered before the needs of the future.

"In gauging the financial capacity of the City when embarking upon new enterprises, material necessities should first be met.

"New York must be made healthy and clean before it is made beautiful. . . .

"The administration is confronted with a most difficult problem because of the inadequacy of the present school accommodations. The solution of this problem cannot wait on our convenience.

1904 Jan. 4 "Provision for an additional water supply is a subject demanding prompt attention. . . .

"An extensive observation of the moral conditions of the great cities of Europe and America has convinced me that this City is better than any of them. Nevertheless, we cannot boast if its moral state falls below the standard which should be set for the metropolis of our country. . . . A cosmopolitan city like New York cannot be conducted on the same plan as a provincial town. Every attempt to so conduct it will fail and will result in a disrespect of law.

"Some evils can be eradicated and some cannot. Some evils, unhappily, are incident to human nature itself. But they should not be allowed to parade before the public, and no partnership should be permitted between those charged with the suppression of vice and those who live by law-breaking. In the endeavor to accomplish anything in this direction, spasmodic effort can avail but little. Only constant vigilance can produce satisfactory results. The methods employed should not be sensational, or for the purpose first of winning applause, but earnest and sincere, so as to be thorough and permanent in their effect.

"I am convinced that it is no unreasonably critical spirit which has for years been charging that officials high in the Police Department have connived at the maintenance of certain public evils for their personal gain.

"A vigorous and persistent effort will be made to sever any such relations between law-breakers and those sworn to enforce the law.

"I appeal to all our citizens, and especially to those who supported my candidacy, to aid in purging the Department of such men and practices. . . .

"In this, as in any other department, everything desired cannot be accomplished at once. Intelligent effort directed to one evil at a time must before long result in a general improvement. . . .

"The vast majority of the members of the police force are worthy of our confidence. Their lives are not easy, whether considered morally or physically. Contact with crime does not tend to individual improvement. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1904), I: 14–18.

Feb. 7 A fire in Baltimore destroys $70,000,000 in property. It extends over 140 acres, comprising 75 blocks, with 2,500 buildings.—World Almanac (1905), 131. On the invitation of the Baltimore Stock Exchange, while the fire was still raging, the author's firm, Howells and Stokes, undertook to design a new building for the exchange, the designs to be completed within two weeks and the work of construction to be started at once. As a matter of fact, work on the new building was actually begun before the ruins of the conflagration had ceased to smoulder, and the Stock Exchange was the first new building in the burnt over area to be occupied.

Mar. 11 The first tunnel under the Hudson from Manhattan Island to Jersey City is completed, and W. G. McAdoo, builder of the tunnel, Chas. M. Jacobs, chief engineer, and a party of other officials make an inspection trip through it on flat cars drawn by cable.—N. Y. Herald, Mr 10 and 12, 1904; N. Y. Daily Tribune, Mr 12, 1904. 1905

— In this year, the eight volumes comprising the Minutes of the Common Council of the City of New York, 1675–1776, were published by the city. The work was undertaken at the suggestion of the New York Historical Society (see Ap 1, 1902), and under the editorial supervision of a committee of its members, assisted by Austin Baxter Keep. The index was made by Charles Alexander Nelson.

Concerning the importance of these records, the committee wrote: "The body of records which in these volumes is issued in printed form occupies, with those of Philadelphia and Albany, a rare place among the sources of American history. They correspond in general character to the records of an English municipality of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries; while they are much more extensive and important than the accessible records of either of the cities just named. No similar memorials are known to have survived in Charleston, South Carolina, or in the few smaller boroughs which existed in the southern and middle colonies. The records of Boston, until some time after the beginning of the nineteenth century, are those of an expanded and overgrown New England town. A belief that the printing of these minutes was a necessary condition for the study of the early growth of city government in this country has led to the undertaking, the completed result of which is now submitted to the public.

"These Minutes of the Common Council comprise in their entries by far the most important collection of material relating to the early administration of municipal affairs in New York which has survived. The fragments which now remain in manuscript will be found in certain ledgers and journals that were kept by the old city treasurers, in a few tax lists, in certain volumes of grants of city lands and water lots, in a few maps, ferry leases and other miscellaneous papers. Unfortunately, nearly all the papers of the Common Council, except those which were spread upon its minutes, have disappeared.

"The original rough minutes themselves have also, for the most part, been destroyed, and the text which is here presented is based chiefly upon two copies, one of which was made soon after 1880, and the other at a much earlier date."—From Introduction to Vol. I of M. C. C.

1905 — In this year, the city began special classes for crippled children in the schools; in 1906, two schools for crippled children were established as private institutions and taken charge of by the board of education.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 55.

— In this year, the removal of the line of telephone poles on West St., Tenth and Eleventh Aves., and Broadway, marked the disappearance of overhead wires in the Borough of Manhattan. An invention of Prof. Pupin, of Columbia University, made shortly before this time, greatly facilitated the operation of telephone wires in underground tubes or conduits.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Jan. 2, 1905, p. 6.

— In this year, St. Gabriel's Park, bounded by First and Second Aves., 35th and 36th Sts., was opened to the public.—Rep., Dept. of Parks (1906), 43; L. M. R. K., III: 971. See Jl 16, 1903.

— During 1905–7, the Tribune building, at the n. e. cor. of Nassau and Spruce Sts., erected in 1874 (q. v.), was enlarged in ground area and carried up to its present height of 20 storeys.—21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 153; L. M. R. K., III: 968; descriptions of Pl. 163, III: 846, and A. Pl. 29-b, III: 885.

— In this year, Tiffany & Co. (see 1837, 1870) opened its new building at the s. e. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 37th St.—From data supplied by the company. The Gorham building at the s. w. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 36th St. was completed at about this same time. Both buildings were designed by the firm of McKim, Mead & White.—Letter to the author from McKim, Mead & White.

Jan. 1 The N. Y. City Improvement Commission (see D 9, 1903) makes a preliminary report to the mayor and aldermen.—See Jan 1, 1907.

" After occupying temporary quarters for a few months in the old Daily News building at No. 32 Park Row, The Times moves into its new building, bounded by 42d St., Broadway and Seventh Ave., designed by C. L. W. Eidlitz and Andrew C. MacKenzie, architects, the corner-stone of which was laid by Bishop Potter on Jan. 18, 1904 (q. v.). In less than ten years these quarters were too small for the expanding business of this newspaper, and another printing and publishing building was erected at 217 W. 43d St., and named "The Times Annex." The eastern half was occupied on Feb. 2, 1913; and the completed structure (Nos. 217 to 229) in 1924.—The N. Y. Times: Its Spirit and Its Growth, 1851–1924 (pamphlet), 20–21; 21st Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1916), 153.

2 Mayor McClellan, in his second annual message to the board of aldermen, says in part: "We must congratulate ourselves on the resourceful condition of the finances of the City, but the study of the figures emphasizes one feature which calls for special attention, and, if possible, remedy. As taxes for the year are imposed and collected in the fall, it is necessary, in order to make payments from the beginning of the year until the taxes are in, to issue Revenue Bonds in anticipation of their collection. In other words, we live through the intervening months on credit. Theoretically, the operation of this process means the redemption of the Revenue Bonds as the taxes come in, thereby finally balancing the budget and the treasury. Practical operation and experience show a far different result. . . .

"The practice of living on borrowed money from January to October costs the City annually $2,000,000 in interest, adding to the burden of taxation. A cure for this, for the accumulation of uncollected taxes and for the other weaknesses of our financial system must be had by legislation. . . .

"I am in favor of municipal ownership and operation of an electric lighting plant to light the streets, parks and public buildings of New York.

"I do not believe that government should engage in any service which can be done better or as well by private enterprise, or should invade business fields in competition with the legitimate trade of the citizen. Where service rendered by private corporations is unsatisfactory, either because of its inferiority or excessive cost, it becomes the province of government to take control of that utility for its own uses. The prices which the City is compelled to pay for gas and electric light are so out of proportion with the charges in other cities that they must be extortionate. No relief is in sight, as there appears to be an absence of real competition. . . . we have the right to the free use of the conduits in which to place wires for the transmission of electrical currents. This right removes from the discussion a large element of expense, and seems to leave it open to the City, even if it should not build its own generating plant, to perhaps secure in the open market the electrical current, conveying it if necessary, from localities outside the City or State. . . .

"I do not apprehend that the matter of purchasing the lamps and poles now in use or, if that is inadvisable or unprofitable, supplying others in their stead, would offer any serious problem.

"In connection with this subject, it is suggested that still another economy may be effected by the utilization of the waste and refuse collected by the Street Cleaning Department, for this, it is urged by competent authority, will very likely generate all the current needed for lighting in streets, avenues, parks, docks and public buildings of the entire city.

"The experience of many cities and towns in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales has demonstrated that their lighting has been made possible by employing their mixed refuse as fuel for the making of steam, which in turn is utilized in the generation of electric currents. . . .

"The numerous evidences of the City's amazing development which give so much satisfaction to the people, suggest at the same time important plans for the future. Our trade, commerce and population grow at a rate that makes calculations on the future of New York mount into stupendous figures. The progress of to-day must make provision for the greatness of to-morrow. The rapid transit system planned but four years ago has already been overtaken, and we have been put to new projects to keep pace with our expansion.

"Yet there is another problem quite as important, if not as constantly in the public mind as that of transportation. Health and the safety of property—two essentials to municipal advancement—demand adequate supply of pure water. When we have reached the limit of our supply, we have reached the limit of our growth. . . . Expenditures now to secure our supply will, I feel confident, be regarded as judicious and economical investment when the city of four millions shall have attained ten million inhabitants. . . . Since we are at the disadvantage of taking our supply from distant watersheds and piping it down from the higher levels up-State, the water should be made to earn its own passage. Experts have estimated that many millions of horse-power may thus be created and put to many uses to bring revenues to the city. Only an insignificant part of this power, for example, would be needed to provide the energy to light the city with electricity.

"This project is as vital to the other boroughs as it is to Manhattan and The Bronx.

"Although large appropriations have been expended in almost every variety of improvement and extension, and will be continued on a generous scale, the water supply and service of Brooklyn do not, in consequence, measure up to the standard required for that rapidly developing borough. Manhattan and The Bronx are better provided and can more satisfactorily meet their immediate demands, enormous as their consumption is, amounting to 357 million gallons a day. Although Brooklyn's supply has been increased 13½ million gallons daily during the past year, its consumption has correspondingly increased 11½ million gallons per day. . . .

"Brooklyn's needs are partially supplied by private enterprise. As for that matter more than half the territory of Queens Borough and almost the whole of Richmond Borough are similarly supplied. The increasing demand of the citizens of those two boroughs for the enlargement and improvement of their water supply service may ultimately result in their being entirely supplied by the City. . . .

"Incidental to the subject of water supply service is the high-pressure fire-service system, whose installment was authorized less than a year ago. Insurance interests and business interests generally may be gratified to learn that the Department of Water Supply expects to have it ready for operation during the present year (1905). Its necessity was so apparent that I recommended its installation in this borough in the territory in which the dry goods district and the lofty office buildings are located, and on Coney Island, in the Borough of Brooklyn, and appropriations were granted accordingly. . . .

"We may derive satisfaction from the fact that in the first year of this administration more money has been appropriated and expended for school buildings, and more sittings have been contracted for than in any previous year in the history of The City of New York. . . .

"The opening of the Rapid Transit Subway and the demonstration of its success is a cause for congratulation to the public of this city.

"The necessity for further subway facilities, notably on the East Side, where transportation lines are now almost overwhelmed by the crowds of the rush hours, must be kept continually in mind and provided for as promptly as possible. . . . Jan. 2

"The administration of the Tenement House Department has effected notable progress in a more perfect, thorough and uniform enforcement of the Tenement House Law. The object held paramount in this work has been the bettering of the condition of the poor without undue hardship to the property-owners affected by the requirements of the law and necessities of modern sanitary and moral advancement among the multitudes sheltered in these swarming habitations. Discrimination and favoritism have been avoided as the recognized best method of making the improvements involve neither injustice nor hardship.

"The practical elimination of the social evil, with its deadly moral contamination, from the homes of the people is a most important and beneficent effect of the work of this department. The improvement of physical conditions has included especial attention to provisions for the erection and maintenance of adequate fire-escapes upon tenement-houses to minimize the danger to life from fire in non-fireproof structures used for this purpose. Light and ventilation for living rooms to conform with the provisions of the law received attention as of scarcely less importance in life and health-giving results. . . .

"In the Department of Parks conditions were found presenting great and peculiar difficulties for the incoming administration.

"In the thickly settled parts of the City the need of new parks and playgrounds, and the proper care of the established popular pleasure grounds were both pressing and important questions. In the outlying districts the improvement of the splendid areas of park territory provided for the future could not be ignored. It was found that the policy had apparently been to neglect the conservation of existing valuable and important park features to lavish attention and expenditure on new projects. Even in this direction, however, great discrepancies were found between that which had been proclaimed as completed work and that which was really in an efficient and practical condition. Substantial progress has been made all over the City in remedying this state of affairs. . . .

"In morale and efficiency the Police force of The City of New York equals any similar body in the world. In numbers only is it an inferior organization, and the wonder is that it executes so well the infinite variety of tasks thrust upon it. The force has not increased proportionately with the population, property value and needs of the five boroughs. It is almost impossible, therefore, to afford the people of this City at all times the fullest measure of police protection to which they are justly entitled. . . . The dispersal of great numbers of residents—fully 35,000 families, it is estimated, having vacated their homes on Manhattan Island, owing to the construction of railroad terminals, bridges and lesser improvements, the most of them having sought the outlying districts of Brooklyn, Queens and The Bronx,[—] has increased police necessities elsewhere. To meet these, constant drafts have been made upon the main force in Manhattan, and this means, in its fullest significance, lessened police protection for that borough. These drafts must continue with the completion of bridges, terminals and subways, all of which will require police assistance for the regulation of traffic and the protection of the traveling public.

"Another drain upon the regular patrol force is in the demand for special assignments, which is legitimately increasing year by year. The Slocum disaster taught the necessity for detailing policemen to accompany the excursion boats in the summer. Separate assignments are also required for recreation piers, parks, playgrounds for the children, night schools, concerts, baths, theatres, the regulation of street traffic and the increasing number of nearby summer resorts, and to that extent they tax the regular force at the expense of our two largest boroughs. . . .

"The three-platoon system which has been adopted during the year has justified the expectations and hopes of its friends and advocates. It increases the patrol force by one-third during the day, when most needed. . . .

"A Bureau of Street Traffic Regulation was established by the Police Department in July, which is rendering valuable service in enforcing the Rules of the Road adopted by your Honorable Board. . . .

"The general testimony is that there has been a decided improvement in the movement of street cars and vehicular traffic, and that pedestrians are assured far greater safety. There has 1905 Jan. 2 been a marked decrease in the number of accidents to the latter in the congested districts and at dangerous crossings. . . .

"The work of the Municipal Civil Service Commission is of growing importance. The code of rules in force under the Civil Service Law and the City Charter has been gradually extended in operation, in compliance with the point of the law to govern all appointments, promotions or other changes of status, whether temporary or permanent, in 98⅓ per cent. of the public service, excepting elective officers, heads of departments, principals and teachers in the schools. This comprehensive system is not a creation of statute laws alone. It is incorporated in the Constitution of the State and has been accepted as a permanent part of our public policy. . . .

"The most important object to be sought, in my judgment, is to improve the examination system itself. The common-sense methods lately introduced are steps well taken in that direction. Capacity and fitness for the service required are the real questions to be determined, and it is quite impossible to do this by a purely academic standard. . . . Better results would follow if the opportunity for candidates to compete were offered more frequently. Entrance to the City service should not be barred for such long periods as the present practice involves. This is not democratic, as the principle of competition in itself essentially is, and it is not businesslike. . . .

"The efficiency of the Fire Department has been largely increased during the year 1904, not only by the addition of 419 Firemen, but also by the repair of an old fire-boat, the building of a new one and various improvements of that character.

"Precautions taken by the City Government to prevent the recurrence of such a disaster as the Iroquois Theatre fire in Chicago in December, 1903, have evidently been effective, for the insurance companies now recognize the diminished risk of such an event by reducing the rate of insurance in a marked degree.

"The most pressing need of this Department at the present time, and of a part of the City, is the extension of the paid Fire Department system throughout the more thickly settled sections of the boroughs of Richmond and Queens. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1905), I: 5–23.

30 Additional storage reservoirs in the Croton water-shed (see O 29, 1892) are recommended to the aqueduct commissioners by J. Waldo Smith, chief engineer. He emphasizes the fact that "the creation of additional storage in the Croton Valley will not in the least degree add to the flow of the Croton River; but, by saving water which would be wasted over the New Croton Dam, will add about 25 million gallons per day to the quantity which can be safely drawn for the supply of the city."—The Aqueduct Commissioners Report on advisability of constructing Additional Reservoirs in the Croton Watershed (1905).

Feb. — Work is begun on the Brooklyn anchorage of the Manhattan Bridge, spanning the East River from Canal St., Manhattan, to Nassau St., Brooklyn. Work was begun on the Manhattan anchorage in April.—Ann. Rep., Dept. of Bridges (1912), 47. On Dec. 31, 1909, the bridge was formally opened for traffic by Mayor McClellan. Its length is 6,855 ft.; the final cost was $26,572,900.—Ibid. See also N. Y. Herald, Ja 1, 1910.

15 The Hon. Robert B. Roosevelt, uncle of Pres. Roosevelt, invites to his residence, at No. 57 Fifth Ave., the representatives of various patriotic and historical societies "with a view to effecting an organization for the purpose of celebrating in 1909 the three hundredth anniversary of the exploration of the Hudson River by Henry Hudson in 1609." A committee is appointed to request Mayor McClellan and Gov. Higgins to name committees of citizens of the city and state of New York to act jointly in arranging for such a celebration. These officials selected 150 gentlemen, who constituted the "Hudson Ter-Centenary Joint Committee." The committee organized on Dec. 5 and held its first business meeting on Dec. 16. Later, it was decided to combine this committee with the "Fulton Centennial Committee," which had been appointed to arrange for the celebration in 1907 of the first practical application of steam to navigation, and to hold the joint celebration in 1909. The two committees were therefore merged, in 1906 (q.v., Ap 27), into the Hudson-Fulton Celebration Commission.—Official Min. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., I: iii–iv, 3–77.

Mar. 1 The Colony Club is incorporated. Its club-house at 120–124 Madison Ave. was completed in 1907 (q.v., Mr 11), from designs by McKim, Mead & White.—Club Book; L. M. R. K., III: 937.

On Feb. 7, 1918, it moved from Gramercy Park to its present location at 4-16 W. 43d St. (formerly the Hotel Renaissance).—Ibid., F 15, 1918. Apr. 6

The Hippodrome, on the east side of Sixth Ave. between 43d and 44th Sts., is opened. It has an immense stage, and is finished with the most complete machinery for presenting elaborate spectacles, including a huge tank under the stage.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 12 and 13, 1905; L. M. R. K., III: 984. 12

Andrew Carnegie establishes the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, with an endowment of $10,000,000. Its object is "to provide retiring pensions for the teachers of Universities, Colleges, and Technical Schools in our country, Canada and Newfoundland." The 25 trustees include Pres. Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia, Pres. Charles Wm. Eliot of Harvard, Pres. Arthur Twining Hadley of Yale, Pres. Wm. Rainey Harper of the University of Chicago, Pres. David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford Junior University, Pres. Henry Smith Pritchett of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Pres. Charles Franklin Thwing of Western Reserve University, Frank Arthur Vanderlip of the National City Bank, and Pres. Woodrow Wilson of Princeton. The foundation was incorporated by congress on March 10, 1906.—The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching Founded 1905 (Concord, 1919). 16

Henry Phipps, John W. Arbuckle, Chas. S. Brown, Robert W. de Forest, George E. Gordon, Elgin R. L. Gould, Wm. S. Hawk, George B. McClellan, Chas. A. Moore, John S. Phipps, Chas. S. Smith, Isadore Strauss, Alfred T. White, Myles Tierney, and their associates are incorporated "by the name of 'Phipps houses' for the purpose of providing tenement or other housing accommodations for the working classes in the city of New York or in other cities of the state of New York or elsewhere."—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chap. 269. 22

The N. Y. Juvenile Asylum moves from 175th St. and Amsterdam Ave. (see 1855) to Chauncey, N. Y.—Ann. Rep., N. Y. Juv. Asylum (1905), 20. It is still there.—Am. Medical Directory (1925), 1046. The terms of the mayor, comptroller, and borough presidents of Greater New York are increased to four years.—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chap. 633. 26

An act is passed by which the mayor is authorised to appoint three commissioners, to be known as the "Board of Water Supply of the City of New York," to whom is entrusted the duty of ascertaining, with all possible speed, what sources exist and are most available and best for securing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water for the city of New York, of acquiring lands and of constructing the necessary reservoirs, dams, and aqueducts.—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chap. 724. See Je 9. June 3

The legislature authorises New York City to utilize its water supply "for the purpose of generating electric current for the use of said municipality."—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chap. 734. "

The legislature fixes the rates at which electric current shall be sold in and to the city of New York.—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chaps. 732 and 733. It also fixes the price at which gas shall be sold to the city.—Ibid. (1905), chap. 736. "

The legislature creates a commission of gas and electricity, with power "to regulate the price of gas and electric light and certain other electric services" and to supervise "gas, electric light and other electric corporations." The sum of $60,000 is appropriated for the use of the commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1905), chap. 737. "

13 The "Fulton Centennial Committee," consisting of 100 citizens appointed by Mayor McClellan to arrange for celebrating, in 1907, the first use of steam in navigation, organizes at the city hall and elects Wm. McCarroll chairman and James H. Kennedy secretary. —N. Y. Tribune, Jl 14, 1905; World Almanac (1908), 401. This committee and the "Hudson Ter-Centenary Joint Committee" (see F 15) were later merged into the Hudson-Fulton Celebration Commission (see Ap 27, 1906).

16 Robert E. Peary sails in the "Roosevelt" from New York for the North Pole.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Jl 17, 1905. On this expedition Peary made the "farthest north" record of 87° 6′, but not the North Pole.—Peary, The North Pole, xxxi, 2.

Aug. 8 St. Thomas's P. E. Church, at the n. w. cor. of Fifth Ave. and 53d St. (see Ap 3, 1852), is almost totally destroyed by fire.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 9, 1905. On Nov. 21, 1911, the corner-stone of a new building, designed by Cram, Goodhue & Ferguson, was laid on the same site.—N. Y. Times, N 22, 1911. During the construction of the new edifice, services were held in a temporary wooden structure built within the ruins; this was first used on Oct. 4, 1913. The new church was consecrated on April 26, 1916.—Ibid., N 25, 1923.

24 The 145th St. Bridge, extending across the Harlem River from Lenox Ave. and 145th St., Manhattan, to Exterior St. and 149th St., Bronx (see Je 11, 1895), is opened to traffic.—N. Y. Times, Ag 25, 1905; Rep., Com'r of Bridges (1912). See also Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 63.

Oct. 27 Plans of the board of water supply (see Je 9) for bringing water to New York City from the Catskill Mountains are approved by the board of estimate and apportionment. In May, 1906, they were approved by the state water supply commission.—Rep. of the Bd. of Water Supply, O 12, 1917, p. 4. See Mr, 1907.

Nov. 4 De Witt Clinton Park, bounded by the Hudson River and Eleventh Ave., between 52d and 54th Sts., is formally opened to the public.—Rep., Dept. of Parks (1906), 55; L. M. R. K., III: 969. See My 13, 1901, and 1902.

7 George B. McClellan, Democrat, is reëlected mayor, over Wm. Randolph Hearst, the candidate of the Municipal Ownership League, and Wm. M. Ivins, Republican.—N. Y. Tribune, N 8, 1905.

9 Prince Louis of Battenberg arrives at New York with a fleet of six British cruisers, and is enthusiastically welcomed. During his stay he was officially received by Mayor McClellan at the city hall, attended a banquet at Delmonico's, went to the horse-show at Madison Square Garden, and to the Lambs' "gambol," gave a ball on board his flagship to about 1,000 people, and dined at the house of Mrs. Astor. He sailed on Nov. 20.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 10-21, 1905.

23 Several thousand Jews parade through the streets of the lower East Side in public mourning for their massacred brethren in Russia. —N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 24, 1905. On Nov. 26, a meeting was held to encourage the plan for arming the Jews in Russia for self-defence.—Ibid., N 27, 1905. Another mourning parade was held on Dec. 4.—Ibid., D 5, 1905. About $2,000,000 was raised throughout the U. S. for the relief of the sufferers.—Ibid., N 10, 13, 15, D 3 and 22, 1905.

25 Special services are held in the various synagogues of the city "in commemoration of the 250th anniversary of the landing of Jews in the United States."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, N 26, 1905.

30 The 250th anniversary of the settlement of the Jews in the U. S. (that is, the founding of a Jewish community in New York City in 1655) is also celebrated by addresses in Carnegie Hall.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 1, 1905.

Dec. 5 More than 200 people, mostly writers of fiction, tender a dinner at Delmonico's to Mark Twain on his 70th birthday. The speakers include Andrew Carnegie, Wm. Mabie, Carolyn Wells, Irving Bachellor, Rex Beach, F. Hopkinson Smith, and Agnes Repplier.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 6, 1905.

23 The corner-stone of the Engineers' Club at No. 32 W. 40th St., opposite Bryant Park, is laid.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, D 27, 1905.

— Many amendments to the Greater New York charter have been enacted at every session of the legislature since 1901 (q.v., Ap 22), and there have been numerous decisions of the courts construing its provisions. The most notable changes have been in the direction of the further concentration of power over municipal affairs in the board of estimate and apportionment. "By an amendment made this year, the entire procedure in reference to the acquisition of title to lands for public purposes was remodeled and a new system established. Commissioners of estimate and assessment in these proceedings are no longer appointed. Instead, the courts name three persons who shall be commissioners of estimate, and at the same time designate one of them to act as commissioner of apportionment. The commissioners of estimate are required to determine the damage to property taken, while the commissioner of assessment assesses the expenses of the public improvement upon the property benefited within the area of assessment determined in advance by the board of estimate and apportionment. The commissioners of estimate and the commissioners of assessment are required to file separate reports."—Preface to 3d ed. of The Greater New York Charter (pub. by Baker, Voorhis & Co., 1906).

— In this year, the Society of Iconophiles published An Index to the Illustrations in the Manuals of the Corporation of the City of New York, 1841–1870. The introduction sketches the life of Valentine, and describes a set of the Manual. It was written by William Loring Andrews. The Index was compiled by Richard Hoe Lawrence, the secretary of the society. It is subdivided into four lists, as follows: Plates and maps to a full set in the order of the annuals; maps and plans of the city of New York and vicinity; miscellaneous maps; facsimiles, letters, signatures, documents, broadsides, and certificates. There is also a general index. The edition of this useful guide to the illustrative matter in the Manuals was limited to 250 copies. See also 1841.

— In this year, a special school for backward and defective children was established in Public School 120, Manhattan.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 55.

— In this year, Thames St., which was ceded to the city by Nicholas Bayard in 1749 (q.v., Mr 10), was closed, and a new Thames St. about nine feet wider was opened, the south line of which is about six feet north of the north line of the old street. The change was made at the request and expense of "Number One Hundred and Eleven Broadway" (a New York corporation), which, on March 2, through the "Local Board of the Bowling Green District," petitioned the board of estimate and apportionment, and agreed to convey to the city its property in the bed of the new Thames St., in exchange for the land in the bed of old Thames St. from Broadway to Trinity Place and the land in the bed of Temple St. from old Thames St. to Cedar St. The purpose of the change was to create a plot wide enough for development between Trinity Churchyard and the new street. The city agreed to the exchange, and the two deeds were recorded on May 24. The "Trinity Building" (No. 111 Broadway) was erected at the south-west corner of the new Thames St. and Broadway, extending westerly to Trinity Place, and the "U. S. Realty Building" (No. 115 Broadway) was erected on the north-west corner. These two buildings are owned by the Trinity Buildings Corporation.—Letter to the author (dated D 30, 1925) from R. G. Babbage, president of U. S. Realty and Improvement Co.; Liber 99, Section I, of Conveyances, pp. 403, 408; L. M. R. K., III: 1010.

— The south wing of the west façade of the American Museum of Natural History was in process of building from 1906 to 1908.—Growth of the Bldg. of the Am. Museum of Nat. Hist. (1912).

— In this year, Henry James wrote rambling reflections under the title "New York Revisited," which were published in Harper's Mag. for Feb., Mar., and May; also about the city of Washington, for the North Am. Review, May and June.

1906 Jan. 1 In his annual message to the board of aldermen, Mayor McClellan says in part: "A great advance has been made during the past twelve months toward solving the problem of a satisfactory and economical scheme of public lighting . . . the Board of Estimate and Apportionment has authorized the purchase of sites for the erection of electric lighting plants in the boroughs of Manhattan and The Bronx, boroughs of Brooklyn and Queens and the borough of Richmond. . . .

"In this connection, mention should be made of the success which has attended the establishment of an incinerator underneath the Williamsburg Bridge by the Department of Street Cleaning, for the double purpose of disposing of its rubbish waste and of thereby generating an electrical current sufficient to light the Williamsburg Bridge. The plant daily destroys 1,050 cubic yards of waste, and in such destruction develops an energy equivalent to 400 horse power per hour, which is translated into 150 kilowatts of electricity. Thus an electrical current is generated which is more than sufficient to light the whole bridge structure. . . .

". . . the Board of Education is able to report that during the year just closed contracts were let for twenty-one new school buildings and thirty-one new additions to old school buildings, which, when completed, will furnish 55,050 sittings. During the year 26,750 sittings were provided. . . .

"Striking evidence of what New York is doing for the immigrant through its night schools is found in an enrollment of 37,829 non-English speaking persons of the total registry of 89,598 in the ten high schools and seventy-two elementary schools maintained for those who cannot attend day school. . . .

"In humanitarian progress New York has outstripped any other municipal corporation in the record for the year. The new Bellevue Hospital is at last under way. Willard Parker Hospital is about completed. Provision has been made for the new buildings which North Brother Island has so long needed. Our hospital service has been extended by Fordham Hospital and Harlem Hospital, the contagious disease hospital in Brooklyn and the hospital for convalescents near Coney Island. Sites have been acquired for a sanitorium for consumptives up-State, and a tuberculosis sanitorium on Staten Island. A new training school for nurses has been ordered for Bellevue. . . .

"The administration has provided for the removal of the Kings County Penitentiary, and for a reformatory institution on Hart's Island. . . .

"The ferry which the City owns and operates between the Boroughs of Manhattan and Richmond has been running more than two months. This ferry, taken over by the City because private enterprise had failed to give satisfactory service, seems to be accomplishing what was sought. . . .

"The City of New York is rich beyond all others in the extent and character of its shore front. Within its limits or directly contiguous thereto, are many miles of ocean beaches practically none of which is owned by the public. Provision must soon be made by the City towards securing fresh-air homes for children and convalescent patients from the City hospitals, as well as breathing spaces for the whole people.

"I know of no more ideal location for such fresh-air resorts than one of the beaches on the Long Island shore. . . .

"I believe that a considerable saving can be effected in some departments by reducing the number of so-called department orders, and by buying such supplies for longer periods at public letting. I shall instruct all department heads to so estimate their requirements that the City may get full advantage of competition."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1906), I: 17–29.

10 The city acquires by condemnation proceedings the land bounded by Broadway, Hamilton Place, and 138th St. Here Montefiore Park was developed.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, 51; L. M. R. K., III: 970.

16 The U. S. government purchases, for $1,660,111, the land bounded by Eighth and Ninth Aves., 31st and 32d Sts., as a site for a new post-office.—Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1910), 418. The building was begun in 1911 and opened in 1914. McKim, Mead & White were the architects.—20th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1915), 188; L. M. R. K., III: 974. It is described in N. Y. Times, D 28, 1913.

17 From Jan. 17 to 27, the collection of Heber R. Bishop, deceased, consisting of paintings, Oriental porcelains, bronzes, lacquers, Japanese swords, ivory carvings, and rugs, was sold at the Am. Art Galleries, yielding $412,019.75. His splendid collection of jades was bequeathed to the Metropolitan Museum of Art.—A Plan, etc., op. cit. Jan. 17

"England," the first of the marble statues representing the nations, is placed in position on the north front of the new custom-house at Bowling Green.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, F 1, 1906. 31

The legislature passes a law to terminate immediately the use of streets, avenues, and public places, in the Borough of Manhattan, by railroads operated by steam locomotive power at grade. It supplements the Rapid Transit Act.—Laws of N. Y. (1906), chap. 109. Notwithstanding this law, steam locomotives are still in use (1926) on Eleventh Ave. Mar. 26

The city acquires the land at 25th St. and East River on which to build a nurses' training school.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber Deeds, 123, p. 366. 31

Earthquake and fire destroy the greater part of the city of San Francisco. About $20,000,000 was immediately raised throughout the country for the relief of the sufferers. New York City sent over $2,000,000.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 19 et seq., 1906. In the following year, the author's firm, Howells and Stokes, designed and built in San Francisco, a practically earthquake proof skyscraper office-building for the Royal Insurance Co. A heavy iron mesh netting was built into the outer walls of this building, similarly to wire-netting in wire glass, so that in case of an earthquake the masonry would be held together and prevented from shaking loose. Apr. 18

The legislature authorises the governor to appoint three commissioners "to confer with the governor and the legislature of the state of New Jersey, or the duly designated representatives thereof, during the present session of such legislature or thereafter, for the purpose of securing the passage of an act by the legislature of that state providing for the appointment of a joint commission, under proper legislation of both states, to purchase the necessary land or water rights, and to secure the necessary federal consent to the construction of one or more bridges over the Hudson river from the city of New York to the state of New Jersey at the joint expense of the two states." The sum of $1,000 is appropriated for the expenses of the commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1906), chap. 260. On May 7, 1907, the legislature directed that the commission, "together with the bridge commissioner of the city of New York and an additional member to be appointed by the mayor of the city of New York, shall confer with the governor and the legislature of the state of New Jersey or the duly designated representatives thereof, for the purpose of fully investigating the project of the construction of one or more bridges over, or one or more tunnels or tubes under the Hudson river from the city of New York to the state of New Jersey at the joint expense of the two states, and shall report to the legislature thereupon including proposed legislation in furtherance thereof." It appropriated $5,000 for expenses.—Ibid. (1907), chap. 319. See also ibid. (1908), chap. 218. 19

The city is authorised to agree with the trustees of Columbia University for the filling in of the land under water fronting upon Riverside Park from 116th to 120th St. and for its use as an athletic field and playground for the college.—Laws of N. Y. (1906), chap. 304. Designs for this development were prepared by Henry Hornbostel, but were never carried out. 24

On this day and on May 22, the city acquired the land comprised in the municipal playground for children at 59th St. and Tenth Ave.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, citing Liber Deeds, 116, p. 27, and ibid. 115, p. 279. 25

The city acquires the land comprised in the municipal playground for children at 184 Cherry St. (80.10 x 214.2 feet).—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate, citing Liber Deeds, 105, p. 37. An undated map showing eight playground sites on the lower East Side is filed as map No. 47 in real estate bureau, comptroller's office. 26

The members of the "Hudson Ter-Centenary Joint Committee" (see F 15, 1905) and of the "Fulton Centennial Committee" are incorporated by the legislature as the "Hudson-Fulton Celebration Commission," whose object is "the public celebration or commemoration of the Ter-Centenary of the discovery of the Hudson River by Henry Hudson in the year sixteen hundred and nine, and of the first use of steam in the navigation of said river by Robert Fulton in the year eighteen hundred and seven, in such manner and form, either permanent or temporary, as may be found appropriate by said commission." The sum of $25,000 is appropriated by the state for the celebration, and New York City is authorised to provide further sums. The duration of the corporation shall be ten years. 27

11 The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research (see Je 2, 1901) formally opens its own buildings, consisting of a laboratory, an animal house, and a power house, extending along the East River from 65th to 67th St. The buildings were designed by Messrs. Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge of Boston.

The land had been conveyed to the Institute by Mr. Rockefeller in June, 1904.—N. Y. Times, My 12, 1906; Rockefeller Inst. for Med. Research. Hist., Organization & Equipment (1911), 7. "In 1907, the work of the Institute was placed on a permanent endowment basis by a gift from Mr. Rockefeller of $2,620,610 as an endowment fund. During the same year, the Board of Directors were invited to submit a plan, which had been maturing since the foundation of the Institute, for an important extension of the field of medical research, namely a means of studying human disease in its clinical aspects, under conditions as near as possible to laboratory standards of exactness and efficiency. The acceptance of this plan was accompanied by a pledge of $500,000 in 1908 for the erection of a Hospital [at 64th St. and the East River]. This sum was augmented by subsequent gifts amounting to $170,015.20 and a transfer of $273,487.36 remaining unspent from the pledge of 1902. Messrs. York and Sawyer of New York City were chosen as architects. The cost of the Hospital building and equipment was about $900,000. On October 17, 1910, the new Hospital and Isolation Pavilion were formally opened and patients were admitted for treatment."—Ibid., 7–8.

25 The legislature directs the mayor of New York City to appoint five commissioners, at least three of whom shall be sanitary engineers, whose duty it shall be to continue the work of the New York Bay pollution commission, established in 1903 (q. v., My 11), and to extend the work as follows:

"(1) To make further investigations into the present and probable future sanitary condition of the waters of New York bay and other bodies of water within or adjacent to the several boroughs of New York city and neighboring districts.

"(2) To consider and investigate the most effective and feasible means of permanently improving and protecting the purity of the waters of New York bay and neighboring waters, giving attention particularly to the following subjects:

"(a) Whether it is desirable and feasible for New York city and the municipalities in its vicinity to agree upon a general plan or policy of sewerage and sewage disposal which will protect the waters of New York bay and vicinity against unnecessary and injurious pollution by sewage and other wastes;

"(b) What methods of collecting and disposing of the sewage and other wastes which pollute, or may eventually pollute, the waters contemplated in this act are most worthy of consideration;

"(c) Whether it is desirable to establish a sewerage district in order properly to dispose of the wastes, and adequately protect the purity of the waters, contemplated in this act, and, if so, what should be the limits and boundaries of this sewerage district;

"(d) What would be the best system of administrative control for the inception, execution and operation of a plan for sewerage and ultimate sewage disposal, of a metropolitan sewerage district; whether by the action of already existing departments and provisions of government, by the establishment of separate and distinct sewerage districts and permanent commissions in each state, by one interstate metropolitan sewerage district and commission to be established by agreement between the two states, this agreement if necessary to be ratified by congress, or by other means. May 25

"(3) To cooperate with any duly authorized body or commission having similar authority in the state of New Jersey, in the joint investigation and consideration of the various subjects specified in this act."

4. To submit a detailed report to the mayor on or before Feb. 1, 1909.

The city is authorised to raise $15,000 for the expenses of the commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1906), chap. 639. See also ibid. (1908), chap. 422. The reports of the "Metropolitan Sewerage Commission," appointed as provided in this act, were published in 1910, 1912, and 1914.

Congress authorises contracts for the enlargement, extension, re-modelling, or improvement, of the assay office (see 1855), including necessary changes, alterations, and repairs incident thereto. The cost is not to exceed $350,000.—Statutes at Large, XXXIV: 774; Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1909), 206. An extension was built on Pine St. in the rear of the Wall St. building, and was occupied in 1912. The old building on Wall St. (originally the U. S. Branch Bank) was demolished in 1915, its historic façade being carefully taken down by the author, and stored on a lot on the upper East Side belonging to the Metropolitan Museum. Here it remained until 1923, when it was re-erected by Grosvenor Atterbury as the southern façade of the "American wing" of the Museum. The present building on the Wall St. site was erected by York & Sawyer in 1917–8, as a wing of the new assay office on Pine St.—Ibid. (1911), 119; (1912), 119; (1913), 270; Verplanck, The Site of the Assay Office (1921); descrips. of Pl. 57, I: 430 and Pl. 166, III: 848; L. 1906 Aug. — Revolution to conform to its original design. The eastern wall was completely removed, together with the first, fourth and fifth storey walls on the Pearl and Broad St. sides, leaving most of the brickwork of the second and third storeys on the Pearl and Broad Sts. sides supported in the air on timbers. During this process, the architect (Wm. H. Mersereau) came to the conclusion that the Broad St. wall was originally of small yellow Dutch brick and the Pearl St. wall of a larger sized red brick, and he followed this diversity in his reconstruction. "In rebuilding the tavern all of the original material that could be identified was retained. This comprised some of the little yellow Dutch brick work of the second and third stories on the Broad street side and some of the red brick work of the same stories on the Pearl street side. To complete the Broad street wall and the yellow brick trimmings, about 15,000 bricks were imported from Holland, it having been found impossible to get them anywhere else. The first floor was raised again to its former level [see Jl 1890]. The celebrated 'Long Room' was reconstructed according to its original dimensions, and the old, hewn, oak floor timbers which were under it when Washington stood in the original 'Long Room' were replaced, as were the original timbers in the tier above. The old hewn beams also still exist in the hall way and in the floor and ceiling of the second and third stories on the Pearl street side.

"In handling the roof, the gambrel roof of the eighteenth century has not been adopted, but it has been rebuilt after the style of the present roof of the Philipse Manor Hall in Yonkers. . . . The present roof of Fraunces' Tavern is not a typical hip roof, but has sloping sides, terminating in a square platform surrounded by a balustrade."—12th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. 22 "New York is the electric city. It is probably the most brilliantly illuminated city in the world. If this is the age of electricity, the American metropolis is probably the queen of the age. Figures recently compiled show that she consumes four times the amount of electric current used by the greater city of London, and she far outdistances all other cities of Europe or America. While this is due in a large part to the generous use of electricity for street and building illumination, an important factor also is the tremendous growth in the use of the current to talk business at night.

"The number of signs that make the night sky of New York luminous has increased fully 60 per cent., according to the city authorities, within the last year. Over the twenty-two square miles in Manhattan Island there are some three thousand electric signs of all sizes and descriptions. To make up their glaring talk and to voice with illumination signs and windows that formerly lay dark and dead, no less than one hundred thousand lights are set sparkling each night all over the island. . . .

"In size and character these signs vary according to the size, position and nature of their audience. The largest illuminated sign in the world is aglow all night. It shouts out to almost a million commuters who read it within a radius of twenty miles; the smallest are scattered broadcast over the East Side and other similar districts, where are framed with six or even four bulbs the sign of the humble cobbler or bootblack.

"To supply with current the signs of New York the generating plant of a good sized town would be continuously required. More than ninety per cent. of all the electric bulbs that spell out the night legends of Manhattan are rooted in the mains of one supply company. In some buildings which still maintain private electrical plants it is even thought worth while to keep the ponderous machinery running into the night to keep the sign illuminated. . . .

"The maintenance of the great array of electric signs that have sprung up all over New York within the last few years has created a new employment—that of the 'signjack.' To one steeplejack, who climbs to dizzy heights on steeple or flagpole in cases of rare emergency, a score of signjacks are employed day in and day out in a trade no less perilous, if less spectacular. These men, trained to climb and swing at startling elevations, man the cornices of the metropolitan skyscraper, in bad winds and bad weather, and pursue the constant work of replacing the electric bulbs that are growing dim. . . .

"There is considerable skill required in plotting out the best effects to be obtained from designs, monograms or even plain lettering at certain heights and angles over the moving street throngs to which the sign must talk. Often it has been discovered, after careful experimenting, that more clear and striking effects are obtained for the largest and most remote illuminated signs by the smallest and least powerful electric light bulbs. On the other hand, it has often been found most advisable to place large and powerful lights on letters suspended just over the heads of the night crowds.

"The most remarkable single tract of night illumination in the world lies in Broadway, from 34th street up to 46th street. In this district alone current for nearly forty thousand globes in use for illuminated signs is furnished. This glittering trail along upper Broadway, the 'Great White Way,' is celebrated all over the world."—N. Y. Daily Tribune, S 22, 1906.

Jan. The report of the "New York City Improvement Commission"
— to Mayor McClellan and the board of aldermen bears this date. The commission consisted of Francis K. Pendleton (chairman), Jacob A. Cantor, Geo. A. Hearn, Whitney Warren, Frank Bailey, John W. Alexander, Daniel C. French, Louis F. Haffen, James A. Wright, Joseph Cassidy, Wm. J. LaRoche, J. Edward Swanstrom, Geo. Cromwell, and Henry S. Thompson. An advisory committee consisted of Nelson P. Lewis (chief engineer, board of estimate and apportionment, and secretary to the commission), John A. Bensel (chief engineer, dept. of docks and ferries), O. F. Nichols (chief engineer, dept. of bridges), and Samuel Parsons, Jr. (landscape architect, park dept.). Richard A. Walker was named architect to the commission, Whitney Warren acting as consulting architect. The commission was created by virtue of an ordinance of the board of aldermen, approved by the mayor on Dec. 9, 1903 (q. v.), authorising the preparation of a comprehensive plan for the development of the city.

In a preliminary report, on Jan. 1, 1905, the commission stated its views regarding the scope of its duties. It defined in general terms what it conceived to be the essentials of a comprehensive plan for the city's development. It said, in part: "Such a plan necessarily involves not only the laying out of parks, streets and highways, the location of city buildings, improvement of water fronts, etc., but also questions of more or less detail relating to pavements, sidewalks, appropriate house numbers, gas and electric fixtures, manner of indicating the streets, location of statues and monuments commemorating historical events, tree planting, and a countless number of other matters, all important and essential if New York is to take its place as one of the great Metropolitan Cities of the World."

The final report presents a detailed "formula or skeleton outline" as a basis for all future changes and developments in the upbuilding of the city. The plan provides for adequate "avenues of connection" between the different parts of each borough, as well as between the different boroughs themselves and the outlying districts, and aims, while securing to each borough a park system of its own complete in all its parts, to connect as far as possible the parks of the different boroughs with each other by suitable parkways so as to make them all parts of one harmonious whole, and, "by thus making each supplement the other, add largely to the beauty and advantages of all." In Manhattan some of the salient features of the plan are:

The improvement of piers in accordance with a general plan, so as to secure uniformity of construction and an appropriate and harmonious architectural effect, with certain piers at convenient places constructed for recreation purposes.

The construction of a marginal street around the entire commercial water front.

The reservation for parks of certain portions of the water front not adapted to commercial purposes. Jan. —

The widening of Fifth Ave. by abolishing the stoop line and taking 10 to 15 feet from the sidewalks.

The widening of the roadway of 42d St. 60 ft., thus making it 100 ft. wide for a distance of 300 ft. east and west of Fifth Ave.; the sidewalks to pass in an arcade under the first storey of the buildings, and the centre of 42d St. to be depressed and pass under Fifth Ave.

The commission recommends a diagonal approach to the Blackwell's Island Bridge from Second Ave. to 57th St.; that the street-car tracks on 59th St. be depressed under Fifth Ave., and that 60th St. be widened by 100 feet.

Other changes proposed are these:

The extension of Riverside Drive in a south-easterly direction to West End Ave., thus making a continuous direct route from the drive to West End Ave., south on West End Ave. to 59th St., and thence through Central Park to the approach to Blackwell's Island Bridge.

The extension of Madison Ave. in a south-easterly direction from 23d St. to a point at or near the junction of Fourth Ave. and the north side of Union Square, thus furnishing a continuous thoroughfare to the lower part of the city by Fourth Ave., Lafayette Place, and Elm St.

The widening of 14th St. from Broadway to Fourth Ave.

The extension of Irving Place south to meet Fourth Ave., so as to give a connection south through Lafayette St. or the Bowery.

The extension of Seventh Ave. southward; Varick St., northward, and Sixth Ave. southward, so as to add to the facilities for north and south traffic; also the widening of Varick, Christopher, and West 32d Sts.

The drawings illustrating the report were made under the direction of Whitney Warren.—N. Y. City Improvement Com. (1907). See also descrips. of Pl. 162, III: 844, and Pl. 169-a, III: 851.

France passes a law definitely separating church and state.— 2

Mayor McClellan sends his annual message to the board of al- 7
dermen, saying in part: "The problem of providing the constantly increasing population of the City with safe, comfortable, and at the same time, rapid means of transportation, between the business and residential centres of the various boroughs, is one to which I have given a great deal of time and study.

"Relief obviously lies in increased subways and bridges, and a more extensive and better arranged system of terminals. The City's engineers have struggled with this difficult situation during the past year with most gratifying results. New subway routes have been laid out and bids will be advertised for this month. . . .

"Relief from new subways is necessarily a long way off, relief from the Blackwell's Island and Manhattan bridges is happily closer. During the interim it is my intention to do everything possible to relieve the present arduous conditions, and steps in that direction have already been initiated by me.

"The connection of the tubes under the East river will be a great factor in this work, making the actual service of this tunnel a matter of a comparatively short time. . . .

"In the meantime, everything possible has been done to increase the carrying capacity of both bridges.

"The capacity of the Brooklyn Bridge local trains has been increased 9,000 passengers, or 25 per cent., per hour during the rush hours, a result attained by adding an extra car to each train, by improvements in operation, and by the addition of stairways at terminals. Bridge local trains, consisting of five cars, are now being successfully operated during rush hours for the first time in the history of the bridge. During the rush hours 300 trolley cars per hour are being operated, against 280 cars last year. This is an increase in capacity of about 1,500 passengers an hour. . . .

"The service of the Brooklyn trolley cars crossing the Williamsburg Bridge has been increased about 30 per cent. over last year, 184 cars crossing in an hour during rush hours against a maximum of 140 an hour last year. The New York City Railway Company is now running 1,350 cars per day against 1,025 per day last year. . . .

"Remarkable progress has been made by the Engineers of the Board of Water Supply in laying out the routes for the aqueduct which will ultimately bring the waters of the Catskill Mountain sheds into all the boroughs of the City. . . .

"The locations of dam sites for the Ashokan Reservoir have been 1907 Jan. 7 finally determined, and the most economical capacity and the elevation of the full reservoir line have been definitely fixed. Topographical surveys of the reservoir basin of about 16,000 acres have been made, and the land surveys necessary for the condemnation of the entire area completed. Preliminary surveys have also been made in the Rondout and Schoharie watersheds and on the aqueduct line, and the surveys of the land necessary for Kensico and Hill View reservoirs have been completed. . . .

"The last stone of the new Croton Dam was laid on January 17 last, practically completing this structure. The gates in the dam were closed in November, 1905, since which time all the water flowing from the Croton river has been made available for the use of the City. This has not occurred before since the introduction of water from the Croton river, in 1842.

"The west basin of the Jerome Park Reservoir was practically completed during the year, and water from this source has been in continuous use since midsummer. . . .

"I especially desire to call the attention of your Honorable Board to the very advantageous terms which the City has succeeded in making with the gas companies during the past year. I believe this to be due primarily to the project recommended in my last annual message for the construction and operation by the City of a municipal lighting plant. These plans can be consummated at any time, but I deem it inadvisable to proceed with them at this juncture when the City has made an even more economical arrangement for its lighting with the gas companies. . . .

"The condition of the animals in the Central Park Menagerie has, in recent years, become so bad that I recommend the consolidation of this menagerie with that in Bronx Park, both to be under the control of the New York Zoological Society. In spite of the efforts of the Park Commissioner to prevent disease, many of the animals in Central Park are afflicted with tuberculosis, and those which have escaped are so inadequately housed as to be in constant danger of acquiring incurable maladies. Such conditions constitute a positive cruelty to the animals, and, what is of even more importance, are a growing menace to public health. . . . The hippopotami should be removed to Bronx Park, where there is ample space for their proper keeping, and a sufficient number of hardy animals retained in Central Park for the entertainment and instruction of visitors.

"I also recommend that the buffalo in Prospect Park, which cannot long survive the conditions under which the City is now compelled to keep them, be turned over to the Federal authorities and placed with the herd which the Government is now gathering in the West. . . .

"Notwithstanding the liberal policy of the City in the matter of public education, the number of children on part time in our schools has increased during the year. . . .

"The explanation of this, in view of the large appropriations made, is difficult. The factor most to be reckoned with appears to be the constant shifting of population. When the Manhattan approach to the Williamsburg Bridge was being prepared, a number of these houses were demolished; the inhabitants of these houses, and a large number of their relatives, friends and neighbors, removed to the Brownsville section of Brooklyn and to parts of The Bronx and Queens. . . .

"These conditions are not easy to grapple with, but the Board of Education is making every effort to solve the problem, and in this work has my hearty support.

"During 1906, contracts were awarded for 18 new buildings and for 23 additions to old buildings, to contain 37,950 additional sittings. The number of sittings actually provided during the year in 20 new buildings and in 39 additions was 46,698. . . . The number of schools under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education during the year was 510—3 training schools for teachers, 19 high schools, 485 elementary schools, 2 truant schools and 1 nautical school. . . .

"While I am unalterably opposed to economy in connection with the needed school facilities . . . , I am equally opposed to unnecessary extravagance, especially in the matter of training teachers, and to this end I urgently recommend the consolidation, at the earliest possible date, of the Training School for Teachers with Normal College. These institutions simply duplicate each other's work, and their fusion will do away with existing confusion and result in a saving of money to the City. . . .

"I call the attention of your Honorable Board to the very excellent results obtained during the past year by a new system of arranging architectural competitions for public buildings. There has never been, in this City, an established method of selecting architects for municipal work, but with the authorization of the new Second Battery Armory and the new Penitentiary, I arranged with the Architect of the Municipal Art Commission to select two architects of standing, whose duties were to arrange the details of the competitions, and then to invite six other architects of standing to enter each competition. The actual test of this system has proved most satisfactory. I am inclined to think that a still further improvement might be worked in the future, by permitting competing architects to select their own jury. Jan. 7

"I have long considered and now recommend to your Honorable Board the appointment of a City Architect, to be associated with the Board of Estimate and Apportionment in the same relation as the Chief Engineer of that body now holds to it. I believe that a great advance in efficient administration is to be gained by such an appointment. . . .

"The business of ticket speculation is regulated by an ordinance of your Honorable Board. Certain restrictions are placed on those engaging in it by this ordinance. It is a matter of common knowledge that in recent years these restrictions have been ignored in the most outrageous fashion, until sidewalk ticket speculating has become an intolerable nuisance. No license whatever is given by law to speculators to affront or harass in any way those who decline to purchase their tickets at exorbitant rates. The tactics employed by many of these men is a deplorable blow at the good name of our City, as a very large percentage of our theatregoers are visitors. . . . your Honorable Board, by imposing additional restrictions, can deal effectively with the situation. . . .

"In connection with this whole subject, I recommend to your Honorable Board consideration of the advisability of charging all persons engaging in the theatre ticket brokerage business a fee. At present such a fee is paid only by those engaged in sidewalk speculation. . . .

"Practically all of the front of Manhattan Island susceptible of improvement to fit it for transatlantic and coast trade is now improved, and the only extensive section lacking improvement is along the shore of the Harlem river, the development of which, in the future, must be arranged to fit it for local needs. . . .

"One problem presented by the extraordinary development on Manhattan Island is unusual and difficult. The great office buildings house a very large day population and, as the buildings cover entire blocks, there is no permeable area which will absorb storm water. The entire rainfall finds its way into the sewers soon after precipitation. This, with the drainage from the buildings, has overtaxed the old sewers, and new and larger ones must be built. An intricate system of underground structures is required for the use of the business population, and under the system prevailing this involves very frequent opening of the street surface for additions, renewals and repairs to these structures. Such openings are attended with a maximum of inconvenience and expense where the working population is so great, and it has become apparent that not only are subways or conduits needed for these sewers, pipes and ducts, but their number is becoming so great that a second street beneath the roadway used for traffic will be required to accommodate them. . . .

"The amended Charter of The City of New York has now been in force for a period of five years. In many respects it has successfully withstood the test of time, but there are a great number of provisions which, in the opinion of competent judges are in need of thorough revision. I believe that such a revision should be initiated by the City itself, and I therefore propose, in a short time, to appoint a commission of the best available material to undertake this task. . . .

"There is no reason why all automobiles including those used for sight-seeing purposes, which engage in the business of carrying persons for hire, should not be compelled to pay a license fee and to submit to a general regulation in regard to their charges. The existing ordinance is not broad enough to include this class of vehicles, although they actively compete with the business of other licensed carriers. I strongly recommend, therefore, the adoption of an amendment to the present ordinance which will place public automobiles of every kind under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Licenses."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1907), I: 3–20.

Richard Strauss's opera "Salome" is produced for the first time 22

1907 Jan. 22 in New York, at the Metropolitan Opera House, with Olive Fremsted in the title role. On Jan. 24, the directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company resolved that the opera was "objectionable and detrimental to the best interests of the Metropolitan Opera House" and prohibited its repetition.—Krehbiel, Chapters of Opera, 343 et seq.

25 The sale, at the Am. Art Galleries, of H. S. Henry's collection of 29 paintings by the Barbizon masters yields $352,800.—A Plan, etc., op. cit. Another sale of Mr. Henry's Barbizon masterpieces was held at the same place on Feb. 4, 1910, and realized $255,750.—Ibid.

Feb. 11 The Joy Line steamer "Larchmont" sinks in Long Island Sound, drowning over 100 people.—N. Y. Times, F 13 et seq., 1907.

" Puccini's latest opera, "Madame Butterfly," is presented at the Metropolitan Opera House for the first time. The singers include Farrar, Homer, Caruso, and Scotti.—N. Y. Times, F 12, 1907.

22 A bronze tablet depicting Washington at prayer at Valley Forge is erected on the sub-treasury and unveiled. It is the gift of John J. Clancy of Lafayette Post, G. A. R.—N. Y. Times, F 23, 1907.

Mar. 11 The Colony Club (see Mr 1, 1905) formally opens its building at 120 Madison Ave., of which Stanford White was the architect.—N. Y. Times, Mr 12, 1907; L. M. R. K., III: 937. In 1916, the club moved to its present location on the n. w. cor. of Park Ave. and 62d St.—Ibid.

16 The New York Club moves into its new club-house at 20 West 40th St. opposite the Public Library.—N. Y. Times, Mr 17, 1907. For this club's many changes of residence, see summary under 1846.

27 The first contract for the construction of a portion of the Catskill aqueduct (see O 27, 1905) is let.—Rep. of the Bd. of Water Supply, O 12, 1917, p. 4. See, further, Je 20.

Apr. 1 District-Attorney Jerome makes a series of raids on the poolrooms of the city. "He discovered the existence of a pool-room syndicate, which, according to reports, had a revenue from poolrooms of about $8,000,000. It was further discovered that these profits were shared by certain prominent politicians, among them a well-known State senator. These discoveries for a time practically put an end to the operation of poolrooms in New York City."—New International Year Book (1907), 563.

2 The board of aldermen authorises the appropriation of $7,000 for "repairing, redecorating and re-furnishing the three (3) Governor's rooms in the City Hall."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1907), II: 30. See also Je 9, 1906.

4 On this and the following days, the furniture and household decorations belonging to the estate of the late Stanford White were sold at his residence, No. 121 E. 21st St., under the direction of the American Art Assn., and brought $125,804. The sale attracted a large number of bidders, including many prominent citizens.—N. Y. Times, Ap 5, 6, and 7, 1907. See Ap 11.

On April 11 and 12, his ancient and modern paintings were sold at Mendelssohn Hall, 40th St. near Broadway. Another sale of Mr. White's valuable artistic property took place on Nov. 25, 26, 27, and 29, at the Am. Art Galleries, and his antique marble and stone mantels, sarcophagi, fountains, and other architectural objects were sold on Dec. 7 and 9, at the Terminal Warehouse, corner of 27th St. and Eleventh Ave.—From catalogues of sales, in N. Y. P. L.

The city acquires title, by grant and condemnation proceedings, to the land at 168th St. and Fort Washington Ave. There the armory of the 22d Regiment of Engineers was afterwards built.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), 139. June 1

The Public Service Commissions Law is passed. This creates two public service commissions in the state, displacing the railroad commission, gas commission, state inspector of gas meters, and, in New York City, the rapid transit commission established by the act of 1891 (q. v., Ja 31). The commission for the First District is given jurisdiction in the four counties comprising the city of New York, and the Second District commission is given jurisdiction in the remainder of the state. The commission for the First District has cognizance and control of the organization, operation, and transfer of public service corporations, including surface, elevated, and subway railroad companies, and gas and electric companies in New York City.—Laws of N. Y. (1907), chap. 429; Whitney, N. Y. C. Pub. Service Com. (1909). 6

The new Harlem Hospital at Lenox Ave. and 136th St. is officially opened.—N. Y. Times, Je 16, 1907. 15

The department of parks is authorised to construct extensions to the Metropolitan Museum of Art at a cost not to exceed $750,000 a year for 10 years.—Laws of N. Y. (1907), chap. 517. Wings F, G, and H were built under this law. McKim, Mead & White were the architects.—Howe, Hist. of Met. Museum of Art. For earlier wing (E), see Mr 23, 1904. 17

An act to authorise the appointment of a commission to inquire into the local government of the city of New York and its charter, and to suggest legislation thereon, becomes law.—Laws of N. Y. (1907), chap. 600. "This commission reported late in November. It suggested many changes in the charter, the most important of which was the alteration in the functions and powers of the Board of Aldermen. It recommended also the reconstruction of the Board of Education by a reduction of its members to 15, instead of 46. The general tendency of the recommendations made by the commission was in the direction of more home rule for the city, with less interference in the government on the part of the State Legislature."—New International Year Book (1907), 564. July 17

1907 July 20 The commissioner of bridges is authorised, subject to the approval of the board of estimate and apportionment, to provide for the erection of a "Municipal Building" upon land already acquired for the extension of the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge.—Laws of N. Y. (1907), chap. 670.

The following twelve architectural firms were invited to submit designs in competition: J. Stewart Barney, Carrère and Hastings, Clinton and Russell, J. H. Freedlander, Cass Gilbert, Heins and La Farge, Hoppin and Koen, Howells and Stokes, H. R. Marshall, McKim, Mead & White, Trowbridge & Livingston, and Warren and Wetmore. The conditions governing the competition were issued on Dec. 12, 1907, and the twelve designs were submitted to the department of bridges on April 15, 1908. They were judged by a jury selected by the competitors themselves, and, early in May, 1908, the design of McKim, Mead & White was chosen.—Correspondence in files of Howells and Stokes; letter to the author from Wm. Wirt Mills, commissioner of plant and structures (D 17, 1925); Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1909), I: 113–14. See also Nims, "Municipal Bldg. of the City of N. Y.," in Proc., Mun. Engineers of City of N. Y. (1913), 285–302. Cass Gilbert withdrew from the competition and was succeeded by the architectural firm of Helme and Huberty.

The last design eliminated was that of Howells and Stokes. As their design, if not actually the prototype of the present upward tapering type of skyscraper with highly accentuated vertical lines, at least marked an important step in this direction, and has had a far-reaching effect upon the design of the modern skyscraper, it has been reproduced as Pl. 78, Vol. V. The only earlier modern building known to the author which shows any indication of this tendency is the West St. building, at 90 West St., designed by Cass Gilbert and erected in 1906. Recent prominent examples of this general type are the Bush Terminal building, at 132 W. 42d St., designed by Helme & Corbett and erected in 1916–17; the American Radiator building, designed by Raymond M. Hood and erected at 40 W. 40th St. in 1923–24; and the Chicago Tribune building, designed by John Mead Howells and Raymond M. Hood and erected in Chicago in 1923. On the same plate with the municipal building design is shown a design for a skyscraper submitted by the author in the competition held in 1922 for the Chicago Tribune building. This design is reproduced as illustrating a new departure in the architectural treatment of skyscrapers in which the windows are "woven" into a design in polychrome terra cotta.

The construction work on the municipal building was begun in 1909 (q. v., Ag), and the building was occupied in 1914.—L. M. R. K., III: 974. See also A. Pl. 29-b, Vol. III, and description, III: 885.

Aug. — The public service commission (see Je 6) begins a public inquiry into the rapid transit companies of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and The Bronx, especially into the management of the Interborough Metropolitan System, which includes practically all the traction companies of Manhattan. "The testimony showed that the elevated roads were not being operated to their full capacity and that the recommendations of the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners, the predecessors of the Public Service Commission, for the better safe-guarding of travelers in the subway had not been carried out. It was shown, also, that the Belmont Tunnel under the East River, from Forty-second Street, Manhattan, to Long Island City, was owned by the Interborough Metropolitan, and that it was not the intention of the company to connect it with either the Manhattan or the Long Island lines, and that a fare of three cents would be charged for passage over it. As a result of this investigation, many changes were recommended in the operation of the roads, and most of these were carried out by the company, greatly to the advantage of the public. The attempts of the commission to learn the particulars of the merger of the various lines which went to form the Metropolitan Street Railway Company [,] including practically all the street railways of the city, was followed by many remarkable revelations. It was found that the books of the company which contained records relating to this merger had been destroyed and that there was little possibility of finding out what had really taken place when the companies were combined in 1902. It was found that during the period covered by these books, the capital stock of the company had been raised from $8,000,000 to $52,000,000, but every detail of the transactions leading to and resulting from this had been destroyed. During the progress of this investigation the New York City Railway Company, which represents practically all the surface roads in Manhattan and the Bronx, but is really an operating company owning none of these roads, went into the hands of receivers appointed by a Judge of the United States Circuit Court. This company operates surface lines through the lease of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, which, in its turn, either owns or leases about sixteen subsidiary lines. The majority of the stock of this company is owned by the Metropolitan Securities Company and the majority of their stock is owned by the Interborough Metropolitan Company. . . . A little later the Metropolitan Street Railway Company also went into the hands of receivers on account of inability to meet its expenses. The entire street railway system of New York was, therefore, at the close of the year, being operated under receiverships."—New International Year Book (1907), 563. Aug. —

6 The south tube of the Belmont Tunnel, which extends under the East River from 42d St., Manhattan to Long Island City, is completed.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 7, 1907.

17 The 100th anniversary of the first trip of the "Clermont" is observed.—N. Y. Herald, Ag 17 and 18, 1907. For the Hudson-Fulton celebration, see S 25, 1909.

27 The city acquired on this day, and on Dec. 11, the title to the land at 8–14 Chambers St., where the municipal building was afterwards built (see Ag 1909); grantors, the New York Staats Zeitung and E. Guggenheimer, executor; total purchase price (by the two conveyances), $1,690,000.—Prendergast, Record of Real Estate (1914), citing Liber Deeds, CXII: 235; ibid., XCVIII: 288.

" The entire new custom-house building (see Je 1, 1906) was occupied by this time, although not yet completed.—Letter to the author from Cass Gilbert (D 8, 1911); Ann. Rep., Supervising Archt., U. S. Treas. Dept. (1908), 206, 364. The reports of the supervising architect of the treasury dept. show that the building was still unfinished in 1912. It is shown on Pl. 165, Vol. III, and in Arch. Rec., XX: 4. For landmark history of the custom-house, see Index, and L. M. R. K., III: 974.

" The new Plaza Hotel at 59th St. and Fifth Ave. is opened. H. J. Hardenberg was the architect.—N. Y. Times, O 1, 1907. It is shown on Pl. 161-b, Vol. III. This was the third Plaza Hotel on this site. For the earlier ones, see S 18, 1888, and S 29, 1890.

19 The bronze statue, by Carl Bitter, of Gen. Franz Sigel, at 106th St. and Riverside Drive, is dedicated in the presence of more than 100,000 people. Gov. Hughes makes the principal address.—N. Y. Times, O 20, 1907. See also Cat. of the Works of Art Belonging to the City, 190.

22 A financial crisis is precipitated by the suspension of the Knickerbocker Trust Co., one of a group of banks which have been brought to the verge of bankruptcy through dishonesty and speculative management. The panic thus produced led to "runs" on various other New York banks and trust companies and to financial distress in other parts of the country. However, through the co-operation of the Clearing House, the financiers, led by J. Pierpont Morgan, and the U. S. Treasury, further suspensions were prevented, and the panic was checked. By Oct. 30, the crisis was about over.—N. Y. Times, O 22 et seq., 1907; ICONOGRAPHY, III: 806–7; New International Year Book (1907), 260.

Nov. 25 Massenet's "Thaïs" is produced for the first time in New York, at the Manhattan Opera House. Mary Garden made her American début on this occasion.—Krehbiel, Chapters of Opera, 381–85.

1907 Dec. 4 The reconstructed Fraunces Tavern (see Ag, 1906) is formally opened by the Sons of the Revolution.—N. Y. Times, D 5, 1907; Kelley, 46. See also descrip. of Pl. 167-b, III: 850.

9 Gov. Hughes removes from office John F. Ahearn, president of the borough of Manhattan.—N. Y. Times, D 10, 1907. Cf. A Report on a Special Examination of the Accounts and Methods of the Office of the President of the Borough of Manhattan, Directed by Hon. George B. McClellan, Mayor (1907).

19 Although Mayor McClellan rules, as presiding officer at a meeting of the aldermen from the borough of Manhattan, that John F. Ahearn (see D 9) has been removed from the office of borough president for the remainder of his four-year term, the aldermen overrule him and elect Mr. Ahearn to fill the vacancy.—N. Y. Times, D 20, 1907. See D 20.

20 Mayor McClellan declines to admit John F. Ahearn (see D 19) to the deliberations of the board of estimate and apportionment. "The Chair believes," said the mayor, "that the election of John F. Ahearn by the Aldermen . . . to fill the vacancy in the office of the President of the Borough of Manhattan, was contrary to the intent of the law, and that, therefore such vacancy still exists." —N. Y. Times, D 21, 1907.

30 The president of the art commission announces to the public that the governor's room in the city hall is to be restored so as to "present as nearly as possible the appearance it originally had." This is made possible by a gift of $25,000 for the purpose from Mrs. Russell Sage.—N. Y. Times, D 31, 1907.

— In this year, Mrs. Russell Sage gave a considerable sum to be expended in the planting of rhododendrons on the East Drive of Central Park between 90th and 100th Sts. She also gave to the city a fund of $25,000 for the restoration of the governor's room in the city hall to its original design.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 98. In 1912, Mrs. Sage gave an additional $25,000 for the restoration of the rotunda and dome of the city hall, and this work, together with the renovation and reconstruction of other parts of the building, was done between Dec., 1912, and Feb., 1913, from designs prepared by Grosvenor Atterbury, architect, under the direction of the art commission.—N. Y. Times, Ja 12, 1913. See also Arch. Rec., XXXIX: 513–35; descrip. of Pl. 97, III: 588.

— At this period, eight recreation piers, with music, were open each summer. In May, 1908, the Cedar St. promenade was open to the public. This was the first attempt in New York "to utilize the roofs of the sheds along the bulkheads for this purpose. . . . This promenade extends along the northerly water front [North River] from Cedar to Albany Street . . ."—Message of Mayor McClellan to the Bd. of Ald., Ja 4, 1909, p. 70.

— In this year, the shot-tower at 63–65 Centre St., erected in 1855 (q. v., O 1), was demolished.—Data supplied by Mr. Christopher C. Tracy, supt. of the tower for over 35 years; descrip. of Pl. 155-a, III: 777.

— In this year, the Union Theological Seminary began the erection of a new group of buildings covering the block between Broadway and Claremont Ave., 120th and 122d Sts. It was dedicated on Nov. 27–29, 1910.—Dedication of the New Bldgs. of the Union Theol. Sem. (N. Y., 1910); L. M. R. K., III: 941. This group was designed by Allen and Collins of Boston, who won first place in an architectural competition.

Jan. 6 In his annual message to the board of aldermen, Mayor McClellan says in part: "In spite of the most rigid economy the Budget has grown from $130,421,505.66 for the year 1907 to $143,572,266.17 for the year 1908. This increase of $13,150,760.51 is due almost entirely to the increased cost of City government caused by two reasons. First: The enactment by the State Legislature of laws interfering with the local regulation of our expenditures, thus entailing upon the City every year large mandatory increases to which it must submit. Second: The constantly increasing volume of the City's business and the higher prices which it has been forced to pay for its supplies. . . .

"The citizens of this City must bear in mind that if they demand from the municipality, schools, docks, bridges and ferries, as well as adequate fire and police protection, the public must pay for them. As long as the City continues to give the public increased facilities and improvements, the expense account of the City must continue to grow. By economizing in every direction we may keep down the amount of the increases, but we cannot prevent incurring a greater expenditure year by year. I believe, however, that if all mandatory legislation were done away with and the City were left to manage its own affairs without the State forcing it to pay large sums every year over which it has no control, it could keep its annual increases down to a very much smaller figure than at present. . . .

Jan. 6 "The time has now arrived, in my judgment, for the municipal authorities to proceed in the matter of the Fifth avenue widening. By such widening I mean the removal of all obstructions and encroachments beyond the building line, the curtailment of the outer line of the sidewalks by about seven and one-half feet on either side of the avenue, and the consequent enlargement of the roadway by about fifteen feet.

"During the past few years several cases have been prosecuted in the courts for the purpose of testing the City's right to demand the removal of these encroachments. The decisions of the courts . . . have uniformly upheld the contention of the City that all obstructions beyond the building line are illegal, and the way is therefore now open for the authorities to compel the removal of these encroachments. I have accordingly instructed the Corporation Counsel to have prepared the necessary surveys and maps showing all the encroachments beyond the building line on either side of Fifth avenue from Twenty-third street north as far as the present congestion of traffic exists. The less crowded portions of the avenue can be dealt with later. As soon as these maps are prepared, the Corporation Counsel will send out notices to all property owners who are shown to be maintaining encroachments beyond the building line, ordering them to have such obstructions removed. In case any property owner refuses to comply with this request, the City will immediately institute proceedings to compel such action through the courts. . . .

"The New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects has appointed a committee to consider the question as to how far cornices or other ornamental work in the upper stories of the buildings should be allowed, to preserve the architectural effect. This committee has made a report as to what in their view would be sufficient for the purpose without interfering with the use of the sidewalks. The congestion of Fifth avenue and Forty-second street is so great, in view of the large traffic across town at that point, that it would seem necessary to meet the situation by lowering the level of a part of Forty-second street so that the east and west traffic will pass under Fifth avenue, leaving the north and south traffic on Fifth avenue unimpeded. This matter could be taken up as part of the work to be done at the time of the widening of Fifth avenue. . . .

"In last year's message reference was made to the concentration of large office buildings on Manhattan Island and the effect of these structures upon the rapid run off of storm water and the consequent overtaxing of the sewers.

"The tendency to concentrate large numbers in such buildings during the working hours is not abating, but is still more marked, and involves problems even more serious than those already noted. It is said that two office buildings in one small block in lower Broadway will accommodate fourteen thousand people, while on adjacent blocks are two great buildings which will contain nearly as many more. This army of working men and women will arrive in the morning and leave at night within a very brief space of time, and the congestion in the streets as they go to and from the different transportation lines will present a very serious problem. It would appear that any additions to our transit facilities that do not take into account the relief of this congestion will not be thoroughly effective; in other words the transportation problem of each section of the City must be worked out in its relation to that portion of the traffic which will begin or end in the office district of the Borough of Manhattan. . . .

"There is no general ordinance in existence at the present time which specifically applies to the licensing of public automobiles. Under an order of the Supreme Court the Bureau of Licenses is now issuing licenses to such vehicles under the general ordinance relating to public hacks and cabs. This ordinance, however, was never intended, in my opinion, to apply to automobiles and fails to regulate their charges in proper fashion. I recommend, therefore, the adoption of an ordinance which will apply directly to these vehicles. At the same time I believe that some provision should be made for licensing all sight-seeing automobiles which, at present, pay no fee whatsoever to the City. . . .

"I think it also most important that the following regulations should be adopted in regard to the use of all automobiles, both public and private, within the City:

"First—That all automobiles should be equipped with adequate mufflers, which never should be cut out within the limits of the built-up portions of the City.

"Second—That, except for the first ten seconds after starting the engines of an automobile, no smoke should be allowed to come out of the exhaust pipe. It is wholly unnecessary and is simply an evidence of carelessness and incompetence.

"Third—That the use of acetylene headlights within the built-up portions of the City should be prohibited. The use of these lights is very dangerous and has resulted in causing many accidents by dazzling pedestrians and drivers of vehicles coming in the opposite direction. These lights are unnecessary on the City street, and I understand that responsible drivers, of their own volition, refuse to use them. . . .

"Among the many difficult problems of municipal government, there is none, to my mind, of greater importance than that of the proper maintenance of streets, roadways, parkways and pavements. In a city so largely given over to traffic as ours, the solution of this question is not easy. I question if any municipality in the world has spent more money or given more study to the street problem than New York. In spite of this, and the energy and unselfish assistance of civic bodies like the Merchants' Association, in independently grappling with problems, the solution of which properly belongs to City officials, results have been far from satisfactory. The failure of contractors to live up to their obligations in repairing and replacing surfaces, the neglect of City officials entrusted with the supervision of their work to compel them to live up to the letter of their contracts, the necessary tearing up of roadways for sub-surface improvements, and the great increase in heavy trucking, have all combined to bring about conditions with which I am not surprised to find the great body of our citizens discontented.

"Under the energetic administration of the new Commissioner of Public Works, Mr. Thompson, many of the evils which brought about these deplorable conditions have disappeared, and steady improvement is noticeable. Nevertheless, we are far from where we should be in matters of street administration, and it is with great pleasure that I inform your Honorable Board that the Chief Executive of the greatest of the old cities, the Prefect of the Seine, recently informed Mr. Collin M. Ingersoll, Chief Engineer of the Department of Bridges, who went to Paris at my request to study materials and methods employed there in roadways and pavements, of the intention of the French Government to call an international congress during the present year for a discussion of this important subject. . . .

"The City of Paris is largely using wood block pavement, laid on a concrete base. The blocks are made from the native woods of France treated in an inexpensive manner. The municipality has its own plant for the manufacture and treatment of the wood blocks and for redressing blocks which are used in pavement repairs. The methods there in use, if employed here, would permit of wide competition for contracts to lay wood block pavements, as against the present time limited competition confined practically to owners of patented processes. The wood block pavements, notwithstanding the heavy traffic of Paris, last six or seven years, are easily repaired and practically noiseless.

"The serious question of the maintenance of macadam parkways is receiving consideration abroad, as here, on account of the wear by automobiles which, taking their power from the road, destroy the roadway surface much quicker than in the case of ordinary vehicular traffic. To counteract this effect, experiments are being made abroad with a tar covering for macadam roadways. These experiments have been very successful. The tar covering is not expensive, and is applied by means of tank machines drawn by horses. It forms a thin coat of binding material on the roadway surface which resists for some time the wear due to automobile traffic, is free from dust, and effects a saving in cost of maintenance, as the roadway so coated does not require to be frequently watered. Several of the roadways in the Bois are treated by this method and the artistic effect of the parkway is not marred.

"As the use of automobiles for heavy trucking is becoming extensive, the time has arrived when the City should define the maximum limit of size and weight of machines which may be used on its streets, and the character of tires with which machines shall be equipped. . . . Jan. 6

"The trolley car service over the Williamsburg Bridge has been increased about 7 per cent. over last year. . . .

"The design for the proposed Hendrick Hudson Memorial Bridge has been approved by the Art Commission. . . .

"The main span has more than twice the length of any other masonry arch ever constructed. . . .

"Plans are ready for the filtration of the Croton water supply. Sanitary and engineering authorities are agreed that filtration is an ultimate necessity. . . . In spite of constant vigilance, the protection of a watershed of 360 square miles is annually becoming more difficult, expensive and uncertain. The only real safety lies in filtration.

"In its efforts to safeguard the watershed the City has negotiated with Mount Kisco on a plan for the disposal of its sewage, which was adopted by a vote of the people of Mount Kisco at the special election last fall. Mount Kisco is to put in a new sewage system at its own expense and The City of New York is to provide the sewage disposal plant, at an estimated cost of $200,000. By this arrangement a conspicuous menace to our water supply and a demonstrated source of communicable diseases will be eliminated. . . .

"Under an agreement between the City and the Kings County Lighting Company the 4,500 open-flame 16 candle-power gas lamps in Brooklyn are being displaced by mantle lamps of 60 candle-power, and before the end of this month the last open-flame lamp will have disappeared from New York. Extensions of the gas and electric lighting system in all the boroughs have kept pace with our growth, preserving to New York its prestige as the best lighted city in the world. . . .

"As the municipal improvement of the waterfront of Manhattan Island, begun in 1870, is practically complete, the City has found it advisable for the purpose of increasing the facilities for transatlantic trade, to build nine piers between Twenty-eighth and Sixty-fifth streets, South Brooklyn. The approach to these will allow the largest vessels to dock. . . .

"Central Park is being rehabilitated as rapidly as the finances of the Department of Parks will permit. Spring will show what has been accomplished by the treatment of the soil on the east side of the park and this work will be continued until a complete restoration has been accomplished. The park drives have been thoroughly repaired and the bridle roads have received much attention. A modern water supply and irrigation system between Fifty-ninth and Seventy-second streets and between Ninety-seventh and One Hundred and Tenth streets, has been contracted for and the work will be finished at the close of this year. The re-paving of Fifth avenue, between Ninetieth and One Hundred and Tenth streets, is in progress and will be half finished at the close of the year. . . .

"Work proposed for the coming year includes the construction and improvement of playgrounds between One Hundred and Thirty-sixth and One Hundred and Thirty-eighth streets, St. Nicholas terrace and Amsterdam avenue; the planting of St. Nicholas and Colonial parks, the improvement of John Jay Park and the Corlears Hook Park extension, the improvement and laying out of Chelsea Park and the construction of Colonial Park between One Hundred and Forty-fifth and One Hundred and Fiftieth streets. Most important of all, however, will be the further improvement, reconstruction and restoration of Central Park. . . .

"During the year just ended the Metropolitan Museum of Art has made gratifying progress in the work it has accomplished, in the number and importance of its acquisitions, and in its power to attract the public. The recorded number of visitors during the year has been close upon 800,000. Its educational opportunities have been placed at the disposal of the public to a greater extent than ever before: and teachers and pupils, both of the public schools and of private institutions and colleges, have been quick to take advantage of them.

"During the summer there were unavoidable delays in the construction of the extension of the building on Fifth avenue, but good progress has been made in the last months, and there is now a prospect that it will be completed in the early summer. Work is also well under way on the new wing which is to be erected back of this extension. This new wing is intended primarily to contain the great Hoentschel collection of objects illustrating the decorative arts of the Gothic period and the eighteenth century in France, 1908 Jan. 6 which the museum owes to the generosity of its President, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. . . .

"The City is to be congratulated on the fact that owing to the generosity of Mrs. Sage, and the discovery in possession of the New York Historical Society, of John McComb's original drawings of the plans of the City Hall, it will be possible to restore the Governor's room as it was when the building was completed in 1803 [error for 1812]. [The McComb drawings were purchased by the N. Y. Hist. Soc. in 1898, through Mr. Jos. Sabin, from Mrs. Edward S. Wilde, the granddaughter of McComb.—Descrip. of Pl. 75, I: 460.]

"There are nearly a hundred of these drawings, all executed by McComb himself, and in an excellent state of preservation. They, of course, cover the construction of the entire building, but there is one cross-section running from north to south, which cuts directly through the Governor's room, showing the vaulted ceiling which the room originally had, and the style of decoration at the ends. The windows in the room, in fact, the windows throughout the entire building, have evidently never been changed. Mrs. Sage's gift of $25,000 will, I believe, cover the entire cost of the work of restoration. . . .

"My recommendation of last year that all architectural work outside of the minor work of the departments be awarded after competition, the contestants to select their own jury, has been followed, the most conspicuous instance being the new municipal building, the competition for which is now under way.

"Too much care cannot be exercised, in my opinion, in keeping all municipal work up to the highest standard. The work of the Art Commission in this respect is well known to you. The jurisdiction of this Commission now extends to all work involving the expenditure of $250,000 or over. It has been my constant aim to assist the Commission in every way possible, with what excellent results is shown by the plans for the new armories for the Second Battery and the Twenty-second Regiment, the new penitentiary, the South ferry and Staten Island ferry terminals, the Chelsea improvement and the Hendrick Hudson Memorial Bridge at Spuyten Duyvil.

"I desire to call the attention of your Honorable Board to the excellent work inaugurated during the year by the Municipal Art Commission in completely cataloguing the art works of the City. This work I am informed will be completed next month. . .

"Work on the New York Public Library has gone on without serious interruption. The marble structure is complete and the interior work, which will cost $3,133,000, has been started. . . .

"Plans have been approved and architects selected for a new penitentiary for all of the boroughs, on Riker's Island, at an estimated cost of $4,000,000. Pending its completion only such minor repairs as are necessary will be done at the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island. The manufacturing industries formerly carried on at the Kings County Penitentiary are now in successful operation at Blackwell's Island Penitentiary, the output being used by the Departments of Charities and Education. . . .

"In no branch of the City Government have more satisfactory results been achieved during the year than in the Health Department. The report of the Bureau of Vital Statistics shows a marked falling off in the number of deaths, and the increased rigor of the sanitary inspections has kept disease among children and adults down to a figure encouragingly below the figures of 1906. . . .

"The provisions of the Sanitary Code have been rigorously enforced. New sections regarding the supervision of lodging houses, meat and poultry, milk, and the sale of cocaine have been added, and numerous arrests and prosecutions have been made for violation of these sections. For spitting in public places alone 1,784 arrests were made. . . .

"There has been a great decrease since 1906 in the building of new tenements, particularly in Manhattan. Two-thirds of the new building work of the whole City last year was done in Brooklyn, where the number of new buildings was 2,113 in the first nine months of 1907, as compared with 2,604 for the corresponding period in 1906. Fewer new buildings has not decreased the work of the Tenement House Department to any considerable extent, however, for the reason that only 15 per cent. of the force is detailed to new building work. . . .

"Three new fireboats,—the 'Thomas Willett,' the 'James Duane' and the 'Cornelius W. Lawrence'—were launched. The 'Willett' and the 'Duane,' named for the first Mayor of New York and the first Mayor after the Revolution, will be in service in a few weeks, while the 'Lawrence,' named after the first elected Mayor, will be under steam in a few months. Jan. 6

"Ten fire companies have been established in territory hitherto protected by the volunteer companies, while eight companies have been added to the regular service in Manhattan, The Bronx and Brooklyn. The uniformed force has been increased by 445 men. . . .

"While this city has the best fire protection in the world, more men and more apparatus must be added to the Department. . . .

"It is now ten years since the consolidation of the four counties comprising the present City of New York was accomplished. The results may not be all that were dreamed of by the fathers of consolidation, but they have been satisfactory in the main, and, it is to be hoped, may be brought nearer to perfection by a new Charter designed to correct the faults which experience has shown in the old.

"This much at least, can be said: That all the five boroughs have benefited by the union which has made New York the largest single city of the world. Few citizens would care to destroy the centralization of power which, working through the great departments, has provided the best of police and fire protection, pure and regular water supply, cleanliness of streets and safeguarding of public health, a greater and better school system, and, in short, progress along all lines of municipal government.

"The history of these ten years has shown that the faults which remain in our methods of city government are not due to the centralization of municipal functions, but rather are found where such centralization was not provided. These are the faults which a new Charter must remedy."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1908), I: 14–45.

The East River tunnel connecting the Bowling Green station of the subway with Borough Hall, Brooklyn, is opened.—N. Y. Herald, Ja 9, 1908. 8

The legislature directs the governor to appoint a commission of 15 members, "to be known as the New York charter commission, to inquire into the local government of the city of New York, and the counties contained therein with power to investigate the manner of conducting and transacting business in the several departments, boards and offices thereof, the effect and working of the charter of Greater New York and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and of any and all other acts relating to said city, and to suggest such legislation as it may deem advisable with respect thereto." The city board of estimate and apportionment is to appropriate $30,000, or less as shall be necessary, for the expenses of the commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 114. See Mr 8, 1909. 13

The city is authorised to lease Ward's Island to the state for 50 years, at an annual rent of one dollar, on condition that the state "will construct within ten years from the passage of this act a modern hospital for the care and treatment of the insane in accordance with plans and specifications for the improvement and erection of buildings which shall have been submitted to the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York and approved by it."—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 139. 16

1908 Apr. 21 Dr. Frederick A. Cook, of Brooklyn, claimed that, on this day, he discovered the North Pole. After Peary's return in 1909 (q. v., Ap 6), Cook's claims were pronounced fraudulent.—Eve. Post, S 1, 1909. See S 1, 6, and 21, 1909. Peary's discovery of the actual pole seems to have been confirmed by the observations of the Byrd and the Amundsen expeditions in May, 1926.

23 Jonkheer R. de Marees van Swinderen, minister of foreign affairs of The Netherlands, writes from The Hague to the Hudson-Fulton celebration commission that a committee of Hollanders has been formed to build a replica of the "Half Moon" for the celebration in 1909. On May 26, the president and secretary of the commission answered, expressing their appreciation.—Official Min. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., I: 487–88, 500–1, 508–9.

Researches were made by both the New York commission and the Holland committee to determine the size, appearance, and interior arrangements of the original vessel. Details of her masting, rigging, tonnage, and dimensions were ascertained from Juet's Log, the sailing and memorandum books of the East India Co., Asher's Henry Hudson, the Navigator, and Nicolaes Witsen's Aeloude in Hedendaegsche Scheeps-Bouw en Bestier (Amsterdam, 1671). The complete plans of a sister-ship, the "Hope," which had been built at about the same time and at the same cost as the "Half Moon," were also found in the Holland archives. From all the data secured, the replica of Hudson's vessel was designed by C. L. Loder, director of ship-building of the Netherland navy department. Her keel was laid on Oct. 29 (q. v.), and she was built under the immediate supervision of E. J. Benthem and under the general direction of Admiral Roell.—Official Min. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., I: 501–8, 567; descrip. of Pl. 173, III: 854–55.

26 A week's celebration in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the creation of the Roman Catholic diocese of New York is begun.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, Ap 5, 26–My 3, 1908.

May 6 The legislature passes a law increasing the number of members of the Hudson-Fulton celebration commission by adding to it the mayors of the up-state cities and the presidents of the principal villages.—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 217. This was done, at the request of the commission, "to make the Celebration one of state-wide participation and particularly to enlist the interest of the communities along the whole Hudson river valley."—Hudson-Fulton Celebration, 1909 (4th Ann. Rep. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., 1910), I: 29–30.

14 The five large buildings of the College of the City of New York, at 138th to 140th Sts., Amsterdam Ave. and St. Nicholas Terrace (see My 7, 1907), are formally dedicated. They were designed by George B. Post.—N. Y. Herald, My 15, 1908; L. M. R. K., III: 939.

20 The legislature authorises the commissioner of parks, with the consent of the board of estimate and apportionment, "to erect . . . an escalator, or mechanical device for the carrying of persons under such rules and regulations as may be hereafter adopted by the department of parks over and across Morningside park, in the said city, at or near the intersection of West One Hundred and Sixteenth street, between Morningside avenue east and Morningside avenue west, borough of Manhattan," at the expense of the city.—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 402. The escalator was never built.

22 The legislature appropriates an additional $150,000 for the use of the Hudson-Fulton celebration commission.—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 466.

" The legislature appropriates $500 "For expenses of removal of remains of former governor George Clinton from Washington, and the suitable interment of same at Kingston."—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chap. 466. The removal of Clinton's remains from Washington to Kingston was made a part of the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the founding of Kingston, and authority to make the transfer was secured upon the application of Clinton's descendants.—"The Clinton Obsequies," in Olde Ulster, IV: 205–14.

28 The body of George Clinton, first governor of New York State, arrived in the city this morning from Washington and was escorted by a parade of 5,000 men to the governor's room of the city hall, where it lay in state until 4 p. m. and was visited by about 40,000 people. The bells of the down-town churches tolled during the day, the city hall was draped in black, and the flags were at half mast. On May 29, the remains were taken to Kingston, where they were re-buried with impressive ceremonies on May 30.—N. Y. Daily Tribune, My 29–31, 1908; "The Clinton Obsequies," in Olde Ulster, IV: 205–14.

June 11 Gov. Hughes signs the anti-racetrack gambling bills.—Laws of N. Y. (1908), chaps. 506 and 507.

July 6 Robert E. Peary, in the ship "Roosevelt," sails from New York on his expedition to the North Pole. He is given an enthusiastic send-off.—Peary, The North Pole, 3–6, 25–26. See Ap 21, 1908; Ap 6, 1909.

" The high pressure fire service is put into successful operation. The area covered by it is bounded by Chambers St., 23d St., North River, Broadway, Fourth Ave., and The Bowery. There are two pumping-stations, one at Gansevoort and West Sts., and the other at Oliver and South Sts.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Jan. 4, 1909.

Aug. — The new ferry-house at the Manhattan end of the old Staten Island ferry is begun. It was designed to form part of a uniform structure extending from the Governor's Island ferry slip to Broad St.—625 feet. Between Whitehall and Broad Sts., the site of the old 39th St. ferry to Brooklyn, three new ferry slips were built, and a new ferry-house, costing $648,000, was nearly completed.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 69.

Sept. — The first public school in this city for deaf-mutes is opened.—Message of Mayor McClellan, Ja 4, 1909, p. 55.

Oct. 8 A city ordinance is passed changing the name of Blackwell's Island Bridge (see F 23, 1901) to Queensboro Bridge.—Proc., App'd by Mayor (1908), 473. See also L. M. R. K., III: 926. The bridge was opened on March 30, 1909 (q. v.).

29 The keel of the replica of the "Half Moon" (see Ap 23) is laid at Amsterdam.—Official Min. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., I: 952–53.

Nov. 3 Wm. H. Taft and James S. Sherman, Republicans, are elected president and vice-president. The Democratic candidates were Wm. J. Bryan and John W. Kern.—Am. Dict. of Dates, 91.

" Chas. E. Hughes is re-elected governor of New York State, over his Democratic opponent, Lewis S. Chanler.—N. Y. Tribune, N 4, 1908.

14 The "Martyrs' Monument," in memory of the prison-ship victims of the Revolution, is dedicated in Fort Greene Park, Brooklyn. Pres.-elect Taft delivers the oration. 17 At five sales held between this date and April 7, 1909, the books, manuscripts, bookplates, and autographs belonging to Henry W. Poor were sold at auction.—From list of important sales, held at The Anderson Galleries.

22 The congregation of St. John's Chapel is officially notified that Trinity vestry has decided to close the chapel on Feb. 1, 1909, and to transfer the work of the parish to St. Luke's. This announcement resulted in a popular agitation "which has not been paralleled in both kind and extent within the memory of the present generation." The widespread protest against the vestry's decision came from within the parish, against the proposed abandonment of the spiritual ministrations of St. John's, and from without, against the abandonment and demolition of the historic landmark.

On Dec. 5, the congregation held a meeting, appointed a committee, and prepared a petition, signed by 557 members, asking the vestry to reconsider its action. This petition was denied. On Dec. 14, the clergy and workers of the parish presented a memorial stressing the neighbourhood's need of the chapel, but this, so far as known, was never acknowledged. On Dec. 29, the congregation held a second meeting and drew up a second petition, requesting an opportunity to prove that the work being done by the chapel was, and would increasingly be, needed, that St. John's showed better results than some of the other chapels of Trinity Church, and that its work could not be successfully transferred to St. Luke's or any other chapel. In conclusion, they asked that if the vestry insisted upon closing the chapel, they permit the congregation to be incorporated as St. John's Church and convey to them the building and grounds, in which event they offered to supply the money to carry on the services and work. This petition, also, was denied, on on Jan. 12, 1909.

The protest from outside the parish culminated in a notable memorial, which was made public on Dec. 16, 1908, and which was signed by some of the most distinguished citizens of New York, including President Roosevelt, Secretary Root, Mayor McClellan, ex-Mayor Low, and Joseph H. Choate. This protest (see Pl 79, Vol. V) read, in part, as follows:

1908 Nov. 22 "The recent announcement of the vestry that on February 1 next the work at St. John's Chapel, Varick street, will be abandoned, and the natural inference which follows, that the church building will be demolished, came as a surprise and shock to the community, saddening the hearts of those who reverence the ancient monuments of our city and believe in the up-lifting power of venerable traditions and accumulated effort and the refining and ennobling influence of dignified and beautiful architecture.

"Since this action was taken many questions have been publicly raised as to the adequacy of the reasons for a step of such grave importance, affecting more deeply perhaps than had been realized the feelings of the community and the civic pride in a building which, by common consent, ranks only second to St. Paul's Chapel, among the very few remaining monuments of our past. These questions will, we doubt not, receive your further consideration.

"In our country there exists no public tribunal charged with the care of our national monuments, and upon you therefore as sole trustee devolves in this case a double responsibility, a responsibility which we believe you fully appreciate and will wisely discharge." The Municipal Art Commission, the Fine Arts' League, the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, the N. Y. Chapter of the Am. Institute of Architects, the Architectural League, and other bodies, also adopted resolutions on the subject, and the rectors of the Protestant Episcopal parishes throughout the city as well as the clergymen of other denominations preached sermons upon it.

As Trinity vestry had denied both of their petitions, the congregation finally appealed to the courts, on the ground that under the law of 1814 they were voters in Trinity parish, and that the closing of St. John's and the relegation of the membership to the free-mission chapel of St. Luke's deprived them of their franchise rights. They obtained an injunction restraining the vestry from closing the chapel. Trinity finally announced that, while regular parochial work would be discontinued at St. John's and transferred to St. Luke's Chapel, St. John's would be made the centre of evangelistic work to meet the needs of workers employed in the warehouses and factories of that section. On April 14, 1909, Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman handed down a decision vacating the injunction obtained by the congregation, and declaring that the vestry had power to close the chapel if it chose to do so, but the popular sentiment against its abandonment and removal was so great, that Trinity took no further action at this time.—The Case of St. John's Chapel (1909); Petition of the Congregation of St. John's Chapel, to The Rector, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of Trinity Church (pamphlet in N. Y. P. L.); Sun, D 17 et seq., 1908; N. Y. Tribune, N 24, 29, 30, D 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 16 et seq., 1908; 14th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist Pres. Soc. Mag.*, LXVIII: 2–16; Outlook, XC: 852–53; XCI: 97–98; descrip. of Pl. 106-a, III: 608.

The matter thus rested until Sept., 1911, when the board of estimate and apportionment voted $3,000,000 for the extension southward of Seventh Ave. from 11th to Varick St. and the widening of the latter thoroughfare to West Broadway and Franklin St. As soon as it became known that the plans adopted for the widening of Varick St. to 100 feet would necessitate the removal of the porch and tower of St. John's, the N. Y. Federation of Architects, the Am. Institute of Architects, the Architectural League, the American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society, and other organizations, protested to the city government with a view to secure such modifications of the plan as would save this historic building. The city finally agreed, in 1914, to allow a projection of the porch over the sidewalk, in accordance with plans prepared by Mr. Stokes and submitted by a committee, and an appropriation of $17,000 was made to cover the expense of this work, which involved the underpinning of the tower. The Trinity trustees promised to maintain the chapel for two more years and after that time to give those interested an opportunity to buy the edifice and thus to assure its preservation. However, the money for the purchase of the church was never raised, and in 1918, amid public protest, the building was demolished.—17th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. 1909

In this year, the History of the City of New York in the Seventeenth Century, by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, was published in 2 vols. —

In this year, the art commission published a Catalogue of the Works of Art Belonging to the City of New York. —

In this year, John C. Van Dyke issued a book descriptive of the city, entitled The New New York. A Commentary on the Place and the People, illustrated with 123 plates by Joseph Pennell. —

Among the curious and interesting New York City ordinances on the books are the following: —

"No bicycle shall be allowed to proceed in any street of the city by inertia or momentum, with the feet of the rider removed from the pedals," and no bicyclist "shall remove both hands from the handle-bars, or practice any trick or fancy riding in any street."

No street peddler shall "incumber any street, avenue or highway for a longer period than thirty minutes at any one time on any one block," or "stand in front of any premises, the owner of or the lessee of the ground floor thereof objecting thereto," or blow upon a horn or other instrument to give notice of his approach, or cry his wares on Sundays, or before 8 a. m. or after 9 p. m. (except Saturdays), or within 250 ft. of any school, court-house, church, or hospital between 8 a. m. and 4 p. m.

Auctioneers shall not use a "bellman or crier," or any "drum or fife, or other instrument of music, or any show-signal or means of attracting the attention of passengers other than a sign or flag."

The number of organ-grinders is limited to 300, and they may not play on Sunday or on other days before nine or after seven, or within 500 ft. of a schoolhouse or church during school hours or worship, or within a like distance of "any hospital, asylum or other public institution," or within 250 ft. of "any dwelling house or other building, when directed or requested by an occupant thereof not to so perform."

No person shall "from any window or open space situated in any story of a house above the street floor, which window or open space is visible from the street, or from the sidewalk on the opposite side of the street, exhibit to the public . . . any pantomime performance of puppet or other figures, ballet or other dancing, comedy, farce, show with moving figures, play or other entertainment of the stage or dramatic performance, or of that nature."

"No person shall drive any horse before a sleigh or sled . . . unless there shall be a sufficient number of bells attached to the harness of such horse and sleigh or sled to warn persons of his approach."

Every "horseless coach, carriage or cab shall be equipped with a bell to be used to signal its approach to pedestrians and to other vehicles."

All "horses, swine or neat cattle found at large" shall be taken to the public pound.

No automobile or other vehicle "wearing chains over the tires of their wheels" and no motor vehicle "which emits from the exhaust or muffler thereof offensive quantities of smoke or gas or disa-

1909 greeable odors" shall be allowed in the public parks.—Cosby, Code of Ordinances of the City of N. Y. (1909).

— In this year, there were 2,300,000 persons (estimated) living in tenements. Of these 947,065 (estimated) were living in the 15,739 "New Law" tenements which had been erected since the passage of the Tenement House Law of 1901 (q.v., Ap 12).—5th Rep., Tenement House Dept., 101.

— At this time, there still stood in front of the following residences formerly occupied by mayors of this city the so-called "lamps of honor," which for many years it had been the custom to erect as a mark of distinction: that of Mayor Wickham, at Lexington Ave. and 39th St.; Mayor Grace, 31 E. 79th St.; Mayor Strong, at 12 West 57th St.; and the mayor then in office, McClellan, at No. 10 Washington Square North. Mayor Van Wyck declined the honour, believing the lamps served no useful purpose.—The House Beautiful, XXV: 58 (which states that there were nine such residences, but names only the above four). To these may be added that of Mayor Hewitt, No. 9 Lexington Ave.

— In this year, the governor's room in the city hall was restored to its original design under the direction of the art commission from designs by Grosvenor Atterbury and his associate John Almy Tompkins. The expense was defrayed by Mrs. Russell Sage (see 1908).—Arch. Rec., XXXIX: 474–90; N. Y. Sun, Ag 18, 1912. The room, after its reconstruction, is shown on A. Pl. 21-b, Vol. III. See also descrips. of Pl. 97, III: 588, and Pl. 101-b, III: 598.

— In this year, the N. Y. Public Library building, on Fifth Ave. between 40th and 42d Sts. (see N 10, 1902), was completed.—Lydenberg, Hist. of the N. Y. P. L. (1923). After the interior finish and furnishing were completed, and the libraries and works of art had been transferred to it from the Astor and Lenox Libraries, etc., the building was formally opened on May 23, 1911.—17th Ann. Rep., Am. Scen. & Hist. Pres. Soc. (1912), 317–42; L. M. R. K., III: 957.

This central library building cost the city $9,000,000, and has a capacity of 3,000,000 volumes. It is operated by the N. Y. Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations, with its private funds, pursuant to an agreement made in 1897 (q.v., D 8), with the city, by which, in substance, the city having contracted to construct at its expense, from plans prepared by the Public Library corporation, a central library building, agreed to lease the building when completed to the Public Library as long as the trustees of the library should maintain in it a library at their own expense. The Public Library installed in the new building collections aggregating 839,867 books, 302,274 pamphlets, 73,109 prints, 7,000 maps, and a considerable number of paintings and other works of art.—N. Y. P. L. Bulletin, Feb., 1912. The building is shown on A. Pl. 30-b, Vol. III.

— In this year, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. building and tower (see 1890) were completed, occupying the block bounded by Madison and Fourth Aves., 23d and 24th Sts. The total height of the tower is 700 ft. The architect was Napoleon Le Brun.—Met. Life Bldg. (pub. by the company). See also L. M. R. K., III: 967, and descrip. of Pl. 168, III: 850.

— Columbia University, as it appeared in this year, is shown on Pl. 170, Vol. III.

— In this year, Joseph Pennell, etcher, lithographer, illustrator, and author, was elected a National Academician. He died April 23, 1926, at his residence in Brooklyn.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 278; N. Y. Times, Ap 24, 1926.

— At this time, Howard Pyle was at the height of his fame as a painter and illustrator. He died in 1911.—Fielding, Dict. of Am. Painters, etc. (1926), 291; see also Helen W. Henderson, A Loiterer in N. Y. (1917), 453.

Jan. 4 In his annual message to the board of aldermen, Mayor McClellan gives a summary of the progress made by the city during the five years of his administration. He says, in part: "The City Budget for 1909, exclusive of the County Budgets and the item for the deficiency in the collection of taxes, exceeds the City Budget for 1904 by $45,483,644. This is a great sum, and if there were reason to believe that the expenditures of the City must continue to increase at the same rate, there might be cause for alarm. There is, however, no ground for such fear, if the same care continues to be exercised in estimating City expenses and preparing the Budget. . . .

"The last five years has been a period of development and expansion rendered necessary by the expansion of the territory of the old City of New York from sixty-two square miles to three hundred and twenty-seven, and the extension of City methods and conveniences over a large part of this vast area. . . . Jan. 4

"While the increase in expenditure has been very great, the growth in the actual value of real estate, together with certain changes in financial methods, have reduced the average tax burden on the true value of property below what it was before or immediately after consolidation. . . .

"Criticism of the work of obtaining an additional water supply in the Catskill Mountain shed should not be that it is extravagant and unnecessary but that The City of New York should have begun the work long before it did. We should be actually getting water now from the Catskills or some equally good source. Our shortage to-day would be far more serious but for the plentiful rainfall of 1907.

"The water shortage danger is an ever increasing one, not only because of the demands of a constantly increasing population, but because of the indications of a diminution in the abnormally abundant rainfall of recent years. On account of this situation the City is not only hastening the construction of the Catskill Aqueduct between Ashokan Reservoir and the Croton watershed, but is working on the temporary development of a supply from sources east of the Hudson River. . . . The Catskill supply and the Suffolk County well system, will, when fully developed, furnish without detriment to the localities in which they are situated 1,000,000,000 gallons of water daily. With as much of the present supply as will then remain safe for use, the City of New York will have a daily supply of 1,500,000,000 gallons. . . .

"While the installation of the high pressure system has been the conspicuous accomplishment in the direction of fire protection, the natural units of fire-fighting have not been neglected. The uniformed force has been increased in the last five years from 2,974 officers and men to 4,210, an increase of 40 per cent. In the same period twenty-four new engine companies, twenty-four hook and ladder companies and seven hose companies have been organized and seven single companies in service have been reorganized and added to the list of double companies, which now number twenty-six. The hose companies include those now specially drilled to handle the high pressure service, so that there is now in Greater New York a combined force of 249 engines and hook and ladder companies. . . .

"During this administration nineteen new apparatus houses have been built and sixty-four old houses have been altered and repaired, with sanitary improvements for the benefit of the force. Nine new houses are in course of construction and thirteen others are being rebuilt. A new and well equipped repair shop offers every advantage for the quick repair of hose and other apparatus. . . .

"The paid system has been carried into Rockaway Beach, Far Rockaway, Jamaica, Richmond Hill, Flushing and College Point in the Borough of Queens, reducing the number of volunteer companies to forty-two. Of the original fifty-seven volunteer companies in Richmond only thirteen remain, the paid service being now general in that Borough.

"Since January 1, 1904, the lighting of the City has been almost entirely changed. The first decided improvement was made in 1904, when some 16,000 of the old gas lamps in Manhattan and The Bronx were changed to mantle lamps. A beginning was also made in adding to the arc lighting along the main streets. This was somewhat difficult on account of the high prices demanded, but early in 1905 prices were reduced by statute, and since then this work has gone on rapidly. . . .

"I especially desire to call the attention of your Honorable Board to the work of the Health Department during the past five years. There is no other Department of the City government the operations of which are of such vital concern to our people. Since 1903 the work of this Department has increased tremendously, but the results achieved more than justify the expenditures of money that have been made. . . .

"In 1903 there were 997 employees in the Department of Health. There are now 2,351. . . . During the first eleven months of the present year the death rate was the smallest ever known in our history. . . . It is only fair to the Tenement House Department, the Charities Department, the Street Cleaning Department and Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, to give each its share in this. The functions of these Departments ally them closely with the Department of Health, and much of what the latter may accomplish depends upon their efficient administration. . . .

"In the Department of Charities, the Department of Health and Bellevue and Allied Hospitals a constant war has been waged against tuberculosis, and the educational work that has been done, notably through the recent tuberculosis exhibit at the Museum of Natural History, has been of incalculable benefit to our people.

"Dr. Robert Koch, who, in 1882, definitely placed tuberculosis in the group of infectious, communicable and preventable diseases, has recently paid our City one of the greatest compliments it has ever received. He stated that conditions in the campaign against tuberculosis in New York City are almost ideal. . . .

"Two years ago Dr. Robert Gibson, a Bacteriologist of the Health Department, perfected a method of concentration of diphtheria antitoxin, which has been in use by the Department, and which has proved so valuable that it has now been adopted by all manufacturers, as well as by all the City and State laboratories in the United States, and is beginning to be used abroad. During the past year this method has been still further perfected by Dr. E. J. Banzhaf. These processes have been of great importance in the administration of antitoxin and reflect great credit upon the Department. . . .

"The City of New York receives its supply of milk from six different States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut. About 40,000 farms and dairies ship milk to the City. Before 1905 the control of the milk supply was purely local and consisted of the inspection of the shops where milk was sold at retail. Since that date a system of inspection of the farms and dairies has been instituted, with the result that no dairy or creamery can now ship milk to New York City unless it has conformed to the sanitary requirements of the Department of Health. . . .

"Since 1905 a vigorous campaign against mosquitoes has been waged on Staten Island by the Board of Health, under the direction of Dr. Alvah H. Doty, Health Officer of the Port. . . .

"Department of Public Charities.

"The past five years have seen progress of a most gratifying nature made in this Department. Improved methods of operation have been introduced and many new buildings have been erected, until to-day it is one of the best equipped departments of the City government, both in plant and personnel.

"Not only has Commissioner Hebberd arranged adequately to meet the demands of the present time, but also the demands of the future. For the first time we have to-day a topographical survey of Blackwell's Island, and the maps and plans that have been made, looking to the ultimate development of the Island as a hospital park, have been approved by the Art Commission. When these plans are carried to consummation, I question if any municipality in the world will have a hospital park approaching it in location and facilities. . . .

"Through the generosity of Mrs. Russell Sage, the income of $300,000 is being used to build up the very important pathological work of the City Hospital and the City Home, Manhattan. . . .

"As a result of the work of the past five years it may be stated that the Department of Public Charities is, in plant, equipment and administration, in better condition than ever before in its history. . . .

"New York City is traditionally liberal in the matter of public education. During the past five years the demands on it for this purpose have grown at a greater rate than ever before in our history. It has been the constant aim of the Board to return to the community, not only in facilities for obtaining education, but in actual education, full value for every dollar expended. As Mayor of the City, I am very proud of what has been accomplished in this direction during the past five years. There is no such thing as being satisfied with the work of a department of this character, for, with a population which grows like ours, there is always more to be done. But the record is an excellent one. . . .

"Since 1904, the new sites acquired number 179, not including 11 sites authorized to be acquired. Ninety-six new buildings and 134 additions to existing buildings have been erected in this time, providing 226,552 sittings. In addition to this, 14 new buildings and 14 additions, providing 45,380 sittings, are under contract. . . .

"The number of lecture centres has been increased from 143 in 1904 to 178 in 1908, and the number of lectures delivered from 4,665 to 5,572. The attendance at these lectures has grown in proportion. . . . Jan. 4

"I regard the erection of the new municipal office building, which is part of the general scheme of extension of the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge, as one of the most important projects the City has ever undertaken. This building is to cost approximately $8,000,000, and when completed will house almost all of the City Departments. The various Departments which it has been decided to place in this building are to-day paying $453,593.46 annual rental. Not only will this rental be saved each year, but it is calculated that ample accommodation will be found in the building for many of the principal courts. It is too early to say just how large a saving will be accomplished, but it may be possible to care for so many of the courts that the construction of a new court house will be unnecessary. . . .

"The design selected is for a twenty-five-story building, surmounted by a tower ten stories in height. The total height of the building, including the tower, will be 559 feet, the third highest office building in the city. . . .

"More than two-thirds of the Corporate Stock authorized for the Department of Correction during this administration will go toward the construction of the penitentiary on Riker's Island. It will provide for 2,000 men and 500 women prisoners and will be the largest institution of its kind in this country. The concrete prison wall, twenty-eight feet high, will enclose nearly twenty acres, covering nearly all the north end of the original island. The architects spent a year in the study of the best designed and best conducted prisons of America and Europe, and it is believed that the result will represent the highest type of prison that the science of criminology has developed. Every provision for the keeping of discipline and health has been considered. . . .

"Riker's Island by its location assures to the penitentiary the most perfect hygiene conditions. The plan of the prison buildings will fully meet the two essential requirements of health and economic supervision and control. The City of New York will have, not only the largest, but the most perfect institution for the care and cure of criminals. . . .

"Before the close of the year 1909 it is expected that the great transatlantic lines will move from their present piers and be concentrated in the half mile of water-front extending south from West Twenty-third street on the North River, and known as the Chelsea section. The lines which will be accommodated within the section include the Cunard Steamship Company, the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, together with the lines of the International Mercantile Marine, viz., White Star, Red Star, American and Atlantic Transport lines. These rentals will increase the City's revenue 560,000 a year. . . .

"The Brooklyn water-front, from Twenty-eighth street to Thirty-sixth street, has been bought by the City and plans have been prepared for eight modern steamship piers which will be the largest in the City. . . .

"In conjunction with the Department of Highways, an exterior street has been begun between Sixty-fourth and Eighty-first streets, East River, a distance of 4,606 feet, of which 812 feet of the sea wall is complete and in use. This improvement will permit the use of the water-front between these points now cut off by the bluffs on the banks of the river, and outlets will be provided at various streets so as to make it readily accessible for vehicles. . . .

"About 8,800 feet of wall has been built around the easterly end of Riker's Island, forming a basin within which the Department of Street Cleaning is depositing the City's refuse. When this filling is completed about 150 acres of made land belonging to the City will be available for use.

"At North Brother Island about 1,900 feet of concrete retaining wall has been built, in the rear of which it is intended to deposit filling in a manner similar to that at Riker's Island. These four acres of made land are designed for the use of the Department of Health.

"A lease has been made to the Central Railroad of New Jersey of land under water easterly of Third avenue, in the Borough of The Bronx, for a freight terminal. At this end of the Harlem River are now clustered the freight yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, the Erie Railroad Company, the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, the Lehigh Valley

Railroad Company and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, part of which are located upon private property and part leased from the City. The [Dock] Department has recommended that Congress be asked to provide a navigable channel commencing at a point about opposite One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, Harlem River, and extending along the northerly side of Randalls Island. At the present time this passage is not navigable, but if this improvement could be effected, a shorter route will be furnished to vessels plying between the Hudson and Harlem Rivers and Long Island Sound, and the probabilities of disaster in the vicinity of Hell Gate would be lessened by affording vessels a direct instead of a circuitous route around Wards Island, where strong currents are encountered. This would also save a distance of three and one-half miles, to say nothing of lessening the congestion at the freight terminals in the lower part of Manhattan Island. . . .

"Eight recreation piers, with music, are open each summer. Last May the Cedar street promenade was opened to the public. This is the first attempt in this City to utilize the roofs of the sheds along the bulkheads for this purpose, and the experiment has proven a great success. This promenade extends along the northerly water front from Cedar to Albany street, and was much used during the hot summer nights by the residents in the lower section of the City.

"The total new wharfage room made during the past five years has been about 207,000 linear feet, or about thirty-five miles, increasing the area of the piers about three million square feet, including the construction of fifty-one piers and twenty-one new platforms, and the building of extensions for thirty piers. . . .

"During the past five years a very considerable addition has been made to the area of Riker's Island by utilizing the ash collections to as great an extent as possible. The original acreage of the island, when acquired by the City, was 89; to this 63 acres have been added, and 144 additional acres are to be made in this manner. The total future area of the island will be 295 acres, much of which will be used in connection with the new penitentiary. . . .

"The new [Police] Headquarters Building at Grand and Centre streets is nearly finished and will be occupied this year. . . .

"Five years of effort have brought the regulation of traffic from the experimental stage to a condition which calls for little improvement. In this important branch of police work New York has now surpassed the foreign cities which had been considered the leaders. It adds to the credit of the various men who have bettered the system when it is remembered that New York's topography makes its traffic regulation a very difficult problem. . . .

"Traffic regulations are now in force until midnight at Herald square, Times square, Columbus circle, and at the intersection of Seventy-second street, Broadway and Amsterdam avenue, where formerly the regulation of traffic ceased at 6.30 p. m. The importance of the regulation of traffic at these congested points at night is clearly shown by the number of requests for similar regulation which the Department receives from congested points further north. . . .

"The process of widening Fifth avenue, an improvement absolutely necessary to relieve congestion, has been slow, not because of legal or engineering phases, but because the administration has considered it only fair to give to the property owners and tenants of the avenue every reasonable opportunity to prepare for what may be, to some of them, a radical change. The avenue has been widened 15 feet between Fortieth and Forty-second streets, and the relief to traffic is so evident that steps should be taken this year to widen the roadway from Twenty-sixth street as far north as the present congestion exists. [The roadway of the rest of Fifth Ave. from 13th to 58th St. was similarly widened between Oct. 4, 1912, and Sept. 24, 1914.—Records of borough president's office. This was part of the plan of the City Improvement Commission.—See Ja, 1907.] . . .

"I respectfully suggest to your honorable body the adoption of an ordinance requiring taximeters to be tested by the City. Within a year it has become evident that the taximeter, with its supposedly exact measurement of distance and time, is a popular appendix of public vehicles. It is, however, as subject to error as any other mechanical device and should be inspected. . . .

"A system of test is used in some European cities and it seems time that New York adopted means to protect users of cabs from overcharge through design or accident. . . .

Jan. 4

"The office of Commissioner of Licenses has grown in importance since its establishment nearly five years ago. It supervises not only intelligence offices for domestic servants, but labor agencies, shipping agencies, stenographers' bureaus, agencies for supplying technical and clerical positions, theatrical agencies and nurses' registries. . . .

"The extortion and immorality complained of have been practically eliminated as a result of the strict system of inspection and regulation to which employment agencies are now subject. . . .

"Peonage, in so far as labor agents in New York City are responsible, has been generally eliminated, and the fact that complaints regarding it from various parts of the country have been greatly reduced is in large measure due to the strict supervision of the contract labor agencies here. The evils of the padrone system, so extensive a few years ago, have been reduced to a minimum. . . .

". . . From January 1, 1904, to January 1, 1908, plans were filed for 17,836 new tenements, containing 221,801 apartments, or accommodations for over 930,000 people. . . .

"An important phase of the Department's work is the structural alteration of the 80,000 or more tenements already in existence when the law went into operation, to give them in some measure a share in the benefits of the better lighting, ventilation and sanitation required for new buildings. . . .

"The establishment of the Board of Water Supply, the acquisition of the Staten Island and Thirty-ninth street ferries and the extension of the paid Fire Department into the Boroughs of Queens and Richmond have added largely to the work of the Municipal Civil Service Commission. . . .

"Among the more important changes in the examining department may be noted the holding of examinations for promotion once a year only, avoiding the expence and confusion of holding them whenever called for by the various departments; the establishment of a uniform system of efficiency records in all Departments of the City government; the requirement that candidates for promotion shall file application for examination; the establishment of a promotion bureau under the responsible charge of a designated Examiner; the system of renumbering the papers of candidates to prevent the Examiners who rate the papers from knowing the examination numbers; the absolute protection of examination papers unrated and in process of rating; the absolute verification of signatures and statements; the appointment of monitors from the non-competitive class allowing the employment of advanced students of the higher educational institutions; the refusing consideration of appeals which are not based on a reasonable charge of error, and the obtaining of information, in non-competitive examination, as to the candidates' fitness instead of relying upon the unverifiable statements of the candidates themselves. . . .

"The public has come to a better appreciation of the Civil Service Law and its exactions. Schools of instruction have been established in political headquarters and elsewhere and the opportunities for intelligent study of the qualifications of City employees grow continually. Several of the leading newspapers devote space every day to information in regard to pending examinations. . . .

"New York now has 7,222 acres of parks, or about three and two-fifths per cent. of its 209,218 acres. . . .

"Of the total park acreage, 253 acres were placed under the jurisdiction of the Park Department during the last five years. These include Chelsea Park, 58 acres added to Bronx Park; Kissena Park, Greenpoint, Amersfort, Highland and McLaughlin parks in the Borough of Brooklyn, and several small unnamed parks as well as desirable additions to parks already existing. . . .

"The first section of the new North Wing of the Metropolitan Museum of Art will be opened on January 4 by an exhibition of German contemporary art, sent here by a special commission officially appointed by the German Government. The new Central Wing, to accommodate the Hoentschel Collection and other collections of decorative art, will be finished during the early part of the year. . . .

"The annual numbers of submissions acted upon by the Art Commission has doubled during the last five years. . . .

"The Charter makes the Art Commission, in a manner, guardian of the existing works of art owned by the City, which comprise 425 portraits, sculptural objects and mural decorations. The collection of portraits dates from 1790, but until the investigation by 1909 Jan. 4 the Art Commission practically nothing was known as to the time and manner of their acquisition, and in many cases the artists were unknown. . . .

"So far as it has been in my power I have followed the policy declared in the last municipal campaign, that municipal operation of public utilities should be resorted to only when private ownership fails to render satisfactory service. It was this policy which resulted in taking over the Staten Island Ferry and the Thirty-ninth Street Ferry and the private water companies of Staten Island. In operating these ferries at a loss the City is carrying out one of its responsibilities to a part of its people. . . ."—Proc., Bd. of Ald. (1909), I: 18–219.

Feb. 6 Reginald Pelham Bolton writes concerning "Inwood Hill Park": "For 50 years the picturesque and beautiful Hill of Inwood, forming the northern extremity of Manhattan Island, has remained a terra incognita to the great majority of New Yorkers, and is almost as completely unknown to the officials of its various departments as it has been to the residents of the Borough of Manhattan. The few property owners, who, following the lead of the late William Thompson, built charming residences amid the leafy woods of the hillside of its Hudson River front, were as desirous of preserving its beauties as they were of maintaining their seclusion. During this long period, therefore, no public improvements of any kind were initiated or carried out upon or around Inwood Hill. The old Bolton Road, planned and laid out by the brothers John and Curtis Bolton in 1817, remained the only means of access to the summit, as indeed it is to-day, and the operation of that drive or portion of the same roadway which ran parallel with the Hudson, extending as far as the McCreery property, was never carried around the hill to meet the upper portion, as had been originally intended.

"A few extensions of sts were planned by property owners on the east side of the hill, and were drawn on maps which were used in the sub-division of the property of the late Isaac M. Dyckman. These included an avenue known as Prescott av, extending northwestward from Dyckman st and planned to follow a sinuous course through the woods, down the valley, which in Colonial times was known as 'The Clove,' to the bend of the old Spuyten Duyvil Creek at what is now known as 'Cold Spring Hollow.' . . . The scattered residents on the hill top and along its westerly slope provided their own road repairs, their own water supply, and their own public and private gas lighting. It thus came about, that in recent times the still undisturbed and wild character of much of the hill attracted the attention of the late Andrew H. Green, who realized its magnificent possibilities for public park property, and whose expressed opinion led to the recent widespread desire to secure a large part of its natural beauties, its scenic advantages and its historic associations, for public use and enjoyment.

"It is not inappropriate here to refer to the fact that the hill not only possesses the last remains of the wild woodlands which once covered Manhattan Island, but that within them are hidden the actual rock shelters which once formed the abodes of the original Manhattanite, from which were taken, only a few years ago, unmistakable evidences of Indian habitation, and around which may to-day be seen immense mounds of oyster and clam shells which formed the kitchen-middens of primeval man. When, therefore, interest began to be evoked in the subject of the Hudson Ter-Centennial Celebration, attention was drawn to the fact that within the confines of the Borough of Manhattan there still existed a priceless treasure of relics of bygone times and of the primeval inhabitants, which the great metropolis would feel it a duty to preserve. These were found to be directly associated with the advent of Henry Hudson, by reason of his conflict with the natives then resident in the Indian stronghold of Nip-nich-sen, which crowned the summit of Spuyten Duyvil hill, and, in every probability, also, with the natives who were then resident under the shelter of the overhanging cliffs of the east side of Inwood Hill.

"This interest has so far spread that a very general public demand has arisen for the acquisition by the city, of such of the lands of Inwood Hill as will preserve these invaluable remains of the past, as well as such of the scenic features of wild woodland, as shall preserve to all future generations a reminder of the original character of Manhattan Island. Certainly no more appropriate memorial of the great event of the discovery of this part of the world by Hudson could be found than the preservation in the form of a park of this beautiful locality. . . ."—Record and Guide, F 6, 1909. The commission appointed in 1908 (q.v., Ap 13) to prepare a new charter for New York City makes its report to the legislature. "The proposed charter contained many modifications from the one now in force. . . . It is much briefer in form, including only 70,000 words, while the former instrument contains half a million. The changes proposed are in general in the direction along which municipal government has moved in the last few years. The principle is followed of reducing the number of elective administrative officers and of putting into separate hands the power to appropriate and the power to spend money, and to concentrate power and responsibility in as few hands as possible. The commission proposed that the borough presidents . . . shall cease to have administrative functions and shall devote their entire time to the financial work on the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. The administrative work is to be given to the heads of departments, responsible to the Mayor and to bureaus, some of which are to be under the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and some under the various departments. The Board of Aldermen is to be supplanted by a council of thirty-nine members to serve without pay. Perhaps the most radical feature proposed is the abolition of the street cleaning department and the placing of the work of that department, as well as the work of repairing the streets, care of sewers and the like, which has been under the charge of the borough presidents, under a newly created department of street control. The powers of the Council are in many respects to be more limited than those possessed by the Board of Aldermen, although in some respects they are greater. The power to grant franchises is to rest exclusively in the hands of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, and the Council is to have extended ordinance-making authority. The keeping of the State accounts is greatly simplified. The office of coroner is abolished and many minor changes are made, among them the creation of a uniformed Superintendent of Police subject to removal by the Police Commissioner. Certain provisions of the proposed charter met with severe criticism, especially those relating to the abolition of the Board of Aldermen. No action was taken during the year toward its acceptance or rejection." It was referred to a legislative committee for investigation.—New International Year Book (1909), 485, 523. 8

July Mayor McClellan removes Police Commissioner Bingham from
1 office and appoints Wm F. Baker in his place. The removal causes a sensation in the city. "The action of the Mayor was based directly on Commissioner Bingham's refusal to dismiss two of his subordinates in office at the request of the Mayor. The disagreement arose originally, however, over the action of the Commissioner in refusing to remove from the Rogues' Gallery the picture of a boy who was declared to have never been indicted for crime, but who had several times been arrested by the police and discharged. Commissioner Bingham insisted that the retention of the picture in the gallery was justified, while Mayor McClellan, after a careful hearing, declared that it was not. In the course of the hearing it was charged by the Mayor that the subordinates of the Commissioner referred to above had made attempts to discredit Judge Gaynor, through whose efforts the original demand for the removal of the picture was made."—*N. 25 The great Hudson-Fulton celebration opens, with a naval parade led by the replicas of the "Half Moon" and the "Clermont." A column of war-ships, representing the United States, England, Germany, France, Italy, Netherlands, Argentine Republic, and Mexico, is anchored in the Hudson, and extends from 42d St. to Spuyten Duyvil, while 800 other vessels are anchored along the shores.

At 10.30 a. m., the "Half Moon," manned by Commander Lam representing Henry Hudson and Dutch sailors dressed in the costumes of Hudson's time, and the "Clermont," with the Rev. C. S. Bullock impersonating Robert Fulton, Miss Evelyn Bullock acting as Harriet Livingston, Fulton's fiancée, and others as Fulton's guests, were escorted from the Kill van Kull by a squadron consisting of torpedo boats, submarines, naval militia vessels, and other craft. During the morning and early afternoon, the flotilla manoeuvred along the northern shore of Staten Island and the Bay Ridge shore of Long Island, being welcomed at Stapleton by a Richmond committee and at Bay Ridge by a Brooklyn committee.

Meanwhile, the great merchant fleet, consisting of almost every type of vessel, was assembling in the Lower Bay. At about 1 p. m., the "Half Moon," in tow of the "Fred. B. Dalzell," and the "Clermont," under her own power, took their places at the head of the parade, and the whole procession, presenting an impressive spectacle, then steamed up the Hudson. When the line of warships was reached, the "Half Moon" and the "Clermont" turned to the east and proceeded between the ships and the Manhattan shore, while the rest of the parade turned to the west and continued between the ships and the Jersey shore, in order to sail around the war vessels. The "Half Moon" and the "Clermont" were saluted 1909 Sept. 25 as they passed the men-of-war, and they finally dropped anchor in front of the "water gate" and official landing which had been constructed at 110th St., amid the cheers of thousands, the booming of cannon, and the music of the band on the reviewing stand.

Hon. S. P. van Eeghen, president of the Netherlands Hudson-Fulton Commission, then formally presented the "Half Moon" to Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, president of the American committee, together with an engrossed and illuminated address and a book containing the names of the Netherlands commission and of the donors. Capt. Jacob W. Miller, chairman of the naval parade committee, next presented the "Clermont," and Dr. Jokichi Takamine, representing the Japanese residents of New York, announced the gift of 2,100 cherry trees from Japan to be planted along Riverside Drive. Gen Woodford made appropriate replies to all these addresses.

In the evening the war-fleet was illuminated, and there was an elaborate display of fire-works.—N. Y. World, S 26, 1909; Hudson-Fulton Celebration, 1909 (4th Ann. Rep. of Hudson-Fulton Celebration Com., 1910), I: 198–245. The naval parade is shown on Pl. 172, Vol. III, and the arrival of the "Half Moon" and the "Clermont" at the water gate appears on Pl. 173, Vol. III. A photographic panorama of Manhattan Island made from Woodcliff, N. J., at about this time is reproduced as Pl. 171-a, Vol. III.

The Hudson-Fulton celebration continued until Monday, Oct. 11, and was marked by numerous and brilliant festivities in the cities and towns along the Hudson, including parades, pageants, banquets, dedications, etc. Each borough of Greater New York held its own celebration. The principal other events connected with Manhattan Island or with the city as a whole were as follows: religious services on Sept. 26; the laying of the corner-stone of the Hudson memorial monument on Spuyten Duyvil Hill, the dedication of the Palisades Interstate Park, and an official reception to foreign delegates at the Metropolitan Opera House, on Sept. 27; an historical land parade and the unveiling of a tablet on the N. Y. U. building in Washington Square, in honour of seven public school teachers who taught under Dutch rule, on Sept. 28; an official banquet at the Hotel Astor, aeroplane flights over the harbour by Wilbur Wright—the first successful aeroplane flights in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island—and the dedication of a bust of Robert Fulton in the "Hall of Fame" of N. Y. U. and of tablets marking the site of Fort Amsterdam, the "first line of defence" on Washington Heights in 1776, a bastion of the old city wall, and the site of Fort Tryon, on Sept. 29; a military parade on Sept. 30; a naval parade up the Hudson from Spuyten Duyvil to Newburgh on Oct. 1; a series of festival parades by public school children, a naval fête at Columbia University, and a night carnival procession, on Oct. 2; a spectacular flight by Wilbur Wright from Governor's Island to Grant's Tomb and return and a banquet by the Pilgrim Society in honour of the British admirals on Oct. 4; and the unveiling of the Verrazzano monument in Battery Park on Oct. 6.—*N.
